ZUDORA

Story Appearing in the Leading Metropolitan Newspapers
Photoplay Showing at the Better Theatres Everywhere

Mr. Exhibitor:

Watch for sensational developments in the new episodes of "Zudora." The early episodes of this wonderful photoplay are constructed to lead up to some of the most remarkable pieces of acting in the history of motion pictures.

James Cruze, who is playing the leading masculine role in "Zudora," will be shown in a dual character, more powerful than that portrayed by Richard Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." Mr. Cruze will show a dual personality in episode #7, from then on playing the part of the hero and the part of the villain.

The portrayal of the hero will be one of the most sensational things in motion pictures. In this part, he will eclipse his best as "Jimmie Norton" in the "Million Dollar Mystery."

The new sensations in "Zudora" will come with such startling rapidity and such a multitude of thrills that the public will be keyed to the highest pitch of expectancy.

We do not want to keep all the good things to ourselves; hence, we are letting you know, a little in advance, just what to expect on "Zudora."

This picture is breaking all records everywhere, and we intend that it shall set a new mark for photo serials.

Yours very truly,

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORPORATION,

W. E. Shallenberger
Vice President.

Who Started It?

Why the price of admission should be raised by exhibitors is a question that is now agitating the whole trade. All kinds of picture manufacturers are being interviewed on the subject, and they all seem to agree that admission prices will have to go up, so that the exhibitor can shift part of his growing burden of expense onto the public.

Who started all this? Nobody on earth but Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in his "Straight from the Shoulder Talks" which appear every week in The Universal Weekly, a 40-page magazine brimful of interest and HELP to exhibitors! He said weeks ago that all manufacturers would have to follow the lead of the Universal, and now it has come to pass!

Why doesn't every exhibitor keep weeks and weeks ahead of time by studying the Universal Weekly every week and getting the benefit of Mr. Laemmle's experience and far-sightedness? Do you know that no matter whether you are using Universal films or not you are welcome to a three months free trial subscription to The Universal Weekly? Yes FREE! All you have to do is to send the name and address of your theatre to the Editor of The Universal Weekly, sixteen hundred Broadway, in New York City. Do it this minute!

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY NEWS

A page of vitally important news published by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York, for the interest of all exhibitors

WEEK OF JAN. 2nd NEW YORK CITY 1915

Do You Read The Universal Weekly?

If Not—Why Not?

If you are the type of Exhibitor who is keenly alive to every issue of the day in the Movie world, you evidently read the UNIVERSAL WEEKLY every week. If you don't read it, you are missing out on the biggest and best things in the Film business. The Universal Weekly is absolutely fearless and prints what other papers would hesitate about because of political situation that confronts them as regards their other advertisers. The Universal Weekly plays no favorites and tells the whole truth, without any mental quaking in the thought that advertising patronage might be lost through some seemingly undiplomatic statement. The truth hurts sometimes and that's why Film Trade Papers can't and won't print the whole news, inside facts, etc., that Exhibitors are keen to know. If you read but the one article each week, written by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., dealing with Exhibitors' problems in a straight from the shoulder way, you would be repaid fifty times over in the knowledge you would gain and the advantages that would be yours just from having the real inside dope from the biggest man in the business, and in advance of all other information from all other sources. Carl Laemmle is one man in the film business who isn't afraid to speak his mind and this information is invaluable to wide awake Exhibitors who are striving for real success in the picture business. Each week the Universal Weekly is crammed chock full of good things for Exhibitors. It is edited in an admirable way and Exhibitors everywhere, irrespective of whether they are using Universal Service or not can gain immeasurable benefits by reading this bristling publication. Thousands of Exhibitors all over America watch eagerly each week for the arrival of the Universal Weekly. To thousands the Universal Weekly is a veritable bible, because it speaks the truth without fear or favor. If you are not getting a copy every week, you can be placed on the mailing list for 3 months free. Even if you had to pay $25.00 per year it would be dirt cheap, for the immense number of tips and valuable pieces of information you receive in the Universal Weekly each week.

To Exhibitors—

If you desire to receive the Universal Weekly free for three months send in your name and address to The EDITOR of Universal Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York, and we will place you on the list gratis for 3 months.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAMS FOR 1915 WILL LEAD THE WORLD

Vast Expenditures for Scenarios Players, etc. The Reason.

The year of 1915 will be a year of unending surprises for Universal Exhibitors, for we have plans under way, plus pictures stocked and to be programmed that will make Universal Service the biggest thing in history.

We predict that before 1915 ends, there will be thousands of Exhibitors who are now hesitating about Universal Service who will be clamoring for it.

To those we wish to issue this timely warning. Better get in line now at the beginning of the year and start the new year right, and insure your business and profits for 1915. Better get set immediately so that at the end of 1915 you can say to yourself: "Well, I pulled a master stroke by tying up to Universal Service. . . . I am glad I didn't hesitate, but went to it right." Thousands of Exhibitors who are now using split service will be using Universal Service exclusively before 1915 has passed. Better be one of them. You have the opportunity before you now.

MARY FULLER FEATURED IN "MY LADY HIGH AND MIGHTY"--2 REEL VICTOR--JAN. 11th

A PICTURE that climaxes the scores of successes in which little Mary Fuller has made herself the beloved idol of thousands of fans all over the world. No picture in which Mary Fuller has ever played allows her more freedom and opportunity of expression than does this magnificent two-reel Victor, released January 11th, 1915. The settings are superb, action splendid; without a single doubt the best little Mary has ever appeared. Book it at once.

OTHER BIG UNIVERSAL FEATURES FOR WEEK OF JANUARY 2nd

"WHAT a Woman Will Do," with Cleo Madison and Joe King is the Gold Seal feature for January 12. This is the first release in which Miss Madison has appeared since "The Trey O' Hearts," and she is a welcome addition to the Gold Seal regular company. Edward Sloman plays an important part.

Pauline Bush appears in one of her best roles in "The Small Town Girl." It has a very unusual ending and it keeps you guessing right up to the very last foot just how it is coming out. It is a three-reel masterpiece, and it requires just three thousand feet to show the story adequately. It is released on January 17 under the Rex brand. William Clifford and Marie Walcamp appear in a strike story on January 16 called "The Governor Maker," which is quite different from their usual Jungle plays, but contains just as daring acting. It is a 101 Bison. The [illegible] Imp of January 15 is a very interesting detective drama called "Gentlemen of Art" [illegible] rio for which was written by Stuart Paton. It is the twentieth two-reeler which he has written since January 1st a year ago. The Sterling has also a one-reel feature comedy, "Those German Bowlers," on the program for January 14. All in all, it is another of the crackerjack weekly bills which the Universal is planning for the rest of the year.

FANTASMA—IS A GOLD MINE

Hanlon Bros.' Great Feast of Fun and Fairyland Beauty—More Gorgeous Than Ever

Featuring George Hanlon, Jr., as the Clown

Released Saturday, December 19th, through the General Film Co., in 5 parts

Fantasma, the most famous spectacle and the greatest moneymaker ever produced by the celebrated Hanlon Brothers, makes even a better fantasy in the film than on the stage where it has been popular for 30 years. George Hanlon, of the famed family of clown and pantomimists, appears in his original role of Pico, the drollest clown that was ever created. W. T. Carleton, the greatest Mephisto on the American stage, plays Zamaliel, prince of Darkness and Evil, while George Schrode and William Ruge, celebrated in these parts, make the Imps a devilish pair. The lovely Marie La Manna graces the Princess role with fairylike charm.

For over thirty years Fantasma has fascinated all from the child to the grandfather with its wonderful blending of amusement and beauty, romance and fairyfolk, visualized as only the fancy of youth can picture.

The originators of this famous spectacle, Hanlon Brothers, were known over two continents as the greatest inventors of stage tricks, effects and illusions which they always used with bewildering beauty of effect. The Edison Company has preserved all the charm and atmosphere of the original production, adding new and surprisingly beautiful photographic effects never possible on the stage. Funniness, mystery, weird experiences, mystifying illusions, and an unending panorama of gorgeous scenes in Fairyland are pictured with brilliant photography remarkable for color treatment.

Prince Arthur enraptured with the lovely Princess Lena wins her as his betrothed. But such bliss is not long for him, for Zamaliel, monarch of the infernal regions, sets his covetous eye upon the fair princess. Then ensues a mighty battle between the Prince of Darkness and Fantasma, all powerful Queen of Good and Light, who watches ever over the lovers. The Princess, torn from her lover, is carried to the lower regions and then under the sea, where weird and terrible trials beset her. The Prince is ever accompanied by the droll Pico in his wanderings in search for Lena and they undergo trials and wonderful experiences. The lovers, reunited, sail away at last on the Sea of Happiness—one of the most exquisite and original effects ever introduced into photography.

Fantasma, in thirty years, made ten millions gross. Book this greatest of features and cash in on its undying popularity and appeal.

Robert Conness as "Douglas Winthrop" figures as the man wrapped up in business enterprises.
Mable Trunnelle—"The Young Mrs. Winthrop"—represents the wife and mother slighting and neglecting home ties and duties for social acclaim. The climax is reached when both husband and wife are hastily called home to the bedside of their child who has died. Each accuses the other of shameful neglect of home. A divorce is threatened, but better counsels prevail and the home becomes once more first and social ties second in their estimation. It is based on Howard Bronson's noted play, "The Young Mrs. Winthrop."

Facts and Comments

A REPRESENTATIVE of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD who has lately returned from a trip to Ohio reports the exhibitors of that state arrayed solidly against the brand of official censorship now being dealt out by the members of the board. Indeed, with infinitesimal exceptions exhibitors are strongly against any and every kind of legalized censorship. The feeling against censorship is, to say the least, equally strong among exchange men. The exchange men are positively unanimous against censorship. We are most heartily in favor of the movement for a repeal of this pernicious law. From what we can learn the press of Ohio and public opinion as reflected by the press are against censorship. The appeal to public opinion by the exhibitors and the motion picture interests generally was the wisest move in the whole campaign against censorship and it may well be imitated by the leagues of other states.

THE motion picture theaters on Broadway have as far as we know never been given to loud and lurid lobby display. Only one has used "regular paper" occasionally. The other two, and by far the most prominent and successful ones, have advertised in a refined way, using artistic photographs or artistic sketches in appropriate frames. We are immensely pleased to hear that one of the Fourteenth Street theaters has changed its policy of lurid displays advertising nothing but crime and prisons and the underworld. The owners of the theater in question have keen commercial instincts and they found that daubing up the front with leprous looking sheets of huge proportions was in the last analysis bad business; hence the pleasing change. A motion picture theatre which depends upon "paper" mainly and upon a gigantic sign displaying the legend "5 Cents" is in seven cases out of ten on its last legs.

WE are glad to give space to the claim of the New Jersey Health Board of having originated the use of motion pictures for preaching progressive hygiene. New York, it seems, borrowed both the idea and the practise from New Jersey, which began its campaign back in 1912. The New Jersey Board uses lectures in connection with this work. The lecturer speaks upon the picture as it is being projected upon the screen and calls attention to those points which are to be impressed upon the audience.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD was the first to call attention to the fact that under the language of the war-tax act only "theaters" are required to pay the graduated tax set forth in the provisions of the law. The law says that all other places of amusement are to pay a uniform tax of ten dollars. An intelligent and progressive exhibitor in Syracuse made his return to the collector of internal revenue as the owner of a place of amusement. When he offered to pay his ten dollars the representative of the collector refused to accept the money and required our friend to make out a return as the owner of a theater. In writing to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD he says, quite correctly we think, "that the acting commissioner at Washington of internal revenue is not authority on the definition of the word 'theater,' nor has he any power under the law to say what constitutes a theater." Our correspondent cites Webster's definition of a theater as a "house for the exhibition of dramatic performances as tragedies, comedies and farces, comprehending the stage pit, boxes, balconies and galleries." Our correspondent points out that he is engaged in the business of giving public exhibitions of moving pictures in a place "having no stage, boxes, balconies, galleries, and is therefore taxable only under Section 8 of the war-tax law. There may be picture houses having a stage and all the other essentials set out in Webster's definition, but wherever these are lacking no tax under the provision of the theatrical section ought to be exacted. Here is a fine opportunity for the National League to render a signal service to exhibitors all over the country by getting an authoritative ruling on the subject.

The League has proven its usefulness in the past, especially in connection with the War Tax. Whatever may be the result of its effort to get a definite construction of the exhibitors' status under the War Tax Act, the mere effort will prove that the officials of the League are wide awake and seize every opportunity to guard and promote the interest of the exhibitor. There is no better and surely no quicker way to gain recruits for the League and to strengthen the feeling of solidarity all through the country.

"Over Their Heads"

By W. Stephen Bush.

EVER since I have been connected with motion pictures the wailing chorus of "Don't Shoot Over Their Heads" has assailed my ears. In the early days of the industry it was deemed heresy of the worst and most harmful kind to assume that the motion picture was destined to be more than a sort of freaky amusement for what preachers and newspapers are wont to describe as the poor and lowly. Never will I forget the explosive scorn of a distinguished director for a distinguished producer when I diffidently enough ventured the opinion that eventually the screen would wrestle successfully with the highest problems of the drama. My mild suggestion that Sophocles and Shakespeare were susceptible of screen translation provoked an ill-disguised suspicion as to my sanity. A little later (in the language of approved subtitles) I listened with becoming humility to many prominent film men who tried to make it clear to my slow and halting intelligence that the "Western" was the Alpha and Omega of motion pictures. I heard it freely predicted that, with a decline of "Westerns," the motion picture itself would decline.

One would think that, in view of the wonderful progress we have made, the chorus of "Don't Shoot Over Their Heads" would subside or at least diminish in volume. Alas, only by locking oneself up in the editorial sanctum and dreaming beautiful millennial dreams can such a hopeful belief be maintained. The least contact with actualities wipes it out of being. As the breath of an infant blows bubbles back into thin air the optimism of the editor dissolves in the rude atmosphere of routine and reality. Yes, we have made some progress, we have mounted one or two steps of the ladder leading to the top, but the most ambitious climber is still distracted by the owls' serenade: "Don't Shoot Over Their Heads."

Here is just one consoling thought: If somebody in the past had not begun "to shoot over the heads" of the half-grown youths who used to howl on the front benches the motion picture would today be more of a memory than a great living, throbbing industry closely allied to Art. If we "shoot over their heads" today we do have to aim a little higher than yesterday. Today nobody is above going to a motion picture theater. There are motion picture houses both here and elsewhere with almost a preponderance of high class patronage. I know of more than one such place the manager of which points with pride to his automobile "trade." The men that joined in this chorus of "Don't Shoot Over Their Heads" could not by any possibility have foreseen the automobile waiting for the return of its occupants from a motion picture theater. The dreamers and the visionaries saw them plainly enough.

"The practical men," the men exulting in their "common sense," would have ridiculed the prophecy that a motion picture house on Broadway, without a trace of vaudeville or other "outside attraction," would pay, and pay extravagantly well. Counting the nickels and dimes after the show, smugly satisfied with their own little profits and never for an instant looking beyond the wider scope and the higher destiny of the motion picture only moved their coarse ridicule and made them repeat their narrow though firm belief that the "pictures" were only for the "cheap people."

Look over the really great productions of the past three or four years and you will discover the fact that the pictures which yielded the largest returns and which made the most converts for the motion picture were the productions which aimed high and which, according to the dismal croak of the "pull-backs" in the Swamp of Sneers, were most emphatically "over their heads." Who can estimate the numbers that saw "Quo Vadis?" and "Dante's Inferno" and "Cabiria" and "The Last Days of Pompeii?" Who will maintain that only the wealthy and the highly educated rushed to witness these plays of the screen? We know that the contrary is true. The masses of the plain people made the financial success of these masterpieces possible. Neither as a theme nor as a spectacle was any of these superb productions above the heads of the public.

The fact that these films offered wonderful opportunities to the people to learn something of the past and to study the civilization of great nations really constituted one of the greatest merits and most powerful attractions of these masterpieces. There are producers, and I am happy to say many of them, who glory in their opportunities to make the screen the world's first and foremost teacher.

If we take the literal meaning of the word "school"—leisure, the opportunity to learn—was there ever in the history of mankind a greater, a better, a more effective, a more attractive school than the motion picture theater? Even the unholy crowd of cheap directors who distort life instead of portraying it cannot wholly obscure the educative powers of the screen. They, and men of their ilk, themselves painfully limited in their mental movements, may set up the shout "Don't Shoot Over Their Heads," but the true friends of the motion picture, to whom the screen has some of the attributes of an altar by reason of its service to humanity, will try for loftier heights and ever nobler aims. As I walk along Broadway watching such theaters as the Vitagraph and the Strand discharging their patrons I become pleasantly aware of the fact that it would be pretty hard "to shoot over their heads." There is not a city in the Union which cannot show the same or a very similar class of regular patrons of motion picture theaters.

Upon these theaters and upon the continued patronage of these theaters depends the existence of the motion picture as a profitable art and industry. There is not the remotest danger that we will ever "shoot over the heads" of these patrons. The difficulty I anticipate will be quite the other way. Those of us who watch the growth at the top rather than the progress of distributing cheap stuff as widely as possible are thoroughly aware of the fact that there is plenty of room around the top. The greatest problem of the exhibitor today is to find the film which will stand the test of the profitable audience, there is no trouble at all about finding the films that very obviously do not "shoot over their heads."

Time was when the cheap men with cheap ideas had an influence in the industry which was altogether out tof proportion to their merits. This time is passing away with the swiftness of water running down a hill. The power and the profits of the industry are destined to pass and are even now passing into the hands of men who strike at the highest possible aims in quality of plot and acting and photography and in all the essentials which go to make the high class motion picture.

The distinction between the stereotyped reel which is more like a spasm or an incoherent dream and the production of actual merit and genuine entertaining value is appreciated by the public more than ever before in the history of the motion picture.

Nineteen-Fifteen

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THOSE who have solved the Hamlet riddle, "I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going but such as wink, and will not use them," can easily determine the way moving pictures are going. It is not to be expected of those who wink and will not use their eyes. The course seems straight enough, now that we can look back upon it. The new art began with mere pictured motion—hence its name—and rose by gradual ascent to intelligent action. Almost as a baby grows, each stage of development can be traced up to the present stage of mimicry.

The beginning was simply a recognition by many minds that rapidity of presentation could be made to simulate motion, an effect easily traceable to a cause and brought into use by inventive faculties taking advantage of natural forces. A demand far exceeding the supply furnished the incentive to rapid development. The baby grew stronger and better that he was well nurtured, and those who nursed him benefited enormously by the power he developed of attracting nickels and dimes as a magnet does iron filings.

It came to be decided by those conservative minds which impose their own limitations upon growth that one thousand feet was the extreme limit of a motion-picture film, for reasons which are yet advanced by those inclined to stick to what has been demonstrated to their comprehension. I was regarded as visionary, if not worse, for predicting the five-reel photodrama, so I described it as a vision, and, later on, pictured "photopera," full sized screen stories to grand organ or grand orchestra music composed expressly for it. That has not arrived, but it seems to be on its way. Years after committing to print these visions of the future, I found that I had only shared a general conception somewhat cautious about expressing itself. Realizing, therefore, that anything I may now say is but part of unvoiced general opinion, I can go ahead with a certain degree of security and predict a much higher form of screen visualization than any now shown, though my ideals are not far removed from those of many years ago.

The ten-reel photodrama—approximating ten reels—has already appeared, and is but an advance agent of many others of the kind to follow. For lack of a better name in our scant vocabulary, let us call it "Photopera." There is much to be said for and against Photopera, but, to my way of thinking, its evolution will be a slower one than that of the Five-Reel Feature for very simple reasons. The latter is at present depending largely upon adaptation from stage plays and novels, and those who do the adapting know all too well that few such sources of supply contain enough material of intense interest to fill more than two or three reels. The greater part of five-reel features now making a loud splash in publicity are deserts of weary continuity scenes, with here and there an oasis of real live interest.

Scarcely a week passes that I do not view a two-reel subject, a genuine moving picture of vital interest, interpreted by performers comparatively unknown in theatrical circles, yet of greater story value than many of the much-heralded features, but do not you who are opposed to innovation reason falsely from such premises. There is a fitness of subject to its manner of expression in the smaller releases which can be employed in the larger ones when we grow up to them. We are now approaching an argument against the ten-reel Photopera. There is little to be found in literature and stage plays for adaptation that can be counted on to hold audiences all over the country through a long performance. The subject of Ten-Reel Photopera will have to be proportionately large and be handled accordingly.

There will be ten-reel features, most of them adaptations, just as there have been five-reel features, depending upon some reflected greatness, real or imagined, during the year to come, and it would not be surprising if some of them brought enormous profits, but the supreme development will be a grand play, to appropriately grand music, for the full time of an afternoon or evening entertainment, Photopera. If it should contain a great theme of tremendous opportunity, treated with skill and scenic splendor, the music may consist of appropriate selections and enduring success be the producer's reward, but original music would be better.

Why should not that success be clinched, as it is in grand opera, with music especially composed for the photopera? Grand opera companies, because of high-priced artists, because of limited number of performances, because of inadequate auditoriums, because of the cost per ticket to patrons, are limited to a brief season in big centers. Not so with photopera. The initial cost would not bother any producer now engaged in making five-reel adaptations, even if an author's royalty be included, and in order to cover the cost of musical composition the same arrangement as that with the author could be reached with ambitious young musicians of creative talent, after the unaccompanied play's merit had been demonstrated in private showing.

As the returns from such a venture—they are already beyond mere speculation. It would not take any live producer of either stage plays or of photodramas long to estimate their box office receipts in the event of decided success. I hope I am still within the confines of that general opinion, which possesses remarkable hindsight, when I venture the assertion that one successful photopera, placed with skill throughout the length and breadth of this country, would make the fortunes of all concerned in its production and exploitation.

Visionary? Well, we have an abundance of practical gentlemen who cannot think beyond their immediate requirements or see beyond their circle of activity. It is a relief to meet the few who are capable of conceiving ideals. Some one has described the practical man as a rational being who loses his temper when called upon to reason. He is not that bad, but he has a tendency to range himself on the safe side—what has been done can be done—and to resent any new mood of thought and feeling as an intrusion on his peace of mind. Let us be visionary at the dawn of a new year, for there can be nothing new created that is not visioned in the mind of a creator.

Ten-reel photodramas thus far successfully shown have depended largely upon splendor of treatment—the subject matter has been subordinated to its medium, and one view of them was enough. The ten-reel photodrama of great success in the future will be worth seeing again and again, not only for its impressive treatment, but for its intense scenes and for the vital theme that endows it with a soul that cannot but survive as long as the theme is vital. It will come as surely as there is progress. "None need eyes to direct them like those who do not use them."

"In arts must one thing, then another, shine Until they win their full development."

Striking At Censorship

The Campaign for Repeal in Ohio Vigorously Assisted by National Board—Good Prospects in Pennsylvania.

JACOB WILLIAM BINDER and Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Censorship, have just returned from an extended trip through the state of Ohio, where they had gone to work for the repeal of the censorship law which is now on the statute books of the state.

To a representative of the Moving Picture World, who saw him at the offices of the National Board just after his return, Mr. Binder declared that the early repeal of the law seemed to him a moral certainty. Mr. Binder and Dr. Cocks called upon the next Governor of Ohio, Frank B. Willis, and were most courteously received by him. Mr. Willis declared his belief that the methods of the National Board would secure the moral protection of the people of Ohio better than the operation of the present law. The Governor and the legislature of Ohio are of the same political faith.

One of the issues in the campaign which resulted in the election of Mr. Willis was the abolition of useless state offices and commissions. The Ohio Board of Censors of Motion Pictures is, according to the best authority, slated for an early exit from the official life of the state. Not only will the members of the Board find their occupation as censors gone but legalized censorship will likewise become a thing of the past.

Whatever censorship may follow will not be of the legalized but rather of the voluntary variety. A plan has been devised establishing small voluntary bodies patterned on the New York system and these censors will be located in the same cities where the principal exchanges are situated namely in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus and possibly Springfield. The censoring committees will be composed of from three to five public-spirited citizens who will serve entirely without pay. These committees will be in constant close touch with the National Board. While they reserve the right to use their own individual judgment whenever they see fit they will be in very great measure guided by the advice and the decisions of the National Board of Censorship. In other words the situation in the cities named will be quite similar to the conditions in other cities where the work of the Natonal Board is regarded as authoritative in the way of expressing public sentiment. Thus the question of passing judgment on the moral aspect of a picture is placed in the forum of public opinion and is no longer the subject of individual whims which may be enforced by virtue of legal process. It is reported that the repeal of the present obnoxious and draconic law will be incorporated into the legislative program of the party which will control both houses of the legislature.

Dr. Cocks made addresses before a large number of civic and religious bodies, explaining to them the workings of the National Board of Censorship and urging them to co-operate by giving their hearty and undivided support for the repeal of the present law and for the substitution of an enlightened voluntary system which rested entirely on sound public opinion. He contended that the performances of the Board in the past had clearly demonstrated the fairness and the feasibility of the methods employed. Wherever Dr. Cocks spoke he was listened to with the utmost attention and all gave him earnest assurances of co-operation.

Mr. Binder said that from his own observation and from knowledge which came to him from reliable sources the present law in Ohio is objectionable to every branch of the motion picture industry. On his way to Ohio he and Dr. Cocks spent a few days in Pennsylvania. He declared that the sentiment for a repeal of the censorship law in the Keystone state was absolutely unanimous among the exhibitors. It is stated in the public press that Senator Boies Penrose, who was elected by popular vote and who received an overwhelming majority, is opposed to the censorship law. The claim is made by many men prominent in political life in Pennsylvania that one of the censors now in office was a member of the legislature which enacted the obnoxious law and was therefore ineligible for the position he now holds.

KRITERION MOVES TO MECCA BUILDING.

The Kriterion Program, which has occupied offices in the Candler Building, 42d street, New York, has moved to new quarters in the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway. Offices have been fitted up on the sixth floor of that building for the accommodation of Kriterion and all facilities, including an excellent projection room, will be available.

Kane Back From Trip

Discovers New Idea Worked Out in Washington Picture Theater—Sees Progress in Other Cities.

"OH! yes," said Arthur S. Kane, Assistant General Manager of the World Film Corporation, who has just returned from a trip to the South, "there is something new under the sun. Think of a 'grind' show, on a busy thoroughfare of a big city having a regular starting time for each performance and getting the public to come at that time. Of course, this would not be remarkable in the case of a large house giving shows two hours or more in length, but this is a comparatively small theater and the performances are one hour and fifteen minutes apart.

"The man who has worked this transformation, many times heretofore declared impossible, is Mr. Crandall, of Crandall's Theater, 9th and E streets, N. W., Washington, D. C. The house seats about 500 and is at the very apex of Washington's picture row. With the advent and enormous popularity of the long subject, it became a serious problem with Mr. Crandall in a house of this size doing a bang-up business to have each seat playing to money at all times. Those who had come in on the last two or three reels of a five-reel subject, would sit through the same reels at the next performance, thus digging an appreciable hole in the possible receipts. Mr. Crandall was out for maximum efficiency in every department. After a great deal of study and against the advice of all, he inaugurated running his show by schedule and advertising the fact.

"Mr. Crandall's house record under the old system was considered unassailable. It was regarded absolutely impossible to get in more money at the same prices in one day's showing. Although in effect only a few weeks, this house record has already been broken by $60, demonstrating to Mr. Crandall's satisfaction that the schedule system is a success. Similar good results have been apparent on other days.

"A small card advertising Crandall's Theater is given out. Under the house name and street address, 'Washington's most exclusive photoplay house,' is stated: 'Over you will find schedule for all our shows.' On the reverse side the time for each performance is given in detail as: 11 a. m. to 12.15 p. m.; 12.15 p. m. to 1.30 p. m.; 1.30 p. m. to 2.45 p. m., and so on.

" 'Sunday—every hour on the hour.'

" 'All shows run continuously from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m.'

"An illuminated clock face within the theater shows that Mr. Crandall's business moves like a machine; performances ending on the dot. He also has made provision for the dilatoriness of human nature, by allowing three minutes past the advertised time for the starting of a performance.

"The house is a shallow and broad one, and a rather high speed in projection is used without seriously impairing the results.

"In Atlanta I found an unusual number of capable film exchange managers for a city of that size. They are a classy crowd. Take Sawin, Stahler, Marintette, Bromberg, Allison, Simpson, Buchanan, Brandon, Redfield, Anderson, Hyman, Hall and others, and you will have trouble finding equal total efficiency in any city in the country. Ralph Debruler, manager of the Montgomery Theater, Atlanta, also is a man who has a great following among the exhibitors.

"In New Orleans, contemporary with my visit, but not due in any way to it, Herman Fichtenberg arranged with our branch manager, K. A. Bugbee, to increase the time on each World Film attraction for showing on Canal street, due to their popularity and the demand of his patrons. F. M. Sanford, Dallas Manager, signed contracts with E. H. Hulsey for several days on each of our attractions in his beautiful Queen Theaters in Dallas, Houston and Galveston. Mr. Hulsey evidently is discounting the hard times talk, for he is just taking over another large house in Dallas."

Mr. Kane also visited Ardmore and Oklahoma City, Okla., St. Louis and Pittsburgh on his return trip. The swing around this short circle, Mr. Kane says, has completed his familiarity with practically all film exchange points in the United States, as he has at various times transacted film business in all the important rental centers with the exception of those in California.

WIL REX IN NEW YORK.

Wil Rex returned some time ago from the Pacific Coast, where he has been playing in farce-comedies for different Mutual and Universal companies. Rex is undecided whether he will continue in the film game or go on the stage. He has had several offers from various managers, and he is not yet ready to announce his plans for the future. It is expected, however, that he will soon make known his new affiliations.

Little Mary Remains With Famous Players

Formal Announcement by the Popular Actress Sets at Rest Many Rumors as to Her Future Appearances.

IN the last issue of the Moving Picture World there was a denial of the reports that Miss Mary Pickford had closed a contract which meant her departure from the studios of the Famous Players Film Company. Three trade papers had made the definite announcement that she had done so. The film district for the past three months has been filled with rumors that Miss Pickford had one with first this company and then with that. The figures quoted were far and away above any sum heretofore paid to any one connected with the moving picture industry in any capacity. That Miss Pickford has been the recipient of offers that seem unbelievable is a fact. One of these was believed to approximate four thousand dollars a week. It was not accepted. There were others, of sums less than the one quoted, of course, but nevertheless from old-time companies, and sufficient in magnitude to testify to the regard in which this remarkably popular actress is held by the motion picture public.

Miss Mary Pickford.

We are now told, and on authority which is authority, that Miss Pickford has signed papers with the Famous Players that will insure her appearance in the pictures of this company for a long time to come. The length of the contract is not stated, but it is said to be a permanent agreement, running over a period of several years.

Miss Pickford has had a most interesting career on the screen and on the stage. She played in David Belasco's productions as a child. Her first screen appearance was with the Biograph Company, where she was successful from the beginning. Later she accepted an offer from Carl Laemmle, and was seen in many Imp pictures. Again she returned to the Biograph Company, where she remained until she accepted the flattering offer of David Belasco to appear in the stage production of "A Good Little Devil." This was for the season of 1912-13. In the early summer of 1913 Miss Pickford portrayed her stage role of Juliet in a screen adaptation of "A Good Little Devil" at the studios of the Famous Players. She has been with the Twenty-sixth street organization ever since. Her reputation and her work have steadily advanced. From all that may be gathered she has been happy in her surroundings, and it is this consideration which undoubtedly exercised a strong influence in determining her course for the immediate years to come.

In a formal announcement Miss Pickford said:

"I am very thankful for the numerous and flattering offers recently extended to me, but I sincerely believe that I cannot conscientiously consider any other course than to remain with the Famous Players Film Company. The high artistic standard of this company and its constant efforts to elevate and dignify the motion picture place it conspicuously in a position of being the most serious film producing company in the world.

"The plans the Famous Players have made for the future even transcend the importance and distinction of its past achievements, and I am certain that my continued association with this company will provide greater opportunities for distinctive film creations than could be offered by any other factor in the film world. I owe the public, who have so splendidly supported and encouraged me throughout my entire career, careful consideration of this important point, and I feel that in extending my affiliation with the Famous Players, I can best repay, in some small measure, the thoughtful regard that the public has so often demonstrated for the higher element of film offerings.

"I am grateful to Messrs. Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter, officers of the Famous Players Film Company, for all they have done for me toward the best selection and presentation of my plays, and I know they represent, in the highest degree, the spirit of advancement that permeates the art of the photoplay."

Miss Pickford will leave New York for the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players about the first of the year, where she will remain for the winter and spring. She will be under the direction of James Kirkwood, who for nearly a year has produced the subjects in which Miss Pickford has been featured. Some of her most successful pictures have been made on the coast, among these being "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Hearts Adrift."

AN unusually interesting series of motion pictures of the United States Navy taken at Newport, Rhode Island, has just been completed by the Lubin Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, and presented to Secretary of the Navy Daniels by Siegmund Lubin. With the entire country interested in the men and ships of the navy, as the result of the probe being made by the house committee on naval affairs in Washington, these pictures have a special significance just now.

These special reels will be shown in the navy department and later will be sent to the naval section at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, where the public will have an opportunity of seeing the excellent work being done by the officers and men of the United States Navy.

Perhaps the most striking of the pictures are the maneuvres of the torpedo boat destroyer flotilla—the type of warcraft that Major Goethals of Panama has asked for to prevent English and other warships from violating neutrality laws off the canal. These boats are the fastest in the navy and the Lubin pictures show them racing to sea, making 33 knots an hour, and how they would attack an enemy with guns and torpedoes. Incidentally the commander of the fleet demonstrated for the camera men how the fleet can race at high speed in close formation without a bit of smoke coming from any smokestack and then at a signal dense, impenetrable smoke is fired from every smokestack on every boat forming an immense curtain which would completely screen the home fleet from an attacking fleet.

No better pictures of the loading and firing of torpedoes have ever been taken and one gets an excellent idea of the frightful damage these weapons of warfare do when they are shot at a high rate of speed into the sea. The entire course of the flight of a torpedo is shown from the time it leaves the torpedo gun until it strikes the object at which it was aimed.

At the Government's training station the camera men secured pictures that illustrate in detail how Uncle Sam supplies his ships with sailors. All sorts and conditions of boys are sent there from every section of the country and the system by which the Government takes these boys and within a short space of time makes men and sailors of them is not only most instructive but a tribute to the Navy Department as well. These pictures contain the famous exhibition drills and sham battles that the Government stages every summer at Newport.

In order to officially record the work done by the coast artillery at Newport in submarine mine work the Lubin men secured pictures showing how the army backs up the navy in defensive work. These include the loading of the big mines and how they are submerged and fired at targets towed on the surface of the water. From these pictures one may easily understand how little chance a ship has when a mine is fired beneath it.

The Lubin men secured pictures of various interesting phases of naval activities at the naval torpedo station on submarines, cruisers and battleships. These together with pictures taken at navy yards in different parts of the country illustrate thoroughly the work being done by the officers and men of the United States Navy.

The Lubin Company will keep a set of these pictures to place in a big vault in which is kept records of important personalities and events of national importance.

Fire Prevention and Efficiency

A Trip Through the Biograph Studio Demonstrates That the Combination Is Attainable.

SMALL wonder that when two hundred members of the American Society of Civil Engineers recently inspected the offices, studio and laboratory of the Biograph Company in the Bronx they declared the establishment a marvel of efficiency; or, again, that the Fire Department of New York City should apply to the plant the classification of standard. It is said that in the conception and erection of the group of buildings on the hill between One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street and One Hundred and Seventy-sixth street, architects had little to do; it is plainly to be seen, even by a layman, that the cohesive, comprehensive whole is the creation of an engineer—an engineer with an intimate knowledge of the requirements of the film industry of his day and a keen perception of the coming greater importance of the business. It is no trade secret that the unusual combination of professional skill and trade experience lay within the ownership of the Biograph.

The writer on a recent afternoon was afforded an unusual opportunity of examining the precautions taken by the Biograph Company to insure the permanency of its structure as well as the great number of agencies devised and applied for the improvement of its mechanical facilities. Through the courtesy and under the guidance of an official he was shown through the four buildings comprising the Biograph establishment. Two of the structures, the laboratory and electrical plant, are distinct. The two others, the administration building and the studios, are joined by a fireproofed bridge. The administration building is of reinforced concrete and the studio of brick and steel. Even the doors are all steel; one does not discover this fact, though, until he touches them.

In the main building on One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street, besides the executive offices, are the negative cutting room, the projection room, an unusually good one, about 40 by 20 in size and containing two machines; the scenario department, ample and with fine light; the dining-room, overhead, about 40 by 40, seating at one time ninety-six persons, and supplied by an up-to-date kitchen.

On the upper floor of the studio building is the daylight studio, 80 by 120 feet in dimensions. In warm weather the humidity is removed by air pumped up from the ice machine in the basement. On the floor below are the dressing rooms. A long hall divides the quarters of the men from those of the women. Accommodations are provided for 500 persons. The costumes are seemingly numberless—of every style and every period—yet by a system of card indexing those in charge can place a hand on any garment desired. The de luxe tiled bathrooms contain hot and cold water and needle and shower baths. There are five hundred individual steel lockers. This floor, filled with rooms, is constructed on the cantilever principle, as just below is the artificially lighted studio, across the whole area of which appears no pillar or post.

The lower studio, also 120 by 80 feet, is illuminated throughout by alternating red and white Cooper-Hewitts. The stage lighting alone utilizes 525 electrical horsepower. There are four stages. The floor and ceiling are of concrete. In the basement is the printing office, where are turned out thirty thousand copies of the Biograph weekly booklet, with different contents for foreign circulation. A Miehle press is a part of the equipment. Also there are the extensive carpenter shop and the quarters devoted to scene painting. The exit from the rear of the studio building is in an inclosed tower independent of the main structure.

The film storage vaults are in the laboratory. The construction of these constitutes one of the features of a group of features. There are six vaults in a row. In spite of the fact that this building was constructed over two years ago, the specifications exceed those demanded by the latest requirements, in the thickness of walls and other details. In front of each vault, which carries double doors, is a chain containing a fuse plug which under heat will melt and flood with fresh air the entire apartment through the throwing back of a section of the overhead skylight. In the vaults there are no lamps; there is in the top a ventilation chute extending to the roof. In the negative vault it is interesting to note that the numbers now exceed 4,400, an index of the volume of Biograph releases.

In the film cutting and joining room, on the top floor, where fifty-five girls are employed, all of the work tables are covered with glass. Every incandescent lamp is inclosed in an extra non-breakable globe. There is available such a quantity of natural light that it is only on bad days and in the late afternoons that artificial illumination is necessary. Under every table is a bucket of water. Back from each table in the center of the floor there is a covered metal receptacle for accumulated film. At each table there is a small containing metal apron in which bits of film temporarily rest. No film reaches the floor. Adjoining is the research and maintenance department, where are kept plans of all the different buildings, for instance.

Down stairs we visit the less than dimly illuminated printing room—always a place of wonder to the layman. As our eyes become accustomed to the darkness we note that the perforating and printing is being done by a single, or, perhaps, by a combination machine, which, we are told, is a Biograph innovation. In case it should prove necessary this room and its companion compartment—there are two printing rooms—can be flooded with light from the office as well as from the inside. It was noted that no door leads into the printing room; entrance is gained by turning corners, so that the shutting out of the light is gradual. Two doors give access to the developing room. They are light locking—that is, one must be closed before its mate can be opened. The washing of the films occupies fifteen minutes, an indicator automatically stopping the revolving wheel at the right moment. Here, too, are the tinting tanks, where the pictured sunlight is transformed to moonlight or other degree of darkness. In the drying room the film is kept an arbitrary number of minutes. Atmospheric conditions are maintained at a uniform standard.

A hot water boiler furnishes moisture for supplying different departments. The air is drawn through bags and pulled through the buildings. In other words, the Biograph utilizes heat, moisture and cold air to make the temperature what is desired. A huge apparatus filters 20,000 gallons of water a day. There is a big vacuum cleaner which does double duty in collecting any dust and in distributing air. An icemaking plant has a daily capacity of six tons.

In the fourth building are the machines devoted to transforming the incoming alternating current to direct. Here, too, is the machine shop, where is repaired the machinery used in the establishment. At the south end are four great furnaces, the coal for which is supplied through automatic chutes.

One cannot witness the working together of all the many factors in this remarkable establishment, and of which the foregoing is necessarily but a partial enumeration, without being deeply impressed. And one of the most remarkable things about the entire plant is the atmosphere. In all the activity there is a repose more like that of the library than of the factory. The conditions are those under which men and women can do their best work, whether it be mental or manual or a combination of both. Spick and span, too, is everything; one is reminded of a warship in full commission.

"What method do we follow in regard to production?" remarked our host in response to a question. "Why, when a script is passed by the scenario department, in which quite naturally we have confidence, it is handed to a director. Four officers of the company and the managing director watch a rehearsal of the story. For one thing, we always give a director a story we know he will like. A director must believe in a script or he is not asked to produce it. A picture, like a chain, is only as strong as its weakest link. Above all, it is organization that makes possible the consecutive production of good pictures. Even after a subject is assumed to be completed we go over it time and again. We may even discard it entirely, as has happened in Biograph history quite a number of times.

"You have referred to the fact that when these buildings were planned the Biograph was producing but two thousand feet of negative a week and that our present capacity is plainly many times that amount. That is true. We can easily and properly produce here twelve reels a week without straining facilities. The Biograph built with the idea of discounting the future, so that it might for twenty-five years take care of the growth of business."

MAX FIGMAN IN "THE TRUTH WAGON."

As John Ross in "The Truth Wagon" Max Figman has a part which fits him like a glove. Before the footlights Mr. Figman scored his greatest successes in roles of the easy going, devil-may-care type of fellow such as Lieutenant Fob in "The Man on the Box" and the amateur editor in "The Truth Wagon."

This production is the second that has been made under Mr. Figman's personal direction and like its predecessor, "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," shows those deft touches and attention to little detail which are the results of the producer's thorough theatrical training.

Miss Lolita Robertson since her appearance as a co-star with Mr. Figman has built up an enviable following of admirers among picture fans. In her latest role she is just as charming and winsome as ever.

"The Truth Wagon" is a pictorial version of the play by Hayden Talbot in which Mr. Figman appeared in New York a season or so ago.

Alleged Theater Swindler Held

"Boehm-Rose," Dealer in China, Recognized by a Moving Picture World Description, Held for Trial at Harriman, Tenn.

FROM information given by a representative of the Great Northern Manufacturing Company to the Moving Picture World's Chicago representative, it is learned that C. H. Rose, alias Edward V. Wall and Count Edward von Wallstatton, alleged to have been swindling picture theater managers all over the country by means of a transaction in chinaware, has been held for trial at Harriman, Tenn., where he was recently arrested.

As related in the Moving Picture World of December 26, Rose was apprehended in Harriman, Tenn., on December 8, upon recognition from a description and warning published in this journal and after an attempt to sell a bill of chinaware to W. C. Scott, of the Edsonia Theater of Harriman. As Rose claimed to represent the Great Northern Manufacturing Company of Chicago, that company was communicated with and agreed to send a representative to the hearing in the police court set for December 16.

Upon returning to Chicago the representative of the Great Northern Manufacturing Company called at the offices of the Moving Picture World with the information that "Rose" had his hearing on December 17 and had been bound over under a bond of $1,000 to await the action of the grand jury which sits the first Monday in March at Kingston, Tenn., the county seat of Roane County. As "Rose" was unable to furnish the required bail, he will remain in jail to await the disposition of his case by that body. For the offense with which he is charged, "Rose" faces a term in the penitentiary of from three to five years, according to the penal statutes of Tennessee.

It is said that "Rose" is also wanted for jumping hotel bills in a number of cities.

The representative of the Great Northern Manufacturing Company gave the further information that "Rose" had been in his company's employ at one time, but that he had been discharged for cause in July, 1912. At that time he was known as "Edward A. Boehm." He also stated that the goods represented to be handled by "Rose" were altogether different from the Great Northern Manufacturing Company's product. Efforts to catch this man, he said, had been made since the latter part of 1913, but letters from chiefs of police in towns where he had been arrested revealed that whenever the Great Northern had been advised of his arrest its replies came too late and "Rose" had been released again and again, because no one appeared against him.

INSURES ITS LEADING LADY.

Miss Margaret Snow has been insured by the Thanhouser Film Corporation for $150,000 as a guaranty against accident. Miss Snow in company with other members of the Thanhouser "Zudora" company had a narrow escape from death last week. Miss Snow has been so widely heralded as the star of "Zudora" that the Thanhouser managers decided to protect themselves against loss in the event she should meet with an accident.

Miss Snow, Miss Elizabeth Forbes, Helen Badgley, James Cruze and Director Frederic Sullivan were driving along a country road on Long Island, returning from the taking of a scene, when the machine skidded, the rear wheels sliding over a stone bridge, balancing the car in the air. It was only the quick work of the men in the party and the coolness of the women that saved the situation. Had there been any commotion, the car would certainly have been loosed from its precarious position and sent downward, carrying with it probably death for at least some of the party.

When the party reached the studio Director Sullivan reported the near accident and it was then determined to insure Miss Snow's life, and a policy was subsequently taken out for $150,000.

WORLD FILM TO HANDLE "BOY SCOUT" PICTURE.

Alec Lorimore wishes to announce that he has made arrangements with the World Film Corporation to handle an extensive campaign for booking up the Boy Scout picture, further particulars of which will be given soon by the World Film Corporation. Meanwhile all that need be said is that the Boy Scout movement in this country is upwards of four hundred and fifty thousand (450,000) Boy Scouts, which membership will be doubled before Alec Lorimore and the World Film Corporation are through with the bookings of this great drama. It was written by Campbell MacCulough.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Reel Fellows Club Meeting.

ABOUT 50 members of the Chicago Reel Fellows Club held a meeting in the Hotel Sherman on Wednesday evening, Dec. 16.

Geo. A. Blair, of the cine department of the Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y., was the special guest of the evening. At the request of the president of the club, R. R. Nehls, Mr. Blair was sent on by his company to deliver an address on the technique of manufacturing the raw film product. Mr. Blair, throughout his address, gave a practical demonstration of the various raw materials employed in forming the finished film product. His lecture and demonstrations deeply absorbed the interest of all present, and at its conclusion he was warmly thanked by the president and governors of the club. On motion he was unanimously elected a life member of the club.

Mr. Blair combined business with pleasure during his brief visit and returned to Rochester Friday afternoon, Dec. 18.

Moving Picture Campaign Against Disease Germs.

The Chicago City Club has inaugurated a course of public health exhibitions by means of moving pictures. The first exhibition was given at the Club Thursday evening, Dec. 17, when two film subjects, "The Price of Human Lives" and "On the Trail of the Germs," were screened.

These films have been produced to educate the public on tuberculosis, and their presentation was accompanied by able lectures given by Frank E. Wing, superintendent of the Chicago Municipal Tuberculosis Sanitarium, and James Minnick, superintendent of the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute.

At the same club, from Dec. 17 until the first Monday in January, a series of models from the traveling educational exhibit of the Illinois state board of health will be shown at meetings open to the public. The elimination of the house fly, of foul air and of the pollution of dug wells is shown by means of these models.

Denies That Films Caused Fatal Fire on Train.

Moving picture films had nothing to do with the explosion and fire in the combination smoker and baggage car of a Chicago, Burlington & Quincy train near Kedzie avenue, Nov. 24, according to Joel A. Johnson, of Berwyn, who was carrying the films.

He testified Saturday, Dec. 19, at the inquest held on the deaths of Frank L. Poultney and Mayor Henry S. Rich, of Berwyn, who were among the passengers in the car. Thirty others were burned or knocked down and cut and bruised in the panic that followed the explosion.

Johnson said the fire apparently started in the ceiling toward the front of the coach. He declared the package in which he had the films was on the floor untouched by the fire when he first saw the blaze.

"I smelled a peculiar odor like smoke," he said. "I glanced upward. I saw flames in the roof of the coach.

"I pushed toward the front of the coach. I was caught in a press of fighting men. I felt a great heat behind me. It was so intense by that time, the backs of my ears were blistered.

"Everything indicated the fire started in the upper section of the coach, and inside of it. None of the passengers suffered burns on their legs."

The conductor and the brakeman of the train were questioned as to the condition of the coach after the fire had been quenched. They said the inside of the car was charred, and the outside was unscathed.

As many of the witnesses are still in St. Anthony's Hospital, the inquest was continued until Jan. 15.

Chicago Censorship Expensive.

Increase in the cost to the city for inspecting moving pictures has been refused by the council finance committee in taking up the estimates for the office of second deputy superintendent of police. For the year 1914 the fees from the inspections were about 65 per cent. of the cost of maintaining the bureau. For the next year an increase of two more censors and of one moving picture operator, totaling $4,356, was asked.

The manufacturers pay 50 cents for every film that is approved by the censors and the aldermen did not see any prospect for such a large increase in the fees received.

The income of the bureau for the present year, up to Dec. 16, was $12,633, and the appropriation made by the council was $13,200.

Chicago Film Brevities.

George Kleine's five-reel production of "Du Barry," directed under his personal supervision in Turin, Italy, will be given its Chicago premier at the Studebaker, on Christmas day. The cast was selected from celebrated American actors and actresses, headed by Mrs. Leslie Carter.

The "Who Is Sue?" contest is progressing merrily, and great interest is centered on the selections to be made by the judges on Tuesday night, Dec. 22. Beginning Monday, Dec. 28, the Herald coupons will appear in that paper to be used in casting votes in the final contest. This arrangement affects the down-town or "Loop" district only, the conditions being that such productions as Mr. Hamburger may select for his Ziegfeld Theater shall not be exhibited at any other down-town theater during the life of the contract. For the Christmas holidays Mr. Hamburger will present, at the Ziegfeld Theater, Wm. Farnum in "The Sign of the Cross" and Mary Pickford in "Cinderella." "The Sign of the Cross" is a photo-dramatic adaptation from Wilson Barrett's drama of that name.

"How Cissy Made Good" Makes Good

Latest Vitagraph Novelty Comedy Is Given a Hearty Reception at the Vitagraph Theater.

THE weekly change of bill at the Vitagraph Theater on December 21 was marked by the showing of the novelty four-part comedy "How Cissy Made Good." It is said to be probable that the company will later reduce the feature to three reels and release it through the regular program of the General Film Company. Cissy, who is, of course, Cissy Fitz-Gerald of the Vitagraph forces, is seen in the role of a woman who obtains employment on a magazine devoted to motion pictures, and the permanency of whose stay depends on her success in going out to Flatbush and interviewing the actors and actresses in the studio of which those in the vicinage take so much pride.

Cissy visits in the dressing rooms and in the yard and in the factory and on the stages all of the men and women who have to do with making Vitagraph pictures. They play all sorts of jokes on her, and she puts over a few on them, her chief stunt being walking into a scene and spoiling a hundred feet or so of film and incidentally carving a few gashes in what is charitably described as directorial temperament. Likewise incidentally, when all is said and more than that is done, Cissy gets the job. Her tenure in her new place is short, however, as her introduction has been so spectacular and she has made such a hit that she receives and accepts an offer to join the Vitagraph company. The subject is one that will be heartily received by all picture "fans." It is not only an intimate inside view of the studio of the Vitagraph company, which alone would interest, but it reveals many of the actors out of character as well as in make-up and at work. There is one bit reminiscent of other days. Edith Storey, mounted on a spirited charger, in cowgirl costume, comes dashing into the yard and slides out of the saddle with all of her old-time aplomb.

Other features of the program, and a most interesting one, were the single reelers "The Professor's Romance" and "Sweeney's Christmas Bird," and the two-part subject "By the Governor's Order." The singing by the Mezzanotte Trio was encored, and deservedly so. Last but not least was the continuation of the one-act play, written by S. Rankin Drew, "What the Moon Saw." The lead is finely played by Sidney Drew. It is the third week for this interesting bit described by one of the dramatic critics as "The biggest little thing on Broadway." It is good enough for one to see with undiminished interest several times.

VITAGRAPH'S NEW YEAR WEEK PROGRAM.

The Vitagraph Theater's program for New Year's week, commencing Sunday, December 27th, includes the most powerful screen story ever presented at this Broadway photoplay house, "The Sins of the Mothers," a five-part drama of life, produced by Ralph W. Ince, from Elaine Sterne's first prize winner in the Sun scenario contest, the script for which she received one thousand dollars. In producing "The Sins of the Mothers" the Vitagraph Company placed the entire resources of their Brooklyn studio at the disposal of Mr. Ince with the result that perfect photography, scenic accuracy and incomparable acting by a cast including: Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Julia Swayne Gordon, Lucille Lee, Mary Maurice and Paul Scardon.

A supplementary program of shorter pictures, including: "Forcing Dad's Consent" and "Auntie's Portrait," two single reel comedies, and "In the Latin Quarter," a two-part drama, were selected with special care as to their fitness and worth as part of a special program. Sidney Drew in "What the Moon Saw," will be continued.

SUDDEN DEATH OF LEN G. SPENCER.

Len G. Spencer, well-known actor, singer and booking manager, dropped dead in his office at 245 West Forty-second street on December 15. Mr. Spencer was born in 1867. His ashes will be taken to Washington, his old home, for interment. At the funeral services two records were played on a phonograph that deeply moved the hearers. They were the Lord's Prayer and a chant of the Twenty-third Psalm. They had been made by Mr. Spencer and were played according to his wishes.

Mr. Spencer was widely known among motion picture exhibitors. He was the possessor of a remarkably powerful voice, and at many of the public functions of the exhibitors in this city he had been called upon to preside at the stage ceremonies.

Arthur Roussel Dead

Former Vice-President of Pathe Freres Was an Authority on the Manufacture of Film.

THE death is announced of Arthur Roussel, former vice-president of Pathe Freres, after a long illness. Mr. Roussel was thirty-four years old. He is survived by a widow and infant son. The funeral was held at his late home in West New York, N. J., and was attended by many men prominent in the film trade, among them Charles Pathe and the officers of the Pathe company.

Mr. Roussel began his business career as a boy in the establishment of Pathe Freres in France. He came to the United States early in 1910; his first work in this country was as technical man, in charge of the Bound Brook plant of his company. He was not only an expert in all matters pertaining to film, but he was as well an unusually good photographer. While his death came to him as a young man, his business experience covered practically the inception and development of the great industry in which his life was spent.

The Late Arthur Roussel.

Mr. Roussel remained in Bound Brook but eighteen months, when he was transferred to a responsible position in the Jersey City studios. A year ago, when the Eclectic Film Company was formed, Mr. Roussel was placed at the head of it. Early this year, when J. A. Berst resigned his position as vice-president of the Pathe American Company Mr. Roussel became his successor. He held this office until compelled by illness this fall to resign.

Mr. Roussel had been ailing during the summer, but kept at his desk until the beginning of August, when he was compelled to take to his bed with what was diagnosed as bronchial pneumonia. His friends will remember that he had expressed the hope that his indisposition might be a short one, so that he might take his place among the soldiers of France.

Mr. Roussel was highly esteemed by his associates and by his many friends in the film trade. Even when he first came to this country he became known as a man who made friends fast. He was of marked geniality and most likable. He will be missed.

R. C. SAWIN TO MANAGE WORLD FILM OFFICES IN SOUTH.

The World Film Corporation has just appointed R. C. Sawin its Southern district manager. Mr. Sawin's neighborhood will extend from Washington, D. C., to Florida on the eastern side and goes from the coast to Dallas, Texas, in the other direction. His more immediate object is to build up work around Atlanta, Georgia, and Birmingham, Alabama. He has been branch manager of the General Film Company in the South and more recently has been manager of the New Orleans office of the Paramount Picture Corporation; is a man just reaching his prime, has many friends in the South and with no doubt at all will greatly advance the interests of the World Film in his district.

AL LICHTMAN GOES TO BOSTON TO SHOW PICTURE.

Al Lichtman, general manager of Special Attractions Department of World Film, has gone to Boston to superintend the showing of "Your Girl and Mine" at the Modern House of the Hub City. We understand that one of his schemes for attracting attention to the picture is a suffrage tag day for the benefit of the movement. Each tag will have attached to it a coupon that will admit bearer to the Modern while the picture is being shown. This picture offers a particularly good chance for effective handling and the different way of exploiting it according to the peculiarities of the different localities will tax Mr. Lichtman's ingenuity and no doubt furnish him with a world of good fun.

"A Silent Plea"

Three-Reel Vitagraph Subject Powerfully Points Out Why Indigent Widowed Mothers Should be Pensioned.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT sometimes happens when we have a picture with a civic purpose that we get the moral but find the story has been overlooked. In "A Silent Plea," a three-reel Vitagraph subject to be released on February 2, we have not only a powerful moral but also a powerful story. It is a plea for the turning over to widowed mothers of the money the state now devotes to the support of children in institutions, in order that the children may have the benefit of the mother's guidance. The story was written by Mae Koch. The adaptation was by Marguerite Bertsch, in co-operation with Sophie Irene Loeb, member of the New York State Commission for Relief of Widowed Mothers. We are going to hear much of "A Silent Plea" following its release. It is a picture that will give an exhibitor opportunity of bringing to his house the leaders of civic thought in his community, and will give these opportunity to send their friends.

Edith Storey has the part of the mother who bravely fights her way in the world that she may support and keep to herself the son and the daughter following the death in an accident of the husband and father. As the sub-title indicates, it is the breaking of the tender thread that holds the home together—and every one knows of numberless instances of these comfortable homes and happy ones that have but one life between them and poverty. Miss Storey gives a portrayal that in strength matches the deep appeal of the many situations into which the mother is thrown. It is her picture more than that of the remainder of the cast. In the beginning we see her in the forgotten garb with the puffed sleeves of twenty years ago. The atmosphere of the happy domestic circle is finely established.

Following the accident the action jumps twenty years. The wife goes to an old friend of the family, now a state senator. To him she tells her story, and in retrospect we see what has happened in the intervening years. We see the breaking up of the home, the renting of a cheap apartment and the securing of employment by the wife; the indications in the acts of the children that the new environment is changing their characters for the worse; the relentless pursuit of the widow by her employer and her final discharge; her appeals to a charitable organization; the promised investigation and its unfruitful results; the arrest of the boy and the turning over by the kindly judge of the case to the Children's Society; another investigation, and the taking away of the children, with its heartbreak for the mother. In her momentary visits she sees the children slipping away from her. When they are grown the mother is powerless to stem the tide that is pulling them down in their weaknesses. The daughter falls into the employment of the manufacturer who had discharged the mother. The son is arrested for falsifying his books.

This is the situation when the mother goes to the senator. He listens to the telling of this story. He announces that he is going into the senate and make a speech for the passage of the widows' allowance bill. We see him as he does it. It is an impressive sight. Alternating titles, couched in eloquent sentences, tell us what he is saying. He appeals for the mothers and for the children—we get flashes of a group of the little ones. The senators, at the conclusion of the speech, crowd about the Senator and congratulate him—and pass the bill. The story ends right there. We may guess the rest; but the point has been made, and in a way that drives under our skin and into our minds the great need of legislative action in the one particular direction.

Lionel Belmore is the producer of this subject. He is to be thanked for what he has given us. Harry Morey is the senator. Mr. Morey has thrown into his interpretation a depth of feeling and a power of portrayal that makes his impress felt in the story. Donald Hall plays the husband, and plays it well. Edward Elkas is the manufacturer who meets his death when at a gay dinner party he arouses the ire of one of his companions; his attentions to the girl with him are only too plain.

In "A Silent Plea" we have a story with a purpose and a purpose with a story.

Della Connor in "Stop Thief"

DELLA CONNOR, the former Pathe star who has just completed her work as Sadie Small in "Officer 666," has been engaged by George Kleine for one of the important parts in his coming "Stop Thief." Miss Connor will work with Mary Ryan, who is playing the feminine lead of the "maid" to Harry Mestayer's "thief."

Della Connor.

Miss Connor is a petite blond and was formerly one of Gus Edwards' proteges. She was lured to the silent stage under protest and spent a year with the Pathe Freres forces in the Jersey Hills. Miss Connor thinks that the best work of her career was done under the management of Frank Powell in George Kleine's "Officer 666."

The enthusiastic way in which she speaks of the pleasure she derives from her work, one is led to believe there would be considerably more than a protest if she were asked to leave the studio for the stage once more.

Miss Connor is a very beautiful young woman, as may be gathered by the accompanying engraving. She is an actress of ability and her work in "Officer 666" is most pleasing. Mr. Kleine's selection of players has been excellent throughout, but none is better than Miss Connor.

FISKE NOT TO PRODUCE PICTURES.

Because of an error in the correspondence between B. A. Rolfe and the Alco Film Corporation, it was stated that Mrs. Fiske was to appear in a film version of Edward Sheldon's "The High Road." As a matter of fact the arrangement is merely that Mr. Rolfe has purchased from Mr. Fiske the motion picture rights of "The High Road," and will produce it with a star other than Mrs. Fiske. Mr. Fiske has not entered the motion picture field as a producer, nor has he given the Rolfe Photo Plays Company the right to any other of his plays beside "The High Road."

"THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" ARRIVES IN NEW YORK.

The first print of "The Girl of the Golden West," the new Lasky-Belasco production which is to be released on January 4th, and which will have its first New York presentation at the Strand Theater on January 3d, has arrived in New York. The work of making the additional prints for distribution through the Paramount is already under way. "The Girl of the Golden West" is in five reels. The production was made under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. The three leading roles of the "Girl," Ramerrez (the road-agent), and the "Sheriff" are played respectively by Mabel Van Buren, House Peters and Theodore Roberts. Both Miss Van Buren and Mr. Roberts have appeared in other Lasky productions, but this is the first picture for the firm in which Mr. Peters has played.

EVERYONE who is at all familiar with events in the amusement world knows "Officer 666," that zipping melange of farce, melodrama and comedy, under Cohan and Harris' management, that set, and kept, this country of Uncle Sam's alaughing throughout the year 1912. Even the pipe-smoking bulldog, which heralded the mirthful exploits of the police officer in the public streets of cities throughout the country where the attraction was staged, is well remembered yet, the smiles that his appearance brought to hundreds of thousands of faces being only a faint reflection of the riot of cachinnations which greeted the officer and his associates wherever they appeared.

Now, George Kleine has more than reproduced the merry stage scenes in moving pictures, for the benefit and diversion of the many millions of subjects in the Kingdom of Filmdom. I say more than reproduced, for the vizualization in pictures substitutes action and scene, in many instances, for the spoken word, and in the flash of an eye the spectator of a scene is transported to another, perhaps miles away, that follows in rapid continuity. While we must acknowledge that one misses the point of spoken lines and the sonorous brogue of our beloved Irish friend, Dan Moyles, we must bear in mind the many compensations made by moving pictures along the lines referred to.

Indeed, in action—the rapid action of this merry skit especially—the moving picture has the advantage of stage production. Witness, for examples, the get-away of the picture thief, Al. Wilson, in the closing scene; the exploits of Travers Gladwin on the street, in the uniform of Officer 666; the carrying of the trunk from the attic of the Travers' mansion to the ground floor by Travers, and the rush of Aunt Burton and her niece, Sadie Small, accompanied by a force of police and detectives, to the supposed rescue of her other niece, Helen Burton, etc. In "Officer 666," where the many and mirthful incidents of the story are concentrated in the time space of nine hours—between five o'clock in the afternoon and two o'clock next morning—the picture presentation, which lasts about 75 minutes or over, is more fitting than the stage performance of two and a half hours.

I have touched on these comparisons because I have read some reviews in the daily press, of this pictured subject, which altogether overlooked the advantages of moving pictures while referring to their disadvantages.

"Officer 666" has been directed with fine art and judgment. The interiors in the Gladwin are perfect, and the exterior, showing the front door, is in fine harmony. The scene in the police station is full of action, worked up to the natural point by careful rehearsal, and the surroundings are in full keeping with the requirements. The scenes in the Gladwin mansion, immediately following the escape of the picture thief, are models of concerted action and painstaking rehearsal.

To me, at the first viewing—and I still retain the impression—the visualization fails to convey sufficient reason for the secret return of Travers Gladwin to his home. In the script of the play it is divulged that the lawyer of Travers, whom he has left in full charge of his affairs, has been conspiring with his trusted servant, Watkins, to defraud him, and that Travers had got wind of it when abroad. This gives ample reason for his secret return. In the pictures, in the letter sent to his bosom friend, Barnes, Travers writes nothing of this—only that he will arrive at a certain hour, on a certain day, and enjoining secrecy. The only clue we get in the picture is the scene showing Watkins turning over the keys of the Gladwin mansion to Al. Wilson, the picture thief. That is not sufficiently convincing to the mind, but would have been made so, had Travers' letter to Barnes conveyed the reason for his unexpected homecoming.

I have viewed these films three times, and have found something additional that merited praise each additional time. The fine continuity of the story was seen more clearly, also matters of detail; but what impressed one most during these successive viewings was the acting—the perfectly sustained acting—of the principals, and among them I include everyone named in the foregoing cast. The easy, confident art of Howard Estabrook does not surpass that of Sidney Seaward, and while Dan Moyles in the titular role almost talks in the pictures, with that expressive Milesian face of his, we are not blind to the virtues of the photodramatic acting of Misses Lois Burnett, Della Connor and Ada Nevil, nor to the indispensable support of Harold Howard and Makoto Inokuchi. Launched on the screen with such worthies aboard, I predict for "Officer 666" a repetition of its remarkable stage success in this country and in England.

It would be an oversight not easily pardoned were praise withheld from the photography shown in these films. I cannot recall a single spot where the quality was not equal to the high merit of the production in other respects.

The release date was Christmas Day.

GREAT NORTHERN PRODUCTION AT STUDEBAKER, CHICAGO.

The Great Northern Film Company's three-part production, "After Thirty Years," was played last week at the big Studebaker Theater in Chicago, following the engagement of the Chicago Tribune Belgian War Pictures.

A WELL-CONSTRUCTED screen story of logical structure and careful treatment, "The Beat of the Year," holds interest quite as much by ingenuity of plot and development as by its well-sustained suspense. It is really a detective story, involving the gradual unfolding of a crime mystery by a cub reporter of natural talent and a tendency to take the bit in his teeth and make the running. He is sent out on an assignment as an assistant to the star reporter, but he cuts loose on his own account, gathers a number of small clues and, through a process of reasoning that involves quick perception as well as infinite pains, he clears up a perplexing problem in time to make the scoop of the year.

The story opens with mystery and develops without any of that theatrical method which calls for enlightening the audience. It does not enlighten—it mystifies—and holds attention all the more on that account. There is apparently no clue to the perpetrator of a murder up to the time the victim's clothes are shown to the star reporter and cub at the Morgue. The cub notices that one button on a vest is unlike the others and pilfers it. With that starting point he begins two lines of investigation, one starting with the manufacturers of the button and the other to ascertain who owned a deserted automobile figuring in the case.

The buttons are all shipped out of town, but that does not discourage the cub. Some employee might have used one to replace a button lost—are any of the factory hands absent? Two, Greening and Joyce. There is a group picture in which the latter appear and they are pointed out to the cub. When the young reporter has at last found the owner of the deserted car, he hires his services for the day and has him look at the group. The automobilist at once points out the man who hired the deserted car.

These clues are followed with activity and determination to the arrest of Joyce and the unfolding of his strange story, in which he accounts for all that might easily have been covered but for the cub's strenuous detective work. Nothing is left to accident or chance in the cub's work up to the discovery of Joyce; it is just what a photodrama should be in the assertion of a strong will against adverse circumstances, and fascinating on that account.

In "The Beat of the Year" is avoided a trouble very common in detective plays, that of exhibiting the problem by such a method that it is easily solved in advance. It has also a virtue of not depending upon coincidence or mere chance for its development. It is all right to let chance play its probable part in any story, but not so as to make the action hinge entirely upon it. There is a definite design in the mind of the cub reporter which is carried out to a logical end by plausible means.

Arnold Daly a Pathe Player

Famous Actor to Star in New Serial—Will Take Part of "Craig Kennedy."

ARNOLD DALY, who through his work in "Candida" became in such a short space of time one of the most talked-of actors in America, has signed with Pathe to take the leading part in its new serial, "The Exploits of Elaine." That Mr. Daly stands in the very front rank of the theatrical profession today is self-evident, and that he has been signed by Pathe for the new serial proves conclusively that "The Exploits of Elaine" will be a vastly different proposition from "The Perils of Pauline" in that the new story will require most artistic interpretation, and not depend so much upon sensational incidents for its interests.

Arnold Daly.

Born in New York, he showed the average New York boy's sublime indifference to the favorites of fame, and they still tell stories along Broadway of young Daly's scornful attitude towards the famous playwrights and theatrical stars who called upon Mr. Frohman, while he was office boy for that theatrical manager.

At an early age Mr. Daly was convinced that he could act and eventually prevailed upon Mr. Frohman to give him a chance in a small role. He soon showed that he possessed an intuitive dramatic sense and his rise was steady. He was fortunate to have a part in "Pudd'n Head Wilson," under Frank Mayo, whose splendid experience and fine talent gave him much invaluable knowledge. After that engagement he played the boy in Wm. Gillette's farce, "Because She Loved Him So," which was followed by the part of the mad lover in "Barbara Frietchie," with Julia Marlowe. Engagements in "When We Were Twenty-one," "Hearts Aflame," and "The Girl from Dixie" followed. All this time Mr. Daly's art had been broadening and taking on a finer quality. Unconsciously and gradually he had been fitting himself for his great success, "Candida." It is interesting to note that this great production, which afterwards played 132 days in New York, was first put on for matinees only by Mr. Daly to demonstrate "a worthy play which could not be commercially successful in New York." Shortly afterward against all advice, Mr. Daly needing a play as a stop gap, determined to try "Candida" on the New York public. It was done, and each day saw a growth in the receipts. Before long it was the most talked of play in the city, and Mr. Daly was famous. He had proved once and for all the value of a serious production.

Being of Irish descent, Mr. Daly could not help but be witty. It is said of him that on one occasion he was invited to a dinner of the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers, and was called upon for a toast. He rose and, with a rare twinkle in his eye, said as follows: "To the Plymouth Rock—the Blarney-stone of our dear America." He is also epigrammatic, as the following recent statement of his will prove: "Culture will rid the world of war—unless war first rids the world of culture."

So Pathe has made a ten strike in securing this brilliant Irish-American actor who is a thinker as well as an artist. As "Craig Kennedy" in "The Exploits of Elaine" he should gain new laurels and stamp the new serial with his decidedly interesting personality.

"Springtime"

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE filming of such a story as "Springtime," from the gifted pen of Booth Tarkington, reflects credit on the producing company. The subject is surely an attractive one and its dramatic values lies on the surface. The story is well told on the screen barring some redundancies and some manifest defects in some of the acting. A most creditable effort has been made to create the proper atmosphre, which is that of the old South in the days of Andrew Jackson. There never was a more charming and romantic atmosphere in the geography and history of our country and the screen is charged with it in this play. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the out-door settings, every one of them is a gem of its kind and even an audience far less partial than the invited guests at the private exhibition in The Strand will appreciate these scenes to the utmost. The interior settings formed a painful contrast, though they were no worse than interior settings often are in single and in multiple reels.

"Springtime" deals with the passionate power of young love, which in an instant changes the girl into a woman and makes her ready to sacrifice all on the altar of the Eternal God. It need scarcely be pointed out that an author of the type of Tarkington could not fail to rise to such a theme. The fact that the story is laid in America will, of course, recommend it and atone for some of its shortcomings. Nothing is more difficult for the film adapter than a readable novel with numerous characters; the novel may be chatty and diffuse even, the screen can never bear such faults. No matter how sweet the incidental scenes, no matter how charming the scenes, no feature can afford to move too slowly.

If there is a very numerous cast the temptation to show too much often overcomes the director almost always to the hurt of the dramatic values. Here and there the action lingers in this feature and here and there it plainly digresses, but in all fairness it must be said that taken as a whole the play is distinctly acceptable and would be very much more so but for the acting of some of the minor characters. Florence Nash takes the leading part and gives a fairly capable performance. Her personality is pleasing and her earnestness is transparent, but the first flush of youth so essential to the story is missing. Early youth is one of the rare realities of life for which no substitute will ever be found either on the speaking stage or on the screen. As a whole her rendition of the part was creditable. The histrionic skill of the man who played Gilbert, Madeline's lover, may safely be rated as 00. In a market which is showing a continued absence of quality this feature will more than hold its own.

Mr. Henry Pessers, who is on his maiden trip in America, has become infatuated with New York and American life, prophesying a great future for America. He has already acquired several interests here, even in so short a stay.

He has obtained exclusive rights for Europe, to several of our big American productions, on which he is convinced he will make good money. Since Mr. Pessers entered the theatrical and film business, he has experienced one continued success.

The London Exchange that he recently formed to work exclusive features in the United Kingdom, has been so successful, and its need of a bigger program been of such rapid growth, that he came to America in order to line up with some of the big houses here, to work their pictures for them in Europe.

Mr. Pessers is a very quiet man, but one readily realizes that he carries the air of a shrewd and successful man of business.

"DIVORCE" FILM IN IMPORTANT THEATERS.

"Should a Woman Divorce," the latest output of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., opened at Weber's Theater, Broadway and Twenty-ninth street, New York City, Saturday, December 26th, for an engagement of two weeks' duration, which may be extended indefinitely. On the same date the same photoplay, which has been quite favorably commented upon by the trade, opened at the Bijou Dream Theater, Chicago, for an indefinite run; the Bijou Dream is the theater at which the Ivan company's previous production, "Sins of the Parents," ran for six weeks.

Manager Abramson, of the Ivan company, has been following the plan of playing his attractions in the important cities on the rental basis, through agencies which he has established, as well as selling state rights when suitable buyers can be secured. The company's productions now on the market are meeting with great success and it is claimed for "Should a Woman Divorce?" that it will prove an even better drawing card than was "Sins of the Parents," which broke many a house record in Greater New York.

OCTAVIA HANDWORTH AT HOME.

Octavia Handworth, whose excellent work for the Excelsior Feature Film Co., is well known, is at present enjoying a much needed rest at her home, 1183 St. Johns place, Brooklyn, N. Y. In "The Path Forbidden," "When Fate Leads Trump" and "In the Shadow," Octavia Handworth enacted parts of such a strenuous nature as to severely tax her nervous vitality. She therefore decided that until after the holidays she would rest and recuperate so that the New Year might find her refreshed and invigorated to take up one of the several offers she is at present considering.

"In Fear of His Past"

Two-Reel Majestic Depicting the Bitterness of Undeserved Punishment with a Redemption Through Natural Justice.

Colonel Gray ..... Spottiswoode Aitken
Mary Jennings ..... Mary Alden

AMONG all dramatic situations, one of the most affecting is that of a man imprisoned for a crime he did not commit—it is a blot upon our present stage of civilization that such a thing is possible. That undeserved punishment falls upon the head of a young man of no criminal tendencies through the machinations of a clever adventuress at the beginning of "In Fear of His Past." She is the real thief, but she succeeds in making circumstantial evidence point to an innocent man that her crime may be covered.

His escape from prison is attended with a line of action entirely new, and he escapes for good. He becomes the secretary of an eccentric old gentleman of wealth engaged in writing his memoirs, named Colonel Gray. This role, delightfully interpreted by Spottiswoode Aitken, is one of originality. Colonel Gray is wealthy enough to be eccentric, and his eccentricities are rich with human kindness. He judges men for himself, and tries them out before allowing that judgment to set.

The young secretary merits the confidence reposed in him, but is tormented with fear that his identity as an escaped convict will be discovered. Now comes the adventuress in pursuance of a new scheme, that of robbing the eccentric Colonel. She succeeds in getting an interview as an agent of rare books and ingratiates herself by posing as an author.

She is engaged to assist in writing the Colonel's memoirs. She recognizes the secretary as her former victim and silences him through his fear.

The arrival of a simple young girl, the Colonel's grandchild, seriously interferes with the plans of the adventuress and augments the dread of the young ex-convict when he falls in love with the granddaughter. The adventuress is driven to make a desperate move—she insists upon the secretary becoming her accomplice in robbing the safe. He is driven to the point of committing crime under the influence of his haunting dread, but asserts his manhood just in time. His quarrel with the adventuress draws the attention of Colonel Gray, and he overhears the adventuress incriminate herself. She is promptly placed under arrest and the splendid old Colonel secures a pardon for the young ex-convict by personal testimony before the Governor. The secretary escapes imprisonment to follow an honorable career, but how many are hurled down the plane of disgrace and humiliation to utter demoralization and death through the lack of a little common humanity and judicial intelligence. The big problem is admirably suggested.

Lasky Engages Louis Mann

SAMUEL GOLDFISH announces that an arrangement has been entered into between Louis Mann, the distinguished American comedian, and Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company by which Mr. Mann will make his first appearance in moving pictures under the direction of Mr. Lasky. This contract calls for Mr. Mann to star in a screen version of "Elevating a Husband," the noted comedy success in which he appeared less than two years ago under the management of Werber & Luescher.

"Elevating a Husband" was written by Clara Lipman (Mrs. Louis Mann) and Samuel Shipman. The piece was first produced at the Liberty Theater and scored such a success that it was later transferred to the Criterion Theater, where Mr. Mann and the production remained for the entire season.

In "Elevating a Husband" Mr. Mann plays the role of the proprietor of a string of five and ten cent stores who marries a music teacher more educated than himself. The plot depends upon the attempts of Letty (the music teacher) to educate her husband and teach him the ways of the polite world. The play has a distinct dramatic episode in addition to its human aspects.

Hal August

HAL AUGUST, probably the youngest film player who is a man grown and yet has played grown-up leads, has a part to his liking in the production which Edwin August is putting on for the Kinetophote, for he will have ample opportunity to practice the "stunts" which have made him popular in the past with directors of other companies.

The role of the inquisitive and active young reporter has been asigned to Mr. August, and what stunts he will be put through are for the future to chronicle. Being a daring swimmer and just as reckless a rider, Mr. August will probably be called upon to do nothing less than ride some wild thing like an automobile or a runaway engine in his search for the big news story which will be brought about by the action of the piece. He may even be asked to dive into the icy deep in his pursuit of the elusive "scoop."

Hal August.

Mr. August is not yet twenty years of age and has been in the pictures for three years principally under the direction of his brother Edwin. He played principal roles with the Universal and the White Star Features and has the distinction of having the lead in his third picture, a two-reel drama called "His Own Blood." Later he was featured in the leading juvenile role in "The Evil of the Slums."

In addition to being a fine swimmer and rider and doing other athletic things, Mr. August occasionally takes a great interest in the pastimes of those who are not so well endowed physically as himself—in other words, he is a stamp collector and finds philately a very absorbing hobby.

"The Stolen Ruby"

Two-Reel Picture of Clever Thief and Her Dupe—Novel Treatment Gives It Freshness and Sense of Mystery (Kalem).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WHENEVER a sense of mystery can be created and maintained by a picture, that picture by that very fact, and no matter what it deals with, will leave a fresh impression on the spectator and give him a new experience. Pictures are for no other purpose than to give that new experience and though the depth and value may vary in every case, it is always welcome and of some value—leaving out, of course, the few instances where the producer has a vicious purpose. It is strange that another man's way of looking at things is always a new experience to us; but all we care for is that he shall make his idea, the condition that is giving him emotion, clear to us. He gives us his emotion and it is new to us.

Scene from "The Stolen Ruby" (Kalem).

C. Doty Hobart wrote this picture, "The Stolen Ruby," and Robert Vignola directed it. The things that are utilized are not at all new, and the experience that it gives us is not deep, but it is fresh. It teases us with a sense of something unexplained and makes us strive to understand and unravel the complex of the evidence that it presents. The sole reason why it is a success is that it keeps adding only just enough evidence to give us a feeling not so much of progress toward a solution as of collecting bits that may be of use to us in putting the whole together at the end. Only at the proper place does it explain the seemingly inexplicable and close with the whole made clear.

The central figure of the story is the "softy" son of a policeman, played by Harry Millard. Over-sensitive, emotional and flighty, he himself doesn't clearly know what has happened. When first presented he is found in his room by his father and a few policemen who have chased fugitives to the house. The boy can hardly hide the fact that he has been shot in the arm. They leave him and soon the father comes back to find him senseless on the floor. Brought to he knows that someone has hit him on the head with a chair but cannot ever guess who. He confesses to his father his part and tells of a pretty woman (Alice Hollister) with whom he had fallen in love. He thought she was eloping with him when they were chased by two men and the shot was fired. To escape from the police he brought her to his room and hid her in a trunk. After the father, with the policeman, had gone she had come out and then he found that she had a great ruby. He was trying to save it from her when he was knocked on the head. Next morning the newspaper tells of a confession made in the police station and this unravels the whole mystery for us.

It is a well directed, well made and photographed offering, is not quite two reels long, and ought to go very well indeed with the public.

Irene Warfield for "Satan Sanderson"

PRETTY Irene Warfield, formerly leading ingenue with Essanay and laterly playing opposite Robert Edeson in Belasco's "The Girl I Left Behind Me," was engaged this week by B. A. Rolfe to appear opposite Orrin Johnson in the production of the famous play, "Satan Sanderson" which will be the next release of the Rolfe Photo Plays Company through the Alco Corporation.

Miss Warfield, on a recent occasion when she was being sought after by a producing company, and was introduced to David Belasco, was the recipient of a sincere compliment from the great dramatist. She was being submitted to Belasco for his official approval for appearance in one of the Belasco plays in pictures. "Young lady," said the brilliant stage wizard, "you have been specially endowed by Providence, with an abundance of beauty and your face, in addition to being beautiful, possesses that rare charm, activity and animation so seldom seen in great beauties."

Irene Warfield.

Last year Miss Warfield played the two leading roles in "Within the Law" for several weeks. Later she decided that she preferred to remain in the east and it was under this specification that she was engaged by B. A. Rolfe.

Mr. Rolfe is considering a second company which will do their productional work on the coast, in a studio now being completed and it is thought Miss Warfield will become a permanent feature with Rolfe interests. Once titled the prettiest girl in California, blessed with more than her share of loveliness and possessing a bounteous portion of histrionic ability, Miss Warfield's appearance on the Alco program is being looked forward to with the keenest anticipation.

ALLIANCE TREBLES OFFICE CAPACITY.

A big crew of workmen have been toiling overtime making extensive alterations and additions to the executive offices of the Alliance Films Corporation. The offices when completed will occupy practically the entire eleventh floor of the Leavett building in West 46th street, New York.

One of the features will be the projection room. Mr. Cobe, the general manager, and his secretaries will occupy a suite of offices to the front, while between the offices of Mr. Kosch, the treasurer, and the auditing department, in a large double office, will be the headquarters of the advertising and publicity manager. The sales and the shipping departments, together with the exchange, will have commodious quarters at the rear of the main hall.

CONSOLIDATED FILM OF TEXAS EXPANDING.

Early in the year 1913, not quite two years ago, there was no such thing as a supply department attached to the Consolidated Film and Supply Company at Dallas, Texas, and naturally there was no supply man. It was simply a case of carrying a few carbons, condensors and tickets in stock, and the first man who happened to be around, whether bookkeeper, stenographer or manager, sold these articles at regular prices, and no stress was laid on supplies at all.

Not quite two years ago Ned E. Depinet, the manager of the Consolidated, engaged the services of R. B. Morris, who was at that time running a moving picture theater at Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Morris was engaged as purchasing agent and manager of a new venture called the supply department. This company was then situated in cramped quarters at 1310 Elm street that city, and the supply department consisted of a rough board desk, one case of carbons, fifty rolls of coupon tickets, two second-hand machines and lots of nerve. The manager now sits at a large mahogany desk, with a plate glass top, has two assistants, a stenographer, has a beautiful exhibition room, all fitted up in brass and mahogany, carries a $25,000 stock of supplies on hand, and has recently closed a lease for an entire floor at 1900 Commerce street, Dallas, this floor, measuring 200 by 60 feet, to be used exclusively as a supply department.

"As Ye Sow"

Rev. John Snyder's Cape Cod Drama Makes Good Five-Reel World Film Picture with Alice Brady as Dora Deland.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

EXCELLENCE of staging and of photography is immediately noticeable in the World Film offering, "As Ye Sow." It holds interest well all the way through and scene after scene of the picture comes with new delight to the spectator, especially because set and background are so artistic, natural and clear. The story is melodramatic in the good sense and teaches, as does every other good melodrama, but neither more nor less than they, that if ye sow evil ye will reap punishment. In it, as in every other simple melodrama, the villain gets his just deserts in the last act. The author is a minister, but his writing it is not so much a novelty as a harking back to early days in England when the church was about the only author of plays that were really melodramas, and wrote them with a religious purpose. The beginning of Grecian drama was not less distinctly religious, and spectacle and drama in Greece were what the modern church is today. Comedy is the only form of drama that is not essentially religious, and it is comedy, always tending to be licentious, that has discredited drama. When the church really becomes a power, it will be felt in stage and picture offerings most decidedly.

One can see the stage version at times through the freer picturization of this story; but it is all clear and most of it is both graceful and effective. The director, Frank H. Crane, and whoever prepared the script deserve high commendation. Alice Brady, who plays the heroine, is both charming—she takes a beautiful picture—and natural in her presentation. The rest of the cast serve with credit. The villain is an irritable character and, being thus, is not the best man from whom to draw a lesson on the results of evil; for irritability is not only apt to irritate the spectator, but lessens the effect of the villain's evil intentions by suggesting lunacy.

The opening scene is a graceful showing of Alice Brady taking up the book, "As Ye Sow," and as she reads the story begins to unfold. We are introduced to a Cape Cod home, refined and pretty. A mother, two brothers (one the hero and one the villain of the story) and a sister live in it and we see others, well drawn Cape characters including the clownish village boy, who furnishes comedy. The elder son leaves home with an irritable curling of the lips and in the city manages to marry an heiress. He becomes drunken and behaves like a crazy brute; at length, to get even with his rich wife for not supplying him with money, he steals the baby and leaves it on the doorstep of the old home. The mother, thinking it a stranger, adopts it. The wife, thinking him and the child dead, visits the Cape village, not knowing that her husband had ever lived there. He is off on a fishing ship. She boards at the mother's house and soon is in love with the younger son, a minister. Just before the marriage, there is a wreck on the ledge—this is a series of scenes that will attract attention surely—and the husband is washed ashore on a spar. He still behaves very badly, but finally is killed by a fall from the cliff.

This leaves the way open for the happy ending in which Dora Deland and the minister are free to marry. She has the old orange wreath laid aside all ready to be put on again.

Modern Business Tendencies

By William H. Wright, of the Excelsior Feature Film Co., Inc.

MODERN business is becoming better. In these days of trust investigation, railroad prosecution, and exposures of commercial interests of all kinds, one would be inclined to think that business as a whole has become less moral. Such, however, is not the case. The very fact that the public is interested and shocked at exposures of commercial error proves that they demand more of their representative business men.

"There is a constantly growing tendency in all business to raise the standard, and the old adage of 'the buyer beware' is no longer a shield behind which unscrupulous merchants may safely carry on onesided transactions. Many examples of the increased responsibility of merchants can easily be cited. Our trade papers and monthly magazines carefully scrutinize their advertisers, and in some cases guarantee their subscribers against losses. The New York 'Tribune' has recently announced that it will guarantee its readers against loss, resulting from any advertisement contained in its pages.

William H. Wright.

"I believe I am not over-optimistic when I say that business is largely dependent upon mutual confidence. And now let us bring these generalities down to the specific industry in which we are all interested—the motion picture industry. This industry has grown rapidly. Starting from absolutely nothing it has grown to enormous proportions in the last few years. Naturally, it has made heavy drafts for men to fill responsible positions. In some cases the urgent necessity for a man has placed men of limited experience into responsible positions. Doubtless this has acted disadvantageously on the entire industry. I would like to see a higher moral standard set for the motion picture industry than the one which now seems to actuate some of the concerns composing it.

"If each individual in the motion picture industry will appreciate that he personally holds the honor and reputation of the industry in his hands, and that he by his own actions, either good or bad, makes or breaks that reputation, I am convinced that the innate strength of character of the average man in the motion picture industry will gain for it that commercial appreciation of substantial financial merit that the invested capital in the motion picture industry deserves.

"I can see the more substantial and the more solid manufacturers, those who produce the most artistic and meritorious pictures, aligning themselves with the large booking organizations, not only because these organizations are more responsible financially and assure a wide distribution, but because business relations existing between the manufacturer and the booker must be based on much mutual confidence, and confidence can only result from a reputation of previous satisfaction in dealings.

"I can see the better class of exhibitors aligning themselves with those sales organizations, because of the high grade of pictures offered, and they, too, must appreciate the satisfaction in dealing with the booker of established reputation, financial worth, and personal integrity.

"The days of the shoe-string operator, the wild cat booker, and others of that tribe are surely numbered, if not already passed. The motion picture industry has lived through much abuse, both from the inside and the outside, and today stands an enormous industry, solidly founded on a public demand, representing millions of invested capital, and untold thousands of employees."

Richard Stanton and Arthur Maude, the eminent English actors, are seen to fine advantage in "A Political Feud," a production of Thomas H. Ince's which is soon to be shown in the Mutual program.

Did YOU Read The Other Page?

THAT there are many Moving Picture Exhibitors who have found success through a study of even our advertising pages is evident from the following few testimonials out of many.

Chicago, Ill., September 5, 1914.

Mr. Jas. S. McQuade
c/o Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of August 8th, we carried a page advertisement, featuring our catalogue of Motion Picture Apparatus and Theatre Supplies. We repeated this in four subsequent issues with inquiries pouring in at the rate of 500 per week.

Such returns from a publication of 100,000 circulation would be considered very fair; from a trade paper they are extraordinary. Surely, they form a strong testimonial not only to the circulation of The World but the "readability" of its columns as well.

Checking up our inquiries, we find a great majority from the "worth while" men of the trade, which in itself is an item of much importance in judging the returns of a campaign of this character.

We are delighted with our returns thus far and believe you will be pleased to hear of it.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:—We are greatly pleased with the results obtained from giving you a year's contract, which space was about twice what we have had in previous years. We have not devoted a great amount of money to advertising in the past year but have run contract ads in several papers and after giving all a trial test we have come to the conclusion that it is better to increase our ad in your paper than spend money on advertisements that do not bring us the same return.

A few months ago we gave several trade papers the same amount of space and can conscientiously say that your paper brought us at east five times the returns of any of the others. We expect large return from the ads we are sending you for next month, advertising our new catalog, and are quite certain we will not be disappointed.

Introducing Characters

Novel Plan Adopted by Lasky in "The Ghost Breaker" and "Cameo Kirby" to Identify Principal Players.

IN TWO of its recent productions the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. has shown methods of introducing the characters so novel as to create a great deal of comment. This problem, which has always been one of the admitted problems of the business, was solved very happily both in "The Ghost Breaker" and "Cameo Kirby," the most recent of the Lasky releases and the next one forthcoming.

It is an admitted fact that the introduction of characters in a legitimate play is apt to become confusing unless the audience pays very close attention, and this is in spite of the fact that the action moves far more deliberately than in a photodrama and the lines spoken by the artists carefully identify the various individuals. To avoid any misunderstandings of the plot it has for some time been customary, in the case of photodrama, to introduce the characters upon the screen one at a time prior to the beginning of the action.

When this was first done it was generally in one routine manner—the character appeared before a curtain, bowed and disappeared. Soon, managers with more imagination made the innovation of showing the characters each in some bit of characteristic action or at least in characteristic pose. But for sheer ingenuity, combined with the origination of the appropriate atmosphere, the two productions already mentioned—H. B. Warner in "The Ghost Breaker" and Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby"—are worth a word of special comment.

"The Ghost Breaker" is a play about ancient castles with a modern hero and heroine—American hero and noble Spanish heroine. The artistic desire was to create an atmosphere, so to speak, of the modern in ancient surroundings. The opening of the picture, therefore, was devised so as to show the gallery of family portraits in an ancient castle with the modern American hero proceeding from picture to picture. As he pauses before each picture the ancient painting—which might almost be said to be the ancestor of the character in the play—changes and is replaced by the modern descendant of the subject. In this manner the characters are presented to the audience, and, at the same time, an atmosphere of antiquity, combined with surprise and novelty, the main attributes of the drama itself, is obtained.

Every one who has ever seen the play will remember that in "Cameo Kirby" Dustin Farnum plays the role of a gentleman gambler of the South. In fact, the romance which concludes the drama is made possible only by his renunciation of games of chance. Therefore, it is the suggestion of the chances of the game, and the greater chances of human destiny, that the director seeks to convey at the very outset.

At the very beginning of the picture we see Farnum at the gaming table, cards in hand. Then the cards are thrown upon the screen and from each emerges one of the characters. The spirit of the game of life which is to be interpreted is thus revealed.

Just as the first act of a legitimate drama is important mainly for giving the right impressions of conditions and individuals, so is the first act of a film important in the same manner. And nothing can go further toward putting the audience in the right receptive mood than the right presentation of the persons of the plot. The artistic effort and strain of ingenuity thus displayed is consequently well recompensed.

Pictures the Children Like

F. H. Madison.

AN industrial picture showing the removal of stumps by dynamite was so vividly described by Eloise Beebe, a seventh grade pupil at Davenport, Ia., that it won her the prize of twenty-five admission tickets offered by the Friendly House association in its contest to get the best expression by children on the subject of their preference in moving pictures. Other answers from the youngsters, showing their choice in films and the reasons included:

Sixth Grade boy—Panama Canal.—He was so interested in the motion picture of the Panama Canal that he went to the public library for books to follow the subject further in books.

Girl—drama.—"I liked this picture because it showed kindness and thoughtfulness of the little boy."

Girl—scenic.—"The reason I liked this picture is because it has helped me in my geography, and in my composition work."

Boy.—"The pictures which I liked best were those which showed the way animals and birds live."

Girl.—"Those I like best are the 'educationals' of the different things one may never see in life."

Boy.—"The picture I like best is Mutt and Jeff, because the little man Jeff was nock on the bricks and he seen stars and when he got up he had a balk and blue eye and he had a boump on the back of his head, and his colths was toure and he! he! Mutt was a brick."

Girl—comedy.—"One afternoon I went to the Friendly House, and when I came out I was sick to my stomach, I had laughed so much."

Boy—Western.—"When I go to a picture show I generally look for a place where they have a western drama, because in these western dramas generally there is such pretty scenery. Another thing is, a western picture is generally exciting and thrilling, which I like."

Early replies to the Minneapolis, Minn., Tribune include the following reasons why children go to the picture shows:

To forget their troubles.
Because they are unhappy.
It is the best rest for a tired person.
Because it is lonesome at home.
They have nothing else to do.

Boys evidenced a liking for cowboys, Indians and comedy policemen.

Early returns in Minneapolis showed the popularity of the following dramas: "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Trey O' Hearts," "The Million Dollar Mystery" and "The Perils of Pauline."

Dorothy Bernard

DOROTHY BERNARD, the clever little twenty-four year old English girl, who recently closed her engagement in New York with "The Salamander" under the direction of Selwyn & Co., has joined the Lubin forces and has been assigned to Mr. Barry O'Neil's Company.

Miss Bernard was born in South Africa. Her father and mother were in one of the first English stock companies to play in Africa. By her third birthday Miss Bernard had been in Australia and India and had come to America with her parents who were with Charles Frohman. When she was nine years of age Miss Bernard went to Australia with Nance O'Neil's company, then back to San Francisco to the Grand Opera House Stock. From there she went to Los Angeles and Portland playing child parts for the famous old Belasco and Burbank Stock Companies.

Dorothy Bernard.

At seventeen years of age Miss Bernard was one of the most popular ingenue leading women on the Western Coast. From then on her life has been a most interesting one. She was in stock with Vaughan Glaser in Detroit, in vaudeville with William Courtleigh and leading woman for Shubert in "The Ringmaster." For two years she was with the Biograph under the direction of D. W. Griffith, and played some of their most important roles.

After her work with the Biograph Miss Bernard went back to the stage at the Columbia theatre in Washington, D. C., where she played for two seasons. Last year she was starred there. Miss Bernard has played all sorts of parts from Puckers in "Prince Chap" and Topsy to musical comedy and big emotional leading parts.

Miss Bernard says she is very glad to be back in pictures again and hopes and expects, in them, to do the best work of her career.

William Horsley Visits New York

Superintendent of Construction of the Universal Company Says West Coast City is Nearly Finished.

AFTER a stay in Universal City for seven months, William Horsley, superintendent of construction of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been in New York City on a flying trip. He returned to the coast this week. Mr. Horsley says he believes Universal City will be a completed fact by February 1, that the new municipality is now seven-eighths finished.

While Mr. Horsley arrived at the coast early in May, it was six weeks before he could break ground by reason of waiting for the harvesting of the enormous crop of oats and barley in which the ranch was planted. While there are 290 acres in the city, owing to hills the area of the plant is reduced in acreage to about 230. About 40 acres are really level. A 30-foot boulevard has been constructed at a cost of $16,000. This highway runs for three-quarters of a mile. On every 100 feet have been laid 65 tons of rock. Over 20,000 cubic yards of clay had to be removed. The ranch extends for an even mile along the Los Angeles River, the course of which was changed considerably by the storm of last spring. A bridge and dam have been constructed here of reinforced concrete, which will be of value in making river and waterfall scenes.

William Horsley.

All of the buildings are of hollow tile or reinforced concrete and plastered with a cement making it absolutely white. By combining the facilities of the two stages—the one on the front of the ranch is 300 feet in length and the one at the rear 200 feet—thirty-five directors can work at one time. The possibilities for the making of pictures, Mr. Horsley says, are practically unlimited. "We have provided every facility we can think of," he added.

The laboratory will contain equipment for the finishing of the negative and the preparation of one sample copy for shipping east. At the rear of the ranch sanitary arrangements have been provided to care for a city of 3,500 persons and at the front there is provision for 5,000. All electric wires and telegraph and telephone connections have been placed underground. On the rear of the ranch two miles of sewers have been built and also one and a half miles of storm drain. At the front more than twice these facilities have been provided.

In a circular announcing that the Universal company is to dedicate Universal City on March 15 President Carl Laemmle invites those of the trade who may be intending a visit to the Panama Exposition to stop off at the new western home of the Universal and see what the company has created in the way of picture making facilities. He says further: "If you can't be there on that particular day we want you to come when you can. Welcome to our city!"

World Film to Share Profits

Company Announces Details of Plan Under Which All Employes Will Participate in Increased Business.

THERE has just been issued a twelve-page booklet entitled "Lewis J. Selznick Profit Sharing Plan for Employes of World Film Corporation." It is the result of several months' work by the officials of the company. The fact is noted on the title page that the pamphlet is "not only for the benefit of our employes but in the hope that other companies will adopt similar plans to increase the efficiency, happiness and rewards of their employes."

Through conferences between the district manager and branch manager there will be established a sum which will serve as the basis for computation of bonuses. It is said that in determining this minimum it is the intention to make it a fair one so that each manager will be given full opportunity to increase it. After the figure is established each manager will be entitled to a premium, in increasing ratio, on every hundred dollars of added business. For instance, on the first hundred it will be $2.50, and on the tenth hundred $25, so that for $1,000 of added business the bonus will total $137.50. One-tenth of this sum shall be set aside for the benefit of subordinate employes, to which the home office will add an equal amount. This will be disbursed in proportion to the amount of salary received by each.

Three months' employment is necessary to entitle one to share in the benefits of the plan, although at the end of the period following an employe will be entitled to his fractional share of the first period. It is stated that in allotting bonuses for increased business the cost of securing it will be taken into consideration. This same ruling also will apply to the prizes of $100, $50 and $25 which will be allotted every four weeks to those managers making the best record. The plan became effective on November 30.

Employes of the home office will participate according to their salaries in 2 per cent. of the excess in gross cash collections over the total of minimums established for all the branches. Where the distribution in the branches will be every month that of the home office will be every three months. Those eligible to benefits are divided into five general classes, as follows: Division managers, branch managers, salesmen, branch office employes and home office employes.

BOSWORTH IN CANDLER BUILDING.

In order to be in the heart of the film district, the New York headquarters of Bosworth, Inc., have been moved uptown to a suite of offices on the eighteenth floor of the Candler Building, at 220 West 42d Street. Installation of the furnishings is now nearing completion, and it is expected that by the time Special Representative Carl H. Pierce returns to New York the offices will be fully equipped and in smooth running order.

Mr. Pierce is now finishing up a tour of the Bosworth exchanges and will be back in town the latter part of this week, when he will take active charge of the new offices. He will make out-of-town tours from time to time, to look after Bosworth interests and boost the game generally, towards which end he already has done much. During the absence of Mr. Pierce the New York headquarters will be under the management of Julian M. Solomon, Jr.

Powers Opposes High Admission

Veteran Motion Picture Man Does Not Approve Movement To Increase Prices—Big Money is In Nickel Shows.

P. A. POWERS, president of the United Film Service, is a strong "anti" in the movement set on foot by important New York photoplay interests to raise the prices of admission for projection entertainment. Powers claims that motion-picture entertainment is destined to remain a low-priced form of attraction—that it cannot escape classification as a sort of variety and that the endeavor to place it on a plane with the spoken drama will fail.

"The trouble with the motion picture business," said Mr. Powers, "is harmful competition. The wrong way to attempt to solve this problem is by attempting to raise prices. Such a move is a risky step, and while large capacity and big volume of business may dictate an increase in the figure charged for seats in certain photoplay houses, the motion-picture business is primarily a five-cent proposition and will so remain.

"There has been no increase in the intrinsic cost of producing; rather is the misguided ambition of the man who seeks to place the motion picture on a plane with theatrical productions who is to blame—in other words, the exhibitor who thinks he is adding 'class' to the business by having a few autos stand in front of his theatre, and therefore thinks he is privileged to charge a bigger price. It is the embellishments of the picture programs that have caused the increase in the cost of service. It is the orchestras, the vocalists, the intermixing of the elements of photo entertainment, vaudeville and concert."

"Motion pictures are inherently a brief-bill, small-coin attraction, holding a place all their own in the amusement world, and the sooner the men who are trying to make it a 'big' show get back to basic principles—to the truism that the film play is minimum-priced amusement for the masses—so soon will the cost-of-admission problem be solved.

"The nickel-man is responsible for the establishment of the business. He grew rich charging nickels. He will grow poor charging quarters, take it from me. Get back into the variety classification; drop inordinate ambitions to overlap the boundaries of a branch of diversion designed to fill a certain one. And stick to the original program—single reelers, with an occasional big subject. Your chance of pleasing your audience is diminished in proportion to the length of the film shown. Where short reels are flashed on the screen, it is a safe bet that one of the usual three shown for a nickel will please the patron, a supposition soundly supported by the logic that the particular mood or leaning of the patrons, be it for Westerns, love story or comedy, is encompassed by the ideal program and that was the purpose of the originators of the nickel shows. On the other hand, where you attempt to impress with loudly heralded all-feature shows, you will discover and are discovering, that the five-reel or six-reel subject, preempting the entire evening, will fail to please the moods of many of those present, and the program failing to provide the variety so essential to success in conducting a film theatre, will depart bored and with a feeling of having been cheated, never to return.

"I do not believe in exclusive 'feature' shows. I think it can be truthfully stated that the biggest factor in the vogue attained by the motion picture has been 'convenience.' By that I mean the absence of the preparations attendant on spending a night at the theatre playing theatrical attractions and the easy proximity of the picture enterprise to the home, due to its encroachment on residential neighborhoods. In billing 'features' as his regular picture fare for his clientele, the exhibitor strikes at the very foundation on which the film is builded. His argument is that in presenting a big star in films he is justified in playing the five or six reel feature and also is justified in charging prices even to the denomination of three figures. In other words, he believes that because of his presentations of the heroes and heroines of the legitimate stage in film versions, he is entitled to rank himself with the producers who present these stars in the flesh. That his premise is wrong is proven by the fact that no 'feature' play has lasted a year at its original high prices. The picture clientele goes to see the 'pictures,' those that are interested in the drama go to see 'stars,' except for a few men and women, who, because of the recurrent appearances in films and excellent characterization have caused themselves to be singled out by picture patrons, the 'star system' is all wrong in pictures.

"Why the picture purveyor should take it on himself to seek a division of the field with the theatrical managers is inconceivable to me. There is no bond of sympathy, no relation between the two. Even to the acting, the methods are different. In a business sense, it is apparent that, with his expenditures in salary, transportation, play royalties, booking and persistent advertising in the course of a 'run', the theatrical manager has no option but to charge a two-dollar scale for premiere plays and a dollar for stock revivals and second city 'runs.' Premieres and 'road companies' to the picture manager simply mean 'copies.' Thirty or forty 'copies' sent to as many cities would be equivalent, in a theatrical sense, to as many 'road companies.' The cost of installing the companies in the various cities would be prohibitive, the risk of the production increased thirty or forty-fold, the violation of the laws of economy in talent and investiture monstrous and impossible in both physical and artistic directions. Several days of darkroom activity, packing in tin cases and letting the expressman do the rest—that disposes of 'road companies' so far as filmdom is concerned.

"Many exhibitors who are charging twenty-five cents for their shows are losing money. If the grade of their shows merit a deviation from the five-cent principle, they could make money by reducing to a ten-cent fee. I have also found that many exhibitors who charge ten cents are piling up deficits. By returning to the original admission figure for motion-picture entertainment they could do a profitable business.

"As I said before, the motion-picture business is primarily a five-cent sort of entertainment, filling a niche that it cannot get away from, and as soon as this fact is realized, and the bubble methods of exploiting and expanding the picture business into something it can never be are dropped, so soon will the exhibitors' troubles cease. In the meantime, he stands a fine chance to lose all he has ever made by listening to the specious arguments of the man who would work wonders."

UNIVERSAL EMPLOYEES TO DANCE.

Invitations have been issued for the second annual ball and Yuletide festival of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company employees, which will be held at the Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street, between Lexington and Third avenues, on the evening of Saturday, December 26. Dancing will begin at 8:30 o'clock. The ball of a year ago is still remembered by those who were so fortunate as to be present. Preparations for the coming function have been under way for many weeks, and the committee promises that the second dance will be even better than the first.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Damon and Pythias.

NAT E. SOLOMONS, an accomplished and capable musical director of long experience, is turning his attention to the possibilities of orchestra music as an accompaniment to moving pictures. Here is his letter:

"I am a constant reader of the Moving Picture World and have followed the development of the pictures for some years; have had at different times (as well as at present) orchestras of from five to fifteen men under my direction, and it is natural, of course, to read the stories of the pictures in order to select the proper music for accompanying them. Was particularly interested in the magnificent production of 'Damon and Pythias,' and at the suggestion of my managers here (the Messrs. Mellinger Bros., of the Maryland Theatre —a beautiful house seating 1,800 people—of Cumberland, Maryland), I am sending you my musical program as we played it for that picture."

Damon and Pythias.

First Reel.

(1) Introductory March, "Cocheco," by Ernest Reeves.
(2) "Persian Princess Waltz," by A. H. Auracher. (Twice through—scenic views.)

Second Reel.

(3) "Fanfanni March," by Suppe; to introduce the characters. (Twice through.)
(4) "Softly Unawares," by Paul Linke; half through.
(5) "Midnight Fire Alarm," march by H. J. Lincoln; twice through.

Third Reel.

(6) "Kathleen Waltz," by Leo Orean Smith. Once through, and the last strain three or four times.
(7) "Air de Ballet," by C. Chaminade; twice through—until finish of Ballet.
(8) "The Vampire Waltz," by Al. B. Coney; twice through.
(9) "The Burning of Rome," march, by E. T. Paul; three times through.
(10) "A Signal from Mars," march, by R. Taylor; twice through and temper to situations.
(11) "Egyptia," by Abe Olman; once through.

Fourth Reel.

(12) "Zallah," by Loraine; three times.
(13) "Ben Hur Chariot Race," by E. T. Paul; two or three times.
(14) "Triumphal March from 'Aida,'" by Verdi; twice through.

Fifth Reel.

(15) "Flower of Love Waltz," by Geo. L. Cobb; once and half.
(16) "Nuvida," intermezzo, by E. B. Claypoole; twice through.

Sixth Reel.

(17) "Love Moods," waltz, by Geo. J. Trinkaus; twice through.
(18) "Stolen Moments," by Leo Friedman; twice and coda.
(19) "Gold and Silver," waltz, by Franz Lehar; from tempo di valse—then valse No. 1, first and second strains only, until end of reel.
(20) Exit March—"The King's Escort," by F. H. Loosey.

Readers of this department who may have the "Damon and Pythias" picture to play for later will no doubt appreciate Mr. Solomons' suggestions for the musical program. It includes some good descriptive stuff which, in the hands of a leader of Mr. Solomons' theatrical experience, can be tempered to suit the various situations. Indeed, he calls attention to this in No. 10—a march. I would respectfully suggest, however, that the program could have been made more practical had he given us "cues" for beginning and stopping some of the numbers; either from the action or the titles and announcements on the screen. All leaders do not play the same numbers at the same identical tempo, and all operators do not run the pictures at the same speed. For this reason the directions "twice through" or "two or three times through" are not quite as definite as they should be. Some of us are not sufficiently experienced to realize why certain music should be appropriate for certain scenes, and they will follow the program blindly—and perhaps will not obtain the same results they might have had the directions been more explicit. However, we are all under obligations to Mr. Solomons and hope he will come again.

Studies the Characters Too.

Miss Florence L. Currier of the Gem Theatre, Barton, Vermont, says:

"Some one wants a definition of 'dramatized music,' and it isn't so easy to give, but briefly it means: first, get your plot or theme of the complete story to be shown on the screen and make a thorough study of it. Second, make just as careful study of the characters, and if you have been playing to the pictures any length of time you will easily recognize just how Miss Y— or Mr. B— will handle that particular character part; then, forgetting your audience and yourself, watch the picture and the unfolding of the plot and counterplots. If you have started an adaptable theme do not be too anxious to change at every cut-back or change of scene, but don't adhere so closely that you will run Mendelssohn's 'Spring Song' into a violent or tragic scene, or the last movement of 'William Tell' overture into a serene sunset. In other words, be careful in choosing your principal theme and then remember that changes in tempo may be so made as to handle a great many scenes properly. Be particularly careful about changing keys—it is almost always noticeable, and detracts from the photoplay. If you have a wait between reels of a feature or two-part drama, keep your theme always before your audience, and do not make the fatal mistake of interjecting a tango or two-step at a time when it is imperative to keep the story in the mind of the audience. Never play loudly in an emotional drama and remember about the wonderful modulations in key changes —put your soul into the picture and learn to improvise properly. In comedies, however, forget all this and 'cut loose.' No one wants an entire meal of roast beef; add the salads and dessert in the form of popular airs and tangos—not forgetting at the present moment 'Tipperary' and similar songs as well as the airs from the light operas which are very pleasing this season. Follow Wilkie Collins' advice—'make 'em laugh, make 'em cry.' But do everything in its right place. Your audience becomes more critical every night; if you don't believe this, all you have to do is to listen to the comments on the photoplays and the very just criticism on the many impossible and ludicrous incidents shown therein. Your music is being criticised in exactly the same way if you are bungling it. We solved our popular music problem in a very simple way. My article appearing in the Moving Picture World told how, but if any one cares to go into the matter more thoroughly, I am willing to help if I can and inquirers send stamped and self-addressed envelope."

The article referred to by Miss Currier appeared in a July number of the Moving Picture World and explains a method of selling the music at a slight reduction after having used it a week thus reducing her music bill. I predict she will get lots of inquiries, and that some of them will include a stamped envelope.

I don't quite understand the assertion that "changing keys almost always detracts from the photoplay." Of course we all admit that a very abrupt change of key is apt to be conspicuous, particularly if forte. To my taste a close adherence to one key is apt to grow monotonous. Later on she says: "Remember about the wonderful modulations in key changes," so I presume she also likes chord progressions occasionally. A peculiar thing in writing about music for the picture is that when a person makes any kind of assertion or tries to formulate a rule he generally has to qualify his remarks or note a lot of exceptions. I think the above is a case in point. Probably if she writes it again Miss Currier will say: "Be particularly careful about changing keys; it is apt to be noticeable and detract from the photoplay if not used with judgment and discrimination."

Wanted—A Common Vocabulary.

The first part of Miss Currier's letter quoted above relates to the definition of the term "dramatized music." Two or three writers have given us their ideas of the meaning of the expression and what it conveyed to them. Miss Currier thinks it includes a study and consequent familiarity with the peculiarities of the moving picture actors. Maybe it does. I have never heard that part of it before, but if it means that to the lady, then she is perfectly right in her contention. She is telling us what idea the expression conveys to her.

The point I am trying to bring out is the fact that many of our expressions (now becoming common to M. P. musicians) do not convey the same idea at all, and for that reason they fail of their purport. Why not get together in some way and agree upon an exact meaning for some of our expressions—or for all of them so far as possible. These for a starter:

"Improvising for the picture."

There are many other musical expressions and terms which—as applied to picture work—are gradually attaining a subtle definition of their own. Let us hear from the readers; what do these terms mean to you?

"Runaway June Company"

Mutual's New Feature Will Include Many Well-Known Screen Artists.

OVER sixty: There are more than that number of capable actors and actresses, chosen with special regard for the requirements of the story to be told on the film, who will appear in the initial installment of "Runaway June," the novel written especially for the Reliance Motion Picture Company by George Randolph Chester, writer of the Wallingford stories and an author dear to the heart of the American public, and wife, Lillian Chester. The scenario on which the fifteen installment photoplay of "Runaway June" is based is by Marc Edmund Jones, and Oscar Eagle is the director who has been selected to make this important production.

J. W. Johnstone who formerly played leads with Eclaire is to appear as Ned Warner, the young bridegroom in "Runaway June," and June herself is to be visualized for the movies fans by Miss Norma Phillips. Old Aunt Debby, the negro cook in the Moore household and a character George Randolph Chester has apparently loved writing about, will be impersonated by Miss Myra Brooks who formerly distinguished herself by her work in the company of the late Richard Mansfield. Miss Winifred Burke, a well-known motion picture star, will be seen as the svelte and interesting Iris Blethering, June's closest friend, and Mademoiselle Evelyn Dumo has come all the way from Paris to play the part of Marie, maid in the Moore household, and incidentally afford herself and her parents, left peniless by three sons who have died for France on the Aisne, an adequate living.

One of the more important roles in the play, that of Albert Bly, the man with the black Vandyke, in the wake of whose motor all the crowd comes streaming, will be embodied for screen purposes by Arthur Donladson who will be remembered by appreciative audiences the country over from the cast of "The Prince of Pilsen."

Willat Laboratory in Full Swing

The Big Plant at Fort Lee Now Turning Out Finished Product for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

IN a recent visit to the Willat Studios and Laboratories at Fort Lee a World man was shown about the laboratory by President Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. In the spacious executive offices Mr. Kessel showed the drawings for the projected eight-foot ornamental fence which is to surround the property on the two street sides. It will be 350 feet long on one side and 600 feet on the second. The fence will be so constructed as to make it available for backgrounds. Across from the office is the shipping department. Running along one side of the big factory building for 80 feet is the assembling room. Here also is a little printing office with a good supply of type for titles and inserts and also a job press. At the rear is the negative room and the testing room.

In the printing room forty-five Bell & Howell printers are installed, together with six Moyer printers. There will be sixty of the former machines when the plant is complete. There are also eighteen Bell & Howell perforators. A big projection room completes the equipment of the main floor.

In the basement are the boiler room and the hot water supply. Under the street is a big vault for the storage of raw stock. There is a good sized ice-making machine. Then one enters the drying room, filled with drums and racks, tinting and toning baths and washing tanks. There is also an elaborate installation of spraying apparatus. Connecting with these are the negative developing room, the positive developing room and the room where the positive is prepared for developing.

It is a fine plant, and it will furnish the New York Motion Picture Corporation with abundant facilities for making the most of the excellent negative which comes to it from the Pacific Coast.

Rienzi de Cordova in "A Man's Shadow"

TOM TERRISS, who is putting on the famous Terriss plays for the Kinetophote, has picked his cast for the first of this series of plays. He has chosen for the first of these pictures, "A Man's Shadow," one of the pieces which was made famous by William Terriss at the Adelphi theater in London.

In taking the people for the cast, Mr. Terriss has been careful in selecting those who will look the part and also make the piece a thorough American production in so far as the representation in the play from this side of the Atlantic is concerned.

Rienzi de Cordova.

As has been announced, Mr. Terriss will have for his leading woman, Anna Luther, who has been starred for some time in the Lubin pictures. For the Viscount Acheson of the story he will have Lionel Pape, who is as thorough going an Englishman as ever came to America to put his type of Briton on the stage. Rienzi de Cordova, a British subject, who might have come straight from London, but who was born in Jamaica, is the Craig Dare of the piece. Mr. de Cordova has played in America for years, having been under the Frohman management where he appeared with Richard Mansfield, Henry Miller and Maude Adams. In pictures he has done heavy leads for Kalem and others.

Among others in the cast are Alfred Heming, Alfred Palmer, Walter Kingsford, William Lewin, Cornish Beck, Katheryn Adams, Millie Liston and not to forget Millie Terriss, who is the joy and pride of the household of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Terriss.

Work on "A Man's Shadow" was begun last week and already several hundred feet of the film has been seen at the projection room of the Kinetophote. From the apparent looks of what has been made, the Kinetophote will have one of the best features it has yet produced.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

CATHOLICS TO USE EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

Organize Theograph Film Company, Inc., to Manufacture Religious Subjects—Rev. Yorke Says This Work Has Been Neglected.

THE Theograph Film Company, incorporated at San Francisco on Aug. 4 by leading Catholic educators and business men of California, has opened offices in the Merchants' National Bank Building, that city, and is now preparing to enter the field of Catholic religious instruction and to supply students of all grades with an equipment as up to date and as scientific as can be found in any institution. The Rev. Peter C. Yorke, D.D., a prominent divine and educator of San Francisco, is one of the leaders in the movement to make use of motion pictures in Catholic schools and is very enthusiastic on the subject. In outlining this proposition he says:

"The use of pictures in the art of teaching has been appreciated from the beginning by all whose duty it has been to impart instruction, not only to the young, but also to those of more mature minds. In fact, modern art sprang from the desire to reinforce the preachings of religious truth by the aid of the eye. Painting, mosaic, sculpture, stained glass, the drama itself, all found their beginnings in the attempt of the church to bring home, as forcibly as possible, to cultured and uncultured alike, the great teachings of the faith.

"In our days, especially since the discovery of photography, school text-books of all kinds have been profusely illustrated, and teachers have found these illustrations of the greatest value, not only in exciting the interest of the children, but also in making clearer and more vivid the lesson of the text. The progressive improvements in the stereopticon have been seized on by instructors, from the highest grades to the lowest, to facilitate their work and to render it more effective.

"The motion picture, originally regarded as merely an ingenious toy, has become in a few years one of the most popular forms of amusement and recreation in every part of the globe. Its possibilities for instruction and research were soon realized and made available. It may be truly said that there is no domain of human experience, thought or knowledge untouched by the enterprise of the motion picture manufacturers. One field, however, has been almost entirely neglected, and that is the field of religious education. Some Biblical subjects have been attempted, but more for the purpose of entertainment than instruction.

"In entering upon this enterprise several requisites have to be met. The first of these is organization and grading. In every system of education we must not only have the matter, but we must have the manner of presenting it. Now, at the bottom of every effective manner is the problem of grading. We must take into account the age and capacity and need of the pupils dealt with. We must minister milk to babes and strong meat to men."

The Theograph Film Company has secured this first requisite by acquiring the motion picture rights in "The Text Books of Religion for Parochial and Sunday Schools," by the Rev. Peter C. Yorke, D.D." These books are published in San Francisco and have a wide use throughout the United States.

Another requisite is religious reverence in the production of the sacred subjects. The Theograph Film Company has secured this essential by the organization of a corps of actors to whom the subjects in question will not be mere matters of dramatic rendition, but deep and vital truths of their personal religious life.

It is also announced that the company has secured the exclusive rights to a new projection machine, said to be extremely simple in construction, and safe from all dangers of fire. The directors of the company are: Richard M. Tobin, Joseph Scott, Wm. F. Humphrey, J. T. Harrington, John Wallace, George Fraser and Frank H. Doyle, the two latter being expert photographers.

THE CLERGYMAN AS AN EXHIBITOR.

THE popularity of the moving picture as an aid to religious, social and educational work is growing rapidly indeed, it would seem as though the churches and ministers are rapidly becoming the best friends of the moving picture; of course, this is in its educational and entertaining values. While this growth is widespread and continually increasing, there are many ministers still asking for guidance and help that it may serve a valuable purpose to publish the following experience of a clergyman in the city of Hartford, Conn. It should be stated at the outset that this is perhaps the most extreme instance which has come to our notice, but as the Rev. H. E. Robbins has set forth his reasons and experiences in such logical order we deemed them worthy of repetition here.

WHY I OPENED A MOVING PICTURE HOUSE.

By the Reverend H. E. Robbins.

FIRST—That the motion picture theater has an attractive power surpassing anything ever offered to the public for recreation.

SECOND—It is not costly. In fact, in well populated sections the best service may be offered for 5 and 10 cents. It is the cheapest way that the poor can be entertained, and therefore, added to its attractive power is the fact that the price of admission places it within the reach of every one.

THIRD—It speaks in all languages. Little children can instantly catch the meaning. And foreigners who cannot read our books, can and do read our pictures. Therefore they are in a peculiar way a great teaching agency, moulding the thought and speaking to the great mixture of foreigners who are Americans in the making, and to children who are Americans in the growing stage.

FOURTH—The temptation of the producer of films is to cater to the wishes of the exhibitor who in turn usually believes that the sensational and the suggestive will appeal strongly to the shallow and the prurient. This was so much the case that a National Board of Censorship was established. And even under the not harsh censorship of the Board the makers of films and the exhibitors of the pictures chafe and fret continually, if we may believe the motion picture magazines.

As evidence that the censorship as now exercised is not strict enough for many, I may state that Chicago has established a Municipal Board of Censorship, which, I have been told, alters in some way nine out of ten films allowed by it to pass, and rejects more than 50 per cent. In other words, about one film in twenty is passed intact. I cannot vouch for the above figures. My information came from a film salesman.

FIFTH—With a large number of people the motion picture theater does not find favor, and its possibilities to amuse and instruct as well as uplift are ignored. A number of men past middle life have told me in the last few days that my theater is the first that they ever entered, and that they had never seen or thought that they cared to see motion pictures. Another man said that he sent his young son away to school in order to avoid the attractions of the "movie houses."

SIXTH—Nothing, so far as I have observed, has been seriously attempted by the churches to either guide or to use this tremendous force that is now in contact with untold millions every afternoon and evening of the week.

The pulpit has scolded about it in that delightfully safe way that the pulpit has of scolding. Such work as that would be about as effective of correcting the situation as a Summer zephyr would have in blowing over a mountain.

Other clergymen have made feeble, yes, ludicrous attempts to meet the problem by showing pictures in parish houses, churches and in Y. M. C. A's. The films which such places show are called by the trade name of "junk."

The stupidest, cheapest and most insipid films are held for a while by the big companies as junk for churches, after which they are sent to the wilds of South America.

Therefore the church motion picture is "pain and grief" to the spectator, a joke to the motion picture man, and probably a source of much satisfaction to the parson, or the Y. M. C. A. secretary, who feels that he has really done something along the line of social service which is quite worth while. As a matter of fact, what he did was to bore a few good people who came because it was for the benefit of the church.

Finally, people of all classes ought to have recreation, restful and clean. They must and will have some kind of recreation. The pleasures of this world are as necessary to a well-ordered, sane and happy people as are the riches of this world, both of which Jesus said were dangerous, and both of which we know to be necessary and in need of guidance.

When the late distinguished Bishop Potter attempted to establish a church saloon he called down on his saintly head the anathemas of thousands of his former friends. That effort proved a failure because the saloon is in itself evil and needs not regeneration, but extermination by being replaced with something else.

Taking all this into consideration, then I was both interested and aroused when the Rev. Charles Stelzle, social service expert, outlined his plan for establishing high class moving picture service. I drove more than a thousand miles around Connecticut in an automobile investigating the local amusement situations.

In every little town the parsons spoke unkindly of the motion pictures shown locally. In one town of fifteen hundred people, pictures are shown every week, and the films are selected by a boy of fifteen, who has his own ideas about blood and thunder and such heroes as "Home Run Baker." I decided, therefore, that I would use my spare time and earn the money I have to earn in order to make a fair living by establishing a high-class picture service. Through the influence of some friends and the fairness of the owners of the building I was able to lease and open the Star theater, which, as I have said, is a picture house de luxe.

I am showing such pictures as "Thirty Leagues Under the Sea," "The Fall of Carthage," and have booked the highest class and price photo drama, comedy and current events that are to be obtained.

Saturday mornings I have a children's matinee, when such stories as the "Vicar of Wakefield" are told in pictures with children's funny pictures, and children's music with a full orchestra.

Every move has been taken only after advising with men whose friendship, ability and interest in society are undoubted. I realize that I know nothing about business, and very little about motion pictures as a business, but whether I shall succeed or fail, I believe that my experiment will have been of value if it will arouse the men who can do things and want to do things to some action which will utilize the force and take advantage of the opportunity offered by motion pictures. I may say in closing that I have had some very helpful and enthusiastic endorsements from clergymen and laymen of the highest class.

NEWS ITEMS OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS.

The use of moving pictures in churches in Georgia is increasing. Newspapers from that state say that "the use of moving pictures to aid all branches of Sunday work has been much discussed." As a result there is a general desire for their adoption. In Waycross the Central Baptist Church has been the first in that town to install a machine and satisfactory results are anticipated.

Michigan has always looked favorably upon the educational value of the moving picture, so that it is no surprise to read of any progress in that state, where it is natural to note that additional uses are being made of the kinematographic method of illustrating lectures and other subjects. In the First Methodist Church of Saginaw the pastor has decided that an equipment of moving pictures "is one of the best forms of imparting and illustrating truth." The first use of the pictures are to illustrate a lecture by W. Blanchard Moore on Siberia, Russia, and Count Tolstoi. In Chicago Mr. Moore's lectures have been most successful and the wider use of them will be beneficial.

From Buenos Aires comes the news that "Cinema educational lectures are both popular and successful." At the persent time Dr. W. P. McLaughlin is lecturing on Belgium, in the American Church Hall, with most encouraging results. The newspaper report says: "On some occasions upwards of five hundred children have crowded the hall and gone in raptures over the wonderful moving pictures." Films illustrative of Russian, French and English history are also well received. It is evident from these reports that educational pictures of the most serious and studious kind are acceptable, and in these places manufacturers of educational subjects will be encouraged to send their catalogues with good results in view.

In Minneapolis "The Tribune" has been giving the children an opportunity to answer questions relative to their knowledge and judgment of the moving pictures.

"Why do you go to the pictures?" is the first question asked, and, while the answers have not yet been tabulated, a few specimens show the tendencies of the juvenile mind. A good answer is given by one as being "A good place to rest for tired persons." That a child should write of the picture house as "a good place to go to forget troubles" seems somewhat mature, yet how often has the dreariness of school lessons, and the drudgery of home duties, sought a relief which the moving picture now affords; these answers coupled with one that "it is so lonesome at home" very plainly show that even the young life is sometimes joyless and dreary, that the moving picture can bring sunshine and happiness in these lives is the first step towards making the pictures educationally helpful as well as bright and attractive. It is further noted that the schools are encouraging the children to answer the questions, a further notice of which we hope to review later.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The General Film Co. has just issued a new catalog of educational films in which they call special attention to the number of subjects which have been added since the last issue. The publication is very thorough, world wide in its scope and will be a great help to all those interested in educational moving pictures.

The Church and Social Service Bureau after casting off its titled encumbrance, opened its new offices, 80 Fifth avenue, New York, recently with a reception for clergymen and people of kindred interest in the use of educational pictures. A goodly number of people thronged the offices and projection rooms for many hours, machines and pictures were on exhibition and much interest was evinced by all who attended. The President of the bureau, Rev. Wm. Carter, was most cordial in his greetings to all and was ably assisted by the Rev. Roland S. Dawson.

"Damon and Pythias" is the latest addition to the valuable films, forming a complete, interesting and instructive entertainment. Released by the Universal Film Co. from the scenario written by James Dayton and Ruth Ann Baldwin, and produced at great cost of time and money under the most favorable conditions the bright California sunlight could permit. Great fidelity has been shown to the strength of this wonderful story of friendship, as also to the costumes and scenic effects. A metropolitan paper, in commenting upon the first exhibition says: "Damon and Pythias deserves to rank as one of the most magnificent moving picture productions that has ever been presented. It is cleanly acted and devoid of sensationalism.

SUNDAY PICTURE LECTURES EDUCATIONAL.

So Says Secretary of Socialist League—Ecclesiastical Organizations' Opposition Unfounded.

THAT the Sunday moving picture lectures at the Lyceum Theater, Pittsburgh, are educational in their nature and designed to assist in the mental development of working people is the contention of Dr. W. J. Van Essen, secretary of the Pittsburgh Socialist Educational League, who believes the opposition of certain church organizations to such lectures to be unfair and not well considered. His letter outlining these views follows:

Editor: Just a few lines relative to the opposition to moving picture lectures that the Pittsburgh Socialist Educational League is holding Sunday afternoons in the Lyceum Theater. I notice in the papers of Pittsburgh that certain Sabbath organizations are opposed to them.

The lectures in question are purely educational in character, the films being used to illustrate the subject lectured on, a method that many ministers use in conjunction with their sermons.

The picture has great educational value, and we use it for the same purpose that ministers sometimes do, namely, to convey a message to our audiences as forcefully as possible.

Keeping in mind the purpose of their use, it seems a little narrow on the part of the opposition and does not come with good grace when we remember that ministers use them for the same purpose, which we have no objection to.

Our messages are intended for the working people of this district, and Sunday is the logical day for such meetings, as it is the only day that the average worker can devote to mental development. Further, "the better the day the better the deed" applies to our lectures as readily as to ministers' sermons.

Our educational league is chartered for the specific purpose of disseminating knowledge pertaining to social and political economy, and we would suggest that ministers devote a little more attention to the problems of this life, to the end that we have more of "Heaven" here, instead of the ignorance, crime and misery due to the poverty of the working people.

Believing that the principles of religious and political freedom are dear to all of us, and that industrial freedom will prove of vastly greater value than either of the above, and hoping for the day when the masses will become conscious of their great possibilities, I remain, yours for a broad-minded humanity which refuses to be servile to either man or woman, and who will only comply with such rules or laws as are necessary for social welfare. Respectfully,

DR. W. J. VAN ESSEN,
Secretary Pittsburgh Socialist Educational League.

UNIVERSITY USES PICTURES AS LECTURE MEDIUM.

On Monday November 9, the University of Cincinnati threw open to its students in certain courses the opportunity to attend what have been christened as "visatures," a word invented to cover the latest development in educational methods. "Visatures" mean, in brief, a visible discourse; in other words, a lecture illustrated, in this case, by motion pictures. As announced some time ago, the university is one of the several leading institutions in the country which will use this advanced method of instruction in the several courses in which it is available, using films furnished by a cooperative exchange, and the plan has now been placed in actual operation.

There are to be 105 of these lectures in Cincinnati, in series of twenty-one each. The subjects to be covered this month, for instance, include good roads, the safety first movement, farming with dynamite, pure foods, cement making, railroad building, the manufacture of firearms and ammunition, banking and several scenic subjects to illustrate commercial geography and literary courses. An important object which it is anticipated will be served by the use of moving pictures in connection with the lectures is to assist the students, in many cases, in selecting their future occupations.

The lectures illustrated in this manner will be given on every day of the week excepting Saturday and Sunday, at 4:30 and 6:45 o'clock, and the public is invited to attend them. They have already proved very popular with the students, largely, perhaps, on account of their novelty.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Warning.

UNPLEASANT as it is to have to write this, it seems to be necessary to remind the readers of this department that favorable comment on advertising is not to be accepted as a personal recommendation of a person's business integrity. For some months past a press man whose material was once favorably written up to a year or so ago, has been trading in part on the supposed guarantee that this material carried. He leased a house in a Southern State, ran up an exchange bill, got into the local papers for advertising and decamped. Later, he was located in Colorado, where he sought to interest a local manager in a "Publicity and Supply" company that may eventually result in a Federal sentence. The local man looked into the scheme and refused to participate, even though the adventurer told how he had just come from Jacksonville, where he had seen and won the approval of this writer. Almost a year ago we had to warn our readers against a somewhat similar scheme this same operator sought to work. It seems there must be these swindling fakers in every line of business, but before you accept their statements that this paper or this writer stands back of any scheme, please verify that fact by wire or letter.

Blankety Dash.

That's about as close as the Editor and the Postoffice people will permit us to come in expressing our real sentiments concerning conditions as reflected in this clipping from a recent issue of Real Reels. Editor Carpenter, having worn out one trusty sledge hammer, drops into sarcasm. Read what he has to say:

> Why buy theater tickets at all in Salt Lake? An evening paper prints 104,000 free coupons each week and a morning paper nearly as many. Then you can walk into the Broadway on Mondays free provided you are one of the first 200 to attend the matinee. After seeing the show you can walk over to Main street and get a shine and a free ticket to another picture house. Further up the street you can buy a loaf of bread and get another free ticket. Higher up the street you stand a chance of winning a diamond ring provided you are a working girl. You can take six of your kids or somebody else's bairns, free to the Orpheum any afternoon, while every other house in town has some scheme or other to give you something for nothing. This town has only 100,000 population and a dozen philanthropic managers.

Can you conceive such a condition? The managers of a dozen houses trying to outdo each other in making deadheads out of every possible patron? These men would not take a can of gasoline and a box of matches and deliberately set their houses afire, but it would be vastly better for them, and for those who will come after them, if they did. That's strong talk, but it is none too strong for the man who will murder, not only his own business, but the business of an entire city.

It is all right, in a way, to argue that this will make business, and that this free distribution merely serves to get them coming, when the free distribution will be withdrawn, but it is unsound argument, for the thing, once started, cannot be stopped. There is nothing so easy to create and nothing so difficult to cure as the chronic deadhead. A chronic deadhead will never buy a ticket if he can help it. He will even spend several times the value of the ticket to get one free. We've had men beg the privilege of taking us to dinner and spending several dollars for a restaurant check for no other reason than that, following the dinner they could go in with us "on the nod" to some vaudeville house where the best seats were only fifty cents. It's not the matter of money, but the free ticket habit is something that gets into the blood and cannot be gotten out. The deadhead would rather spend five dollars on some one who can get passes than a dollar at the box office. If he cannot get in free he'll stay away.

And here is a whole town being turned into chronic deadheads! Here are a hundred thousand persons being educated to try and get something for nothing, not just once, nor just one day a week, but right straight along. It is monstrous. It is a crime.

The west used to be the land where there were no pennies in circulation. Truly, the times have changed—in Salt Lake City, at any rate. In a couple of months it will be as "dead" as Philadelphia used to be, and if you want to know what that was, ask any old-time manager or agent and listen to him curse at the mere recollection.

Now and then it does pay to send out some free tickets to some one attraction, but this wholesale hemorrhage of free coupons makes the box office a joke.

It is only a few months ago that New York was flooded with ten-cent safety razors. The United Cigar Stores gave them out as premiums and in time most of the customers merely laughed. A clerk in one of the stores gave us half a dozen, just to get rid of them, and we could not even give them out to the elevator boys in the building in which we have our office, and out at the house the grocery boy refused to take one because he had three already. Make admission to your house a joke and presently it will be no laughing matter to you. It's probably too late to do much in Salt Lake City, but if you're in a town where this foolishness starts, sell your house and move away before you have to close it up. A man can stand about so much of any one thing. Forty quail in forty days is the most familiar example. The first is fine, the last—if the last is reached—is nauseating. A man wants about so much amusement. Make it possible for him to see too much and he will become surfeited and not desire it.

Mailing Cards.

Edward A. Zorn has a new scheme in mailing cards. He runs the Temple theater, Toledo, and plays features. His cards are 5½ by 7, four pages, and are posted under letter postage, though we think they would go for one cent, did he desire. Inside pages carry the announcement of two specials, and the back page, a really artistic bit of type work, carries the underline. The novelty feature is that right alongside the address is the "letter" that will get the attention of the recipient. Many who might not be willing to open a circular will read this well-phrased note and then read the rest: Here it is:

ANOTHER INVITATION ————To the————
TEMPLE THEATER!

Dear Madam:

No doubt you are one of the thousands who enjoyed "Ethel Barrymore in the Nightingale," exhibited at this theater several weeks ago, so you will appreciate the two great events this folder introduces. Two big Broadway successes you can't afford to miss—Wm. A. Stevenson in "SHORE ACRES" and Beatriz Michelena in "SALOMY JANE." Will you come and bring a friend.

Very truly yours,
The Management.

Precisely the same wording on an inner page would do no good at all, and it would be lost on the back page. It is the fact that it snuggles right up against the address that permits it to "reach" in the brief space the recipient is taking to decide to throw it away. It "gets" her and she reads on.

Pickings In Line.

Paramount Pickings, the house organ of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, Minneapolis, swings into line with the announcement that the editors will supply press matter to those clients asking for it. And by that token it is better to make the clients write in than to supply it unasked, for then the aforesaid clients will appreciate what they get since they have to ask. If it merely came without invitation it is apt to be pushed aside.

When you come to think it over, these feature distributors have had a lot to do with increasing the amount of intelligent press work done.

Hot Air.

Hot air is the latest advertising device used by F. D. Stanton, of the Orpheum, Gardner, Mass. He built a miniature dirigible and sent it up. Everyone was talking about the "Zeppelin," and the news was even wired to Worcester. Then the story came out.

A. D. K.

The Rosemary theater, Ocean Park, Cal., calls its door knob a "screen sheet." They use a narrow card 2¾ by 8½, red on light brown.

Since the D. K. is punched for the string, it might be a good scheme to use this text at the top:

Drive a nail in a convenient place and hang this up.
Next time hang up the new one over the old.
Keep a record.

That "keep a record" will appeal to a lot of the fans.

The Rosemary prints a throwaway for Wildfire in which Mrs. Leslie Carter is quoted as saying that Marguerite Clarke is a better actress than Mary Pickford. It is pretty hard to tell how the army of Pickford admirers will take this, but it is certain that they will want to see the release to prove that Mrs. Carter is wrong. It is a safe plan, as a rule, to keep out of comparisons. Here it might work well.

Craw's Side Venture.

George Rockhill Craw, who used to be a frequent contributor to this paper a couple of years ago, has settled down in Fort Wayne, Ind., for business reasons, and is publishing on the side an Amusement Guide to all the attractions. It is a little four pager with one page of bright items, the amusement attractions, the railroad time tables and a few advertisements. It is bright, well printed and well distributed, being found in the hotels, stores and other places of public gathering. It is evidently a "comer."

Howdy, Mr. Wall!

It has been some time since Mr. Wall happened along, but here he comes with a letter and a couple of programs. Read the letter first:

> Enclosed herewith you will find the first and second edition of our four-page program, which I wish you would give the "once over" and point out to us, in your modest, unassuming way, the most glaring and unpardonable part of the general make up; now, Friend Sargent, before you explode, let me warn you not to express yourself to forcibly, for I want to show it to the printer, and s-h-h (the printer boss is a lady), so it would never do to comment on them in the manner that I feel that you would like to.

But, be that as it may, give us (the printer lady and myself) your candid opinion on type, general make up, quality of paper and, most important of all, are there too many ads?

In this town of 2,000 we get out 500 programs, distribute about 250 of them from house to house and have a mailing list of 150 and distribute the balance of them in buggies and autos on Saturday night.

We just started the farmers' matinee last week, giving a free show to the country people from 1.30 to 5 P. M., having 14 merchants giving out tickets to their country patrons, for which they each pay us 50 cents per week. I think that within another week we will have at least 20 merchants into the plan, for it seems to make a decided hit with the country people, and the merchant who does not give out tickets will find himself losing out.

Not for worlds would we "sass" a printer lady and hurt her feelings—at least not this time, but if she persists in using that billious-looking green ink, we are going to coax Mr. Wall to get a he-printer we can converse with. Green ink is all right on tintpaper, but a light green on white is not satisfactory. It looks unfinished. A silk green might work better, but blue is better still, though in all cases, a deep shade of any colored ink should be used on white. Contrasting tones are all right, but white is too strong for light colors.

We do not like the front page, even were it done in another color ink. There is too much picture and too little Wall's theater. It should be discarded in favor of a simple type border and job type with the stuff that Mr. Wall now runs on his back page printed on the front where it will show. Then he will have the space to run his program clear across the page instead of sticking it into one corner. As it stands he gets only one-sixth of his inside pages for the program, one-third of the back and none of the front. The ads are too many by one to a page.

Use the simplest sort of fancy border, not more than six points wide. Three on six would be better. Then cut off the top quarter with a cross bar of the same border. Set the name of the house there in good, plain type. Add the name of the town and "Program for the week commencing," and give the date. Below the bar, run house stuff; the snappy stuff that Mr. Wall writes. Set it in eight point. Set the farmers' matinee in six point with a ten point head below that, and the front page will look like something, and we can be friends with the lady printer.

If she just simply has to use up that green ink, let her mix some black with it to deepen the tone.

Building Up.

You've all been told about the one-piece skirt and coat hanger, and several hundred have used it. The Talbot theater, Indianapolis, builds up on this by wrapping the nail in a directions sheet that reads:

DIRECTIONS.

If you want to Hang up your Coat or Skirt, just drive this One-Piece Coat or Skirt Hanger into the wall.

But if you want a place to hang up for an evening of pleasure don't fail to see the first installment of the new serial, "The Master Key" Friday night, Nov. 27th, at The Talbot Theater, 22nd and Talbot.

Mr. Saffell writes this is his first contribution to the department, but that he'll be back soon. We hope he comes.

For Charity.

Pearce's Tudor theater, New Orleans, was loaned one morning last month for a concert for a local charity. The fine organ in the house was the foundation for a splendid program of instrumental and vocal numbers. Do you ever do anything along the same lines? It pays.

It's a Bunch.

F. H. Franke, of the California theater, Chicago, writes he is sending in a "bunch" of stuff. He did. It's a regular bunch and an interesting one. He writes:

Under separate cover I send you a bunch of advertising stuff, invite your criticism and suggestions.

If you find among it something worth while pass it along.

I get out weekly seven thousand cards or letters. On large productions like "The Christian" and "The Spoilers" ten thousand letters.

The cards (except the pink sample) cost, in quantities of seven thousand stock and printing, $9.00, distributing same from house to house by a well-organized and dependable distributing company, who put one card or letter into each mail box or flat of a building, cost $1.75 per thousand.

The letters cost $1.75 per thousand. The envelopes—Manilla—55 cents. Printing of envelopes, 50 cents. Folding, inserting and sealing, $1.00 per thousand. Distributing, $1.75 per thousand; so the letter complete without Heralds cost, including distribution, $5.75 per thousand in lots of seven thousand or more. Rather expensive, but bring results.

"How is business?" Well, we do as much as ever, but it costs more hustle and money to do it. Again:

Early to bed and early to rise—
Hustle like h—— and advertise.

That is my motto.

We do not believe that the poetry was censored by Maj. Funkhouser, but it is true enough to get by.

Some of the cards advertise the "for adults only" features, oddly enough on Saturdays when the children are most anxious to attend. The line "Children under 18 not admitted" is the accepted phrasing, though "For adults only" is also used. A September card carries a free ticket on condition that the name and address are given, which was probably used to build up a mailing list. The pink card, excepted from the price, is merely a better stock.

An odd feature is to ask a question and then answer it through the program. For instance, one card starts:

How to tell Woolen
From Cotton Cloth.
Find answer in daily program.

This is set in ten point caps for the top lines and eight point for the third. Then in each day, in six point gothic, is run a word or two of the answer:

Monday (Pick out)
Tuesday (A thread)
Wednesday (From the cloth)
Thursday (If cotton, it burns)
Friday (To a flame)
Saturday (If Wool)
Sunday (It will only singe).

Both sides of the card must be read to pick out the answer, and the lines are just above the titles in each section.

They go in very strong for printed form letters, but try to get too much on the page. Less copy would be more effective. Most of these are in envelopes with the end cut off so that they may be easily reached. One letter, in discussing the advance in prices for features argues, "You can ride in a street car for five cents. In an automobile for a dollar or more." "You can buy a calico dress for 98 cents, silk from $25 to $150."

Each letter carries some sugestion along the same lines to get the patrons in the proper frame of mind. It should be a simple matter in Chicago to raise to ten and twenty cents using the same subjects that are shown inside the loop for a larger admission, but they keep right at it.

Mr. Franke has some form letters that he will give other exhibitors who will send a return cover, but we do not like the idea of an overcrowded letter.

Start Something.

F. Howard writes that he enjoys this department, but that he would like to see more examples of New York advertising as he has three houses here in town. Even so. But why doesn't he set a good example by sending in some of his own advertising for comment? We use what comes in and occasionaly go out and get some, but few houses in New York do more than lobby work, and those that do seldom send in. Most of the away-from-the-house advertising is done by the semi-suburban houses, and if we tried to round that up we would not even have time to collect our salary, let alone earn it. There must be a few live wires in New York, but they seem to be crossed and they get grounded.

Bleich's Way.

Here are parts of two advertisements by George A. Bleich, of the Empress, Owensboro, Ky. The first is for the Thaw film and the second for The Wolf.

BLEICH'S STRAIGHT TIP ON THIS ATTRACTION.

In booking this feature the first thing I did was to satisfy myself that it contained absolutely nothing of an objectionable character. Next, I concluded the people here, as everywhere, would like to see the noted Evelyn. The extra admission is required because of the high rental for the films.

Frankly, I do not think there is anything great about the production. It isn't dull and you must not gain that idea; on the other hand do not expect anything extraordinary.

If I were you, and devoid of any interest in seeing Mrs. Thaw, and it hurt me to pay 15c. to see a picture show, this is one I would pass up.

The above is advanced in a spirit of absolute fairness. I want your money, but I want you satisfied.

Truthfully yours, GEO. A. BLEICH.

"More than full value is guaranteed." That means much. It means that you are to see something extra good—extra in quality, and extra in quantity. The extra five cents permits me to offer these big attractions, prohibitive at usual admission rates. As long as I am the boss of this picture show you can rely on getting your money's worth. When an increased price is demanded it will be for something worth while, every time. Test this out today; come and see what the extra nickel means. —BLEICH.

It might be pointed out that the last part of the Wolf notice does not quite fit in with the former. He says that you always get value for your money at the increased price, instead of saying that you get value for your money when he promises it. But this is a quibble. The main point is that when he does tell his patrons to come, he thinks he has the goods. Frankly, the Thaw picture (written by her dancing partner) is rather bromidic, and the notoriety attaching the name is depended on for drawing power. Overadvertised, it might have had a reactionary effect, but he probably got the money on it, even though he had his fingers crossed, and still was protected against a comeback on his next feature.

Too few exhibitors realize that they make or lose part of the money on the next feature they run. A poor film sensationally overadvertised, may clean up a handsome profit and still kill the business on its successor—which may be a good offering.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopsis be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is enclosed.

Plotting from Newspapers.

WE PROMISED a Brooklyn correspondent a longer reply to a question than we could give by mail. Here is what he wrote:

> I should like to know how to form plot incidents from the newspapers and other commonplace happenings. If I could only get a thorough explanation of the subject I would be much obliged.

In the first place, you do not form your plots from the commonplace incidents any more than to let the commonplace suggest the unusual. This is the first to be grasped. In the second place you do not form the incident into a plot. You merely derive an inspiring suggestion from the paragraph.

These are the two essentials. All the rest is practice.

We do not think that is what the correspondent wants to be told. He wants to be told just how to take a plot out of any paragraph in any paper. Unless he differs from the rest, he does not want to be told to practice. He wants to get a short cut so that all he has to do is to sit down to his machine, give the evening paper the once over and then write a story. It cannot be done that way. The way to win a marathon race is to run the distance in faster time than the other fellow can. The way to do that is to train. The way to do anything worth while is to approximate perfection through practice. The way to learn to get plots out of the papers is to have plotted so many stories that almost any item will suggest a lead.

At first you may read an entire Sunday paper and never get an idea. At the finish you may be able to get ten ideas from a single paragraph.

Start slowly. Don't pick up a paper, look at an item, find there is no story there and throw the paper down, declaring it can't be done. Persevere. Learn to look not at the paragraph but behind it, to one side or the other, or ten feet in front.

For instance we have just picked up a copy of an up-State paper. Here is what first caught our eye as we opened up the sheet:

May Irwin's New Play.

> The new play by Grant Stewart and Robert Baker intended for May Irwin has been named "The Crimson Rambler." The Liebler company will send Miss Irwin on tour in it in a few weeks.
> Budget Want Ads. cost but one cent the word. They bring results, too.

That doesn't look very promising, but let's see. Miss Irwin's new play is "The Crimson Rambler." Probably that is an automobile. Suppose we get a title for an automobile and write a story to fit. Call it the "Crimson Crime," and let it be one of those atrocious second-hand machines that run every third Wednesday. That will give you incident, but you must have a plot. All right. Suppose that Jerry loves Inez and starts to elope with her in the Crimson Crime. Of course it breaks down. A passing junk dealer offers him eight dollars for it. He won't sell. He gets sore and runs it into the creek. Then he starts cross country with Inez for a Justice of the Peace. Father happens along in a big touring car. He sees the Crimson Crime in the water. There are no footprints on the bank. Jerry and Inez must be pinned beneath the car. There is a wild alarm. Wreckers with block and tackle rush out from town to lift the car. It comes up. The bodies are not there, but Inez's scarf is caught about the steering wheel. Searching parties are sent down stream to look. And all the time we are cutting back to Jerry and Inez, who get married, have a wedding breakfast all to themselves and phone to town for a livery car. The same garage is called that sent the wreckers. You can imagine the father's feelings. That's not likely to be the story of Miss Irwin's play, but it is a fast moving comedy.

Make it drama. Bill is the wild young son of one of the town's solid business men. His fad is autoing and he has a flashy car. It is the only one of its color in the vicinity. There are numerous robberies and always a car of this peculiar color is seen in the vicinity. The old man becomes convinced that his son is a criminal. One night he is found beside the road, the car overturned and himself unconscious. In his pockets are the result of the latest raid. The evidence is clear. He is sent to jail and the father refuses to bail him out. His sweetheart discovers that a dull finish gray car is really of the same color as Bill's but covered up with water color paint. The real burglars have been using Bill for an alias, washing the water color off before each raid and applying it again immediately after. They find Bill unconscious and clinch their alibi by filling his pockets with loot. The girl saves Bill and the experience steadies him down.

The suggestion of the want ad is obvious. The girl's father runs the paper. The suitor in disfavor uses the columns of the paper to advertise his one want. There are other and better ideas to be derived, but this will suffice as an example.

The idea of reading the papers for inspiration is not to get something that can be reproduced exactly, but to get some hint, some starting point from which to work. Training in plotting does the rest.

The trouble is that too many writers work with one plot at a time. That's wrong. No sane man would open a drug store with only a five ounce can of sulphate of quinine. No grocer would "stock up" on half a cheese and a bottle of vanila extract. If you want to run an ideas shop get an ample stock in trade before you take down the shutters. Henry Albert Philips said the other day he has more than two thousand ideas for plots carefully filed away. We have written between fifteen hundred and two thousand. What's just one idea? You've got to get three or four hundred to use as a working basis. They don't have to all be good ones, but they must be able to go through the motions of being a plot.

Photoplay writing is the elaboration of plots. To write plays you must have plots and further you must be able to do something with them. When you've written a thousand plots, good, bad and indifferent, you'll know something about plotting. But nothing you can buy as a book, school course, personal instruction or oral advice can in the slightest degree replace or supplant the practice work that must be done by the author himself before he really becomes an author.

That's how to get plots out of papers. Master plotting, through practice, first.

If You Live in Cincinnati.

If you live in Cincinnati and want to know other writers, send a stamped and self-addressed envelope to this department for the name of a writer who is willing to form an Inquest Circle.

"On Publication."

It is evident that some of the lesser companies are now trying to purchase scrips to be paid for on the publication of the film. This is something new to the photoplay writer, and several have asked advice.

It is not, as many seem to think, a new departure. Many of the smaller magazines pay only on publication and some have been known to hold a manuscript for a year or even more before getting the matter into print. It is a recognized practice in fiction and feature writing, but it is a most irritating one.

Two advantages are gained by the magazine. Overbuying is avoided and a small capital is husbanded. There is no advantage to the author in one idea, and in most instances the man who can command the market wants cash on acceptance. At the same time many writers are willing to wait a year in one place for a sale rather than take chances on having to hawk a story about for a year in an effort to sell for prompt cash. It is a matter that each writer must decide for himself.

It is not always a matter of not having the money to spend. No editor can buy so closely that he does not, now and then, get a story he never uses. Every magazine and every motion picture studio has several thousand dollars worth of stuff that will probably never be used. Some of the more economical studios are running along right now on stuff purchased a year or two ago and at that time set aside for something better. Paying for stuff only on acceptance keeps the script expense down to the minimum and avoids "dead horse." It's nice for the studios, even if it is hard to the writers.

Like Pickles.

When you get all fussed up over a script that has come back, think that it might be worse. We just got back from one company in one day fifty-seven scripts all in one nice express package. It's only about fifteen per cent. of the stuff submitted in the time covered by the cards, but even at that it seems to be a record rejection and a lot worse than your one or two.

Second Call.

We are indebted to several correspondents who offered us their copy of the Nelson book, and now have one, but no one has mentioned where we could get one of the old Katterjohn books. Hasn't anyone a copy they are willing to sell?

Consistency.

"Why do you people have to reconstruct every story you buy?" we asked a script man with one of the big companies the other night. "Do you people suppose that you're the only ones in the whole world with sound technique?"

"Not a bit of it," came the reply. "We get lots of scripts with pretty good technique, and we don't claim to know it all, but ninety-nine times out of a hundred someone has to go over a script to keep it consistent, and we do the hundredth one just for luck."

That's a nice charge to be brought against the script writers of the country, isn't it? And yet it's about the truth. Not one writer in a thousand does stuff that cannot be poked full of holes because he has his mind so full of the big idea that he completely overlooks the minor matters. Try and be one of the few.

Appeal.

There is no use writing stories that lack appeal, because they will not sell. And it must not appeal merely because you wrote it. It must appeal to others who do not even know you. You've got to write the stuff that will reach out and grab a total stranger by the neck, grip at his heart until it almost stops beating, sends cold chills down his spine, get his brain whirling and then set him down gently on his feet sighing with relief because it all came out right. Not every assemblage of incidents is a story. Not every script with a plot is a real story. A real story is one that gets you in the first three or four scenes and makes you sorry when you see the tailpiece. That's the sort of story that every editor in the country is looking for. They are darned hard to write, and that is what makes them worth real money.

Manufacturers have to produce a given footage a week, and they have to put out a lot of junk if they cannot get better stuff, but most of them will buy the stuff that really is good and not only send you a check, but thank you and ask for more. They won't do that if you merely produce a grade of material that is barely equal to or slightly below the standard of the studio-made hack stuff.

Take an honest pride in your work, but do not let pride blind you to the fact that your story lacks real merit, when it does.

Stolen Stamps.

One correspondent complains that a certain company steals the stamps off his envelopes. If he affixes a four and a two on an envelope, the four cent stamp is soaked off and the script limps back on the two, the missing four cents being again collected from the author. The company is one of the very obscure wildcats. It is coming it pretty low to lick the stamps off envelopes, but a wildcat company is apt to do anything.

Loose stamps "stolen" are another matter. The stamps sent loose are not accounted for, nor can the editor be held accountable. They should be stuck on a return envelope. Where stamps alone are sent, the script is sent to the stenographer to be enveloped. This is not "stealing," as some writers seem to think, but merely the penalty for not doing things right.

Care.

Slap dash methods will get one nowhere. Evidently a great majority of script writers do not think. Three weeks after the closing of the "Dogs" offer a writer sent in a story. It was not addressed as directed, but was sent to the office of the paper and to this writer instead of to "Dogs." Not a single one of the facts had been noted other than that there was a chance to sell a story. And the story, being written in the same spirit of carelessness, was impossible. More than one writer, for that matter, ignored the address, and only one out of more than three hundred first asked what sort of a dog to write about.

You can't get anywhere by rushing around with your eyes shut. Learn to appraise facts; to follow instructions. Then you'll learn to write, but to get half half an idea and try to supply the rest yourself is foolish, if an entire idea is given.

Each week it is announced that we will not handle scripts or synopses under any consideration, and yet scarcely a week passes that one or more are not received—and immediately sent back. It is not that it bothers us that the matter is mentioned here, but because people who work along such lines cannot hope ever to find success.

There's Good Reason.

A minister writes:

> I have paid more postage on one of my dramas which shows how the stage lured a girl to the best than any other. When it has visited all the producers, I will replot it and show how the stage lured the girl to ruin, for I need the money and must make what is called for.

We do not like his point of view. In the first place a minister is hardly fitted to write with conviction of the stage and the life of its people, and the probabilities are that the story has been rejected not because the girl is "lured to the best" but because the story is distorted and unreal. It might come back even more quickly were it changed so that she is lured to ruin. It is probably not the moral of the story, but its atmospheric coloring that causes rejection. Clean, wholesome stuff is wanted, but not dry and pedantic sermons. If our reverend correspondent can write good heart in this stuff, he will not have to grow desperate and lure his heroines to ruin, via the stage or any other process. But the story must be a story and not merely a preachment.

For the Checks.

Nellie Brown Duff after telling what her year's work in photoplay has brought, adds:

> My fiction hasn't taken hold yet, mostly because I have put my best plots into photoplays. But I have found that I can make quite a little in other ways. I have had $30 from the Chicago Tribune in the last two months, two of those love letters and $10 for bright sayings, amusing experiences, etc.
> The above sounds as though I am "writing for the checks"—and, of course, you know that I am not, any more than that the checks are a measure of success, and some sort of check must come in if I am going to keep on. I was asked recently if I would continue to write photoplays if I only get $2 for them. I replied that, aside from the improbability of such a price, I would have to do something else for bread and butter money, BUT I WOULD CONTINUE TO WRITE PHOTOPLAYS.

That's the right sort of spirit. She does not write for checks alone, but because she has to write, but she measures success by her checks because the check represents work done to the satisfaction of the editor, and that is what we all try for. She has sold twenty-one scripts in the seventeen months she has been working and she started flat off the ground. But she has worked with the heart and spirit of the good workman, not with the fussing and kicking of the writer who merely writes for checks, and she won through.

Perhaps No.

"It may seem nervy, but I've a hunch I'm writing over their heads lately," wails one of our observation pupils. Then he sends in a story in which the hero kills the villain, who married the heroine. She kills herself because she loves the villain and not the hero and he surrenders to the police and begs them to hang him."

Huh!

Auto Runs.

A correspondent wants to know why directors object to making auto runs—if they do.

We take it that he means one of those scenes in which a camera is mounted in an automobile that either precedes or follows another car or other vehicle as it travels along the road. If this is what the correspondent means, the answer is simple in the extreme. The director does not like to make the run because it means a poor picture. The auto will bump over a match, almost, and make an unsteady picture, and in some studios this device, like panoraming, is forbidden. Even without this poor result it means a lot of trouble and generally the use of two cars instead of one.

Good stories do not depend on trick effects for their value, nor is it possible to bolster up a weak story with such devices.

Over Titling.

The use of stub titles or leaders seems to be a mania with a lot of cutting men who work on the broad principle that all picture patrons are absolute idiots. It is only five years ago that we were looked upon with absolute horror when we suggested using a cut-in leader, but now a couple of cut-ins and a straight leader to a scene is not an uncommon happening. The cutter sits and watches. The heroine comes out of the house and starts up the street. "Wait a minute," he calls. "What's she doing that for?" The script shows that Jane is going for a walk. "I bet the boobs will think she is going to prayer meeting," he murmurs. "Put in a leader 'Jane goes for a walk and meets her mother' and then they'll know what it's all about."

And the funny part is that he thinks he's earning his salary, though two letters last week suggested it might be an excellent thing to slip a few pictures in between the leaders.

Hitting It Off.

George S. Garrett hits it off very neatly in a recent letter when he writes:

> Everyone has been driving tacks with sledge hammers in the interest of dramatic effect and the only human interest in most of the work has arisen from the pain of bruised fingers.

And there you are. The author works so strenuously for his effects, he struggles so hard for the "big situation" that he does not humanize his characters and we do not really care whether or not they get cut in two by the buzz saw or are mashed to a pulp by the trip hammer. It is not your smashing big effect that counts—it's the yank you give the heart strings.

Titles.

No editor is going to buy a title alone, but a smart title will help a lot in convincing an editor that a story is good. "Pluck and Perseverance are Bound to Win" may be the title of a perfectly good story, but it will not be easy to convince the editor of that fact. He will figure that an author with sufficient experience would know better than to use a title like that. Wait a week for a title if you must, but do not send a story out until it is provided with a catchy title.

Be Natural.

We have just had to scold a pupil for being careless. An old maid has her attention attracted to an object five times before she investigates. That's not like a woman—or a man, either. The first time she would have made a proper investigation, but to have done so then would have shortened the story, and so she acted as no human being would, just because the author did not stop to think. He had his mind made up on a certain comedy proposition. He lost sight of all else in developing that one idea, and so the one idea was of no value because it was not told in natural action.

It is all very well to write a story about the frisky married man who gets beaten up when he gets home late, but if you write with that single idea in mind and it blinds you to all the other points of the story, you are going to lose a lot of chances. Be natural, be alert and you'll get more than one idea in your story.

Signatures.

If you write a stranger and have no letter head, type your name and then sign above it. No matter how clearly you write, this is a little help that is sometimes greatly appreciated. And if you are a woman state whether you are a Miss or a Mrs. when you write strangers. If you have no typewriter spell out your name in print.

Question No. 65

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the effect, from the point of view of the person seated on the main floor, of a very steep pitch in projection? Several important points are involved here.

Roll of Honor.

Roll of Honor on question No. 59 consists of John Solar, Watertown, New York; L. C. LaGrow, Albany, New York; J. I. Roberts, Nashville Tennessee; Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; H. W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; John Kingman, New York City, and G. D. Bullock,, Hobart, Indiana.

Reply to Question No. 59.

(By John Kingman, New York City.)

The Question:

What do you understand by an "outlet box?" A "junction box?" Give best method of running the various operation room circuits under different conditions, and tell us what you would do about locating conduit if you were building a concrete or brick operating room.

The Answer:

An outlet box is an opening in conduit for the purpose of allowing a circuit to be attached to one of the circuits contained in one of the conduits. This branch circuit may be for a single lamp, a single motor or for a circuit supplying many lamps or many motors. Outlet boxes are usually of pressed steel or cast metal. If the latter they are either enameled, galvanized or otherwise coated inside and outside to prevent oxidization, but whatever the coating is it should be an electrical conductor where an outside box is used in conjunction with a grounded conduit system. In the operating room the projection lamp circuits are ordinarily taken from the outlet attached to the end of the conduit. A junction box, on the other hand, is a box-like arrangement of pressed or cast metal used usually where different lines of conduit join, and to join the circuits therein. The wires of the circuits may pass right through the junction box, in which case it serves merely as a means to join two or more lines of conduit with one larger line, but ordinarily the various conduits are joined in the junction box, the splices being made in the box. As a general proposition junction boxes are for the purposes of (a) allowing various circuits to be joined and at the same time providing protection for the splices; (b) to allow different lines of conduit to be joined; (c) to facilitate the pulling through of wires.

The second half of question 59 is rather a large contract, since nearly every operating room presents a different set of conditions. Broadly speaking, however, the operating room should have the switchboard enclosed in a metal cabinet which should be located at the most convenient point, everything considered, and this would vary with different rooms. For instance: where the ceiling is not over seven feet high some operators prefer to place the cabinet on the ceiling, where it can be reached from operating side of either machine. The main objection to this is that it brings the cabinet almost directly over one of the machines and the heat has a decided tendency to raise the temperature of the fuses, moreover the constant upward current of air keeps the switches and fuses coated with a film of dirt, so that it is necessary to brush and clean them thoroughly every day. The advantage lies in the fact that all switch handles hang down when open. Also it is very convenient to be able to reach the switches from operating position at either machine. It is almost as easy to install fuses with the ceiling cabinet as with the wall cabinet, so that matter is about a standoff. Most operators, however, prefer to have the cabinet on the wall at convenient height, as nearly as possible directly behind the machines, and, assuming the operating room to be not more than ten feet deep, this is usually the best location. The operating feeders will, of course, be brought directly to the main cabinet by conduit. From this cabinet the incandescent circuits should be carried up over and down through the ceiling, or if this cannot be done, then across the ceiling to the desired point. The operating room circuits should, if possible, be carried through conduit embedded in the cement floor, its end extending approximately one foot above the cement of the floor, directly under the lamp house of each machine. If for any reason this cannot be done, however, then the better plan is to carry the conduit across the ceiling and down the wall beside the lens hole, thence back along and under the left hand edge of the machine table to a point about 4 inches from the back end of the lamphouse. Never, under any circumstances, should conduit be laid on top of the floor. It is exceedingly bad practice to do this. Also it is entirely unnecessary under any conditions, because the ceiling plan is far superior, and even if the concrete-cement floor be already laid it would only take a couple of hours to cut channels for the conduit, which could then be bedded in with cement. But the only right way is to place the conduit before the floor is laid.

If I were building an operating room with concrete walls and floor, or concrete walls, floor and ceiling, I would carefully sketch a plan of the wiring and have the conduit put in place so that it would be embedded in the concrete when the walls, ceiling and floor were built, providing proper pockets in the walls for outlets. If I were having the walls made of brick I would provide for channels so that after the brick work was up the conduit could be laid in the channels left in the walls, cemented in, and the whole thing covered with a finishing coat of plaster. If the walls were eight inches thick I would provide a two-inch channel by cutting off two inches from a course of "headers." If the walls be more than eight inches thick, then the channel can be provided by splitting a middle course and laying the conduit right in the wall, providing for proper outlets, of course.

Interesting.

Brother W. S. James was just in the office and we had a little discussion in which he brought out a point I had not thought of before. I had always considered the neutral of the three-wire system as being both positive and negative. Friend James says it ain't no such darned thing. I promptly informed him he was full of prunes, whereupon he sat down on me ker squash as follows:

> Let us name the two sides as right and left hand sides for the purpose of understanding. Now, let us assume that motors, lights, etc., are pulling a total of 11,000 watts on the right-hand side, and motors, lights, etc., are pulling a total of 9,900 watts on the left-hand side, the system being 110-220 volts. This would leave a difference of 1,100 watts, which would mean, in practice, that 10 amperes of current is flowing on the neutral, the same being produced by the dynamo feeding the right-hand side. Now, let us suppose that the outside wire in this dynamo is negative, and the inside, or neutral, wire is positive to that dynamo. Under this condition it would mean that the neutral is positive 10 amperes. Now, if we switched that condition, and placed the 10 amperes excess on the other side, then the neutral would be 10 amperes negative.

Well, by gum, James is right in that, but at the same time it is merely a technical point. I had not thought of that particular phase of the matter before, still it does not alter the fact that within the accepted meaning the neutral is both positive and negative, because it may be either one, though, as James says, it cannot be both positive and negative at the same time.

Reducing Wattage.

C. T. Main, Stroud, Oklahoma, writes:

> I desire to use two stereopticons. The current is direct, and 220 volt, 60 cycle. I wish to use two rheostats. What size wire and what kind shall I use, and the number of feet required for each rheostat? Each rheostat is to pass 15 to 20 amperes.

Well, Friend Main, your question is contradictory within itself, because direct current has no cycles. Presumably, therefore, you have 220 volt, 60 cycle alternating current. The resistance of an a. c. arc is equal to about 35 volts drop, and 35 from 220 leaves 185 volts to be taken care of in the resistance. Assuming that you propose to use 18 amperes, the formula for ascertaining the necessary amount of resistance is: Voltage divided by amperes, and in this case 185 divided by 18 equals approximately 10.3 ohms, which is the resistance the rheostat must supply. Climax wire is excellent for rheostat purposes, and looking on page 109 of the Handbook we find, in Table 7, that No. 8 climax wire has a carrying capacity of 22 amperes at 500 degrees; it will therefore be ample for the purpose. In Table 8, same page, we find that at 400 degrees 1,000 feet of No. 8 offers 36 ohms resistance, therefore, since we need a little less than one-third of that amount of resistance, we will only be obliged to use about 300 feet. You can figure out the exact amount you need by using these tables. Climax wire can be obtained from the Driver-Harris Wire Company, Harrison, N. J. If you do not wish to take the trouble of doping out the exact amount of wire to be used, submit the proposition to them, and they will tell you exactly the quantity you would need.

The Matter of Speed.

Providence, Rhode Island, kicks in with the following:

> Beg to introduce myself for the first time for the purpose of asking the following question. Had an argument recently with regard to proper speed of projection. Timed a single at 12 minutes and a two-reeler at 23 minutes. From the story end, I have been told that 16 minutes is the limit. The manager comes back and says that the Strand (New York City) projects in 13 minutes. He timed them, and the new machines will stand that speed. I pointed out the reasons against such work, and he himself almost admits it. I know where you stand, but I want from you an authoritative statement as to what is the correct speed to project. We have one house here, using Paramount films, which shoots 'em across in 9 minutes. Get 'em in, kick 'em out!
> Suppose you are going to connect yourself with a three-speed Harley-D. this year. I am sincerely glad to note that you are not afraid to admit that you ride a motorcycle. I am myself past the boy age, but I'm a "bug" on the two-wheeler just the same.

Well, my brother, there really is no "speed limit" at which to project. The proposition is so childishly simple that any theater manager ought to understand it at a glance, though it seems they do not. Yes, I have seen a picture projected in 13 minutes at the Strand, and at was an outrage, too, and more of an outrage there than it would have been in a five-cent store show. In a house of the Strand class there is absolutely no excuse for that sort of crude work.

Come let us reason together. Supposedly the actor acts the scenes in the best possible manner. His actions are recorded by the camera at a certain speed, presumably sixteen pictures to the second, or, in other words, sixty feet of film to the minute. Now, if we concede that the director and actor know their business, and that the scene is acted as it ought to be, then in order to get the best results the scene must be re-produced just exactly as it was acted in the first place, and in order to do that the projection machine must be run ABSOLUTELY AT THE SAME SPEED THE CAMERA WAS RUN IN TAKING THE ORIGINAL SCENE. That is a proposition very similar to the fact that one and one makes two. If the camera was run at a speed which consumed 58 feet of film per minute, then the projector must be run at that speed also; if the camera consumes 62 feet per minute then the projector must consume 62, but if the projector, on the other hand, uses 1,000 feet of film in 13 minutes, it is using 77 feet of film per minute, whereas if the camera was run at 60, it took 960 pictures a minute, but with the projector running at 77, instead of having 960 pictures a minute projected to the screen, we have $16 \times 77 = 1,232$, and the figures are in some places moving very fast and in other places are doing a sort of jumping-jack performance which makes the whole thing an absurdity and more or less ridiculous force, according to the nature of the subject.

The only rule that can be given is that the operator must watch the different scenes and project them at the speed which brings out the best action, and makes the figures appear most natural. NO MANAGER CAN SET A TIME-TABLE FOR HIS OPERATOR AND GET HIGH-CLASS WORK. IT SIMPLY CANNOT BE DONE, in the Strand or anywhere else. But there is this difference: In the Strand and other high-class houses, where an admission of from 25 to 50 cents is charged, we expect things to be done right. We can forgive a lot in a house that charges a nickel—that is to say, we don't exactly forgive it, but the fault is not so glaring as it is in a high-class, higher priced theater. If cameramen always ran exactly 60 feet of film per minute, then the projector could be provided with a governor and be made to run exactly 60 a minute, and the best possible result would be had. But, as a matter of fact, the cameraman doesn't run at regular speed, and if the camera be run at 58 (two under normal) and the projector be run at 62, the difference is considerable and the effect is bad. Therefore, what can be said of the man who puts reels through at the rate of 65 to 70 or even 80 feet a minute? Some managers attempt to excuse speeding by saying they "have to do it." In answer let us ask what would happen if they had the real actors instead of their helpless photographs, and asked them to speed their work. The answer to that is answer enough to the "we have to" assertion. With real actors the manager would cut out part of an act or all of it. Good! Let him cut out a reel—and there is your answer.

Yep. I have made connection with the three-speed Harley. It is some buggy, my boy—some buggy! Why should I be "ashamed of riding a go-devil?" Huh, I'm proud that I'm able to do it, and me a mere boy of 48.

Let It Alone.

John Gibbon, Brooklyn, New York, writes as follows:

> Will you kindly pass your opinion on the attached samples of screen surfaces submitted by a new concern?

There are three of the samples, one a dead white, which appears to be simply white paint on some sort of a canvas material having a slightly matte surface. This doubtless would be a very good projection surface, though the matte is by no means heavy enough, except for use in a long, narrow house. One other sample is of decided pink color. It, too, seems to be merely paint, on the same material as the white sample. Its color is unfit for projection work; the material, also, is too smooth. The third sample is utterly impossible. It is nothing more than a matte surface heavily bronzed with what seems to be ordinary gold bronze. It is not pleasant to have to talk thus about manufacturers' goods, but it also is not pleasant to have such monstrosities as these submitted to prospective customers by projection surface manufacturers. There are altogether too many people jumping into the manufacturing of projection surfaces without any adequate knowledge of the subject. It would be uncharitable to call them dishonest; rather it is ignorance, for which, however, the other fellow (customer) has to pay.

Multiple Clutch.

J. Claude Re Ville, Florence, South Carolina, is the inventor and presumably patentee of what he terms a Multiple Clutch Control, detailed drawings and descriptive matter of which he submits to the department. Along in July, Brother Re Ville submitted drawing of a pin clutch, with request for my opinion concerning the same. What I said is indicated in Friend Re Ville's present letter.

> Complying with your request I am mailing black and white drawings of my multiple clutch control. Would have sent them sooner, but following your suggestion have been working on a friction clutch. The friction clutch was my first idea, but was discarded in favor of the pin clutch by reason of slight loss of power due to end thrust caused by pressure required to hold the clutch in. You were in error as to the machine starting with a jerk when the pin clutch is used, because the machine is moved with such ease that very little power is required, and as the motor speed is not increased there is but little difference in the way the clutch engages. The pin clutch is much more simple and easier to make than is the friction clutch. The drawings explain themselves, with addition of the explanation that the cones are made of brass and the cups of steel. Either style of these clutches is an improvement over > using two motors, because of the perfect control obtained over each machine while seated at the other. Where this control is used it is quite easy for one man to handle two machines, and while I agree that this is not good practice, still it is done in lots of houses where an assistant is not employed. These clutches can be made and sold for about one-third of > the price of a good motor. If there is any difficulty in getting this outfit made up, there is a machine shop here in Florence that will turn them out, and I will quote a moderate price on either design, with a guarantee that they will give sitisfaction.

Regardless of the one-man proposition the single motor and clutch method of drive is, in the judgment of the editor, considerably better than the old plan of two motors, also it is cheaper. The drawings of Friend ReVille's clutches are self-explanatory, and I think our readers can readily understand. For myself, I would prefer the cone drive. Brother Re Ville says there is no jerk in starting the machine with the pin type, but really I do not see how that can be, since, as I understand his sketch, the thing is a positive lock, and the loose pulleys must be caught up at full speed the instant the clutch engages, instead of gradually being brought up to speed with increasing friction as in the cone type. Apparently the brother has other ideas, but I cannot see it. It is a very simple matter to design a friction clutch without end thrust.

As I understand the matter, Brother Re Ville intends to give anybody who wishes to use this device the right to construct them, or he will sell it to them if they prefer. The thing looks as if it would work very well, but, though the editor has never used one of these devices, he would suppose that separate controls for each clutch would be better, but that could easily be arranged with this device. As it is, one machine must perforce stop almost the instant the other one starts, and that, under some conditions, might not be quite satisfactory.

Why I Am "Opposed."

Indiana signs his name in what I presume to be either Sanskrit, or Egyptian hieroglyphics, though it may possibly be Chinese, to the following:

> I note that you are opposed to traveling motion picture companies making small towns, but as yet have never heard just why. I wish you would tell us why you do not think much of it; also what kind of light making plant would it be best to use; want something compact, not too heavy, and capable of producing results. Will need about 40 amperes at the arc, and enough to run one ⅛ h. p. motor and about 50 32 c. p. incandescent lights. I want this plant to mount in a wagon and pull around from town to town, therefore it must be strong as well as light. If you are in possession of any knowledge as to the cost of running a show of this kind kindly set it forth. In closing I wish to ask you not to publish my name, the name of the theater or the name of the town.

There is not a particle of danger of my publishing your name, my brother. Anyhow I don't print puzzles. In your signature I seem to recognize a capital R, though it might be the picture of a lop-sided haystack, at that; there is also something which looks like a cross between a "d" and an oyster stew in a state of semi-intoxication. Some signature, my boy. No, I am not at all opposed to this particular scheme—not at all. What you have mistaken for opposition has been my perhaps overzealous desire to warn those proposing to tackle the traveling small-town show stunt of the difficulties they will encounter. There are a great many who cannot see anything but the income. They do not seem to figure up the out-go at all, or, if they do, they figure it about half of what it really is. The writer has bucked the line on this small town travelling show stunt, and he knows that whereas the income is never what you expect it to be, the outgo is always from two to three times what you figured, and the hard work mixed up in the stunt is something awful to contemplate. I will say this, however, if you are determined to tackle it you are going about it in the only way I would approve of, viz.: Mount your outfit on wheels and furnish your own locomotion. If I tackled this stunt again I would get an automobile truck, or, rather, a covered auto van, similar to those used in cities for moving furniture. The engine would supply ample power for the generator, which could be mounted in the van itself. By this plan a large amount of vexation and expense would be eliminated. I would also, but for one thing, carry with me a black top, viz.: the question of seats. Seating is more or less bulky; also it is heavy. If it is carried along I think you would have to have two trucks, and that would add very materially to the expense. The main item of expense will, of course, be summed up in three items, viz:. Hall rent, help and film service. In the old days the traveling small town exhibitor owned his own films, but that, I think, is hardly a practical thing any more, because, if you do this, you will, for the most part, have old stuff, and a considerable percentage of your possible patrons will already have seen the films you have in other towns. You can, however, own several really good features, and in that way can possibly get by with the self-owned film proposition. I have neither space or time to go exhaustively into this matter, but if you propose to use a horse-drawn outfit I would suggest one of the direct connected lighting plants advertised in our pages. Better get a truck, though, and do the thing right. And, now, my brother, after you have been on the road for a month write again and tell me whether or not you earned every nickel you made in working the small town traveling show stunt. It would be impossible to tell you the operating cost of such a show, since it will depend on how you run it, but the cost of a lighting outfit may be obtained from the various manufacturers. Your biggest bump will come when you find that, whereas you figured that practically every soul in those small towns would flock to your show and eagerly pass in their coin, they won't do anything of the sort and, whereas, in bad weather you won't do any business, the expense will keep right on.

Oh, My, What a Wallop!

J. R. Cheney, El Centro, California, lands on the editor as follows:

> Friend Richardson: With regard to F. W. Van Horne's inquiry as to printing the answers to the questions: What do you intend to do? Start a correspondence school for operators who "don't know?" If so, why don't you put out your sign, having it read something like this: "For the small sum of one dollar I will teach you the moving picture business from A to Z. F. H. Richardson, Instructor, Upstairs." What do you intend to do? Educate some ten or fifteen thousand more operators? Do you think it would help the business? Take, for instance, the doctors. Do you see any advertisements in medical journals to the effect that for a small sum they will teach you to be a physician and see that you get a diploma? What would be the result if we had those kind of doctors? On the other hand, did you ever see an ad to the effect that you could learn to be a printer by studying a bunch of questions—that is to say, you would be a real printer, not a would-be, and step out and get a job running a linotype? This is the trouble with operators today. About 75 per cent. don't know the first thing about a picture machine. Such men as these will go to work for ten and twelve dollars a week, and there are a lot of mangers who will hire them because they are cheap; so what chance has a good man got to get a job—one who has worked hard to learn what he knows. Before the projection department was founded, without so many crank turners, the real operator would have some chance to make a living wage, but not so long as there is someone to educate kids for the small sum of a dollar or two. What chance will Brother J. B. Day, Sherman, Texas, have to take care of himself and his new frau if there is a bunch of those would-bes hanging around, and his boss is not making enough to satisfy himself, and wants to cut down the running expense of the house? The first thing he will do will be to hire one of these cheap operators, and where will J. B. be, with all his hard-earned experience? If your salary is not enough to support you why don't you go on a strike for more money, instead of making more operators and less money? Yours fraternally, J. R. Cheney. P. S. Don't step on me too hard. But this is just the way I feel about the matter.

Well, the "Friend Richardson" and "Yours Fraternally" gave me a good laugh anyway. As to Brother Day, why I guess probably he will have something to say on this subject and hold up his own end of the argument without my assistance. And now to reply to your questions, Brother Cheney. No, I am not going to start a correspondence school for operators who don't know, nor have I ever done so, though I might whisper in your ear I have some very flattering offers, from the financial point of view, running up even as high as one hundred and fifty dollars a week with a three-year guarantee, to head that kind of proposition, and, strange as it may seem to you, I turned it down. No, you do not see any advertisements of the kind you speak of in the medical journals, but you see the medical journals, don't you, and they are chuck full of matter directly instructive to doctors, and anybody can buy them who has the price, and study his fool head off if he wants to. Also you see therein advertisements of medical books which are directly educational along doctoring lines, and which any one can buy and study if he desires. But the doctor, unlike the moving picture operator, is wise enough to know that if he himself studies he already has such a long start that the novice hasn't a ghost of a show against him.

No, you don't see any advertisements to the effect that you can learn to be a printer by studying a bunch of questions, nor have I ever intimated that you could learn to be an operator by studying a bunch of questions; on the contrary, I have time and time and time again said, in print, that you could not do anything of the kind but that the man who is already an operator can improve himself enormously by study, and I am trying to provide him with the means of study and to direct his study into the right channels. Your letter caused another smile, Friend Cheney, when you said about 75 per cent. of the operators' don't know the first thing about a picture machine, presumably meaning projection. Well, that is a bigger statement than I ever made! If that is true, then only 25 per cent. of the theaters can be properly served, under existing conditions, and you want to injure the millions of people who patronize the other 75 per cent. of the theaters by shutting off all information and stopping the education of the operator. Piffle, my boy, piffle!. You are scared of your own shadow. You take a narrow, contracted point of view, instead of a broad viewpoint which includes the whole business. You are occupying a dog-in-the-manger attitude. You don't want the operator to improve, or at least to be provided with any method of improvement, and, following out your own line of argument, you want to stop the advancement of projection and hold it stationary right where it is. It cannot be did. No, I won't "sit on you too hard"; you have already done that yourself, and I think when you see this letter in print you will rather wish it had never been written. F. H. Richardson, my brother, is not an instructor of novices, but he is trying to be an instructor of operators, and he is decidedly proud of the work he has accomplished along those lines. If F. H. Richardson were to die tomorrow the work would go right along, but, whisper, it might be in the hands of a man who would oppose the operator and his organization, instead of trying to help both, and you would find out in a hurry, and so would the organization, that the opposition of the projection department would amount to something, and be a good, big spoke in your wheel. By-the-way, before closing this I must dispute one part of Brother Cheney's letter. He says that before the projection department came into existence, without so many crank turners, the operator had a chance to make living wages. He thus makes a statement which has not even the shadow of a foundation in fact. Before the projection department came into existence very few operators, in Chicago, where I was then operating, for instance, were receiving more than fifteen dollars a week, and many of them were working for ten and twelve. I do not know exactly what the minimum in Chicago is now, but I think it is about eighteen, whereas the maximum is nearly thirty, and here in New York the maximum runs to forty dollars a week, with a minimum of eighteen, therefore, the evidence is that, notwithstanding the dissemination of knowledge the brother complains of, operating is on a much higher financial plane than it was five years ago, and certainly projection is on an immeasurably higher plane, so that after all, Friend Cheney's complaint falls flatter than the proverbial flounder. To show you the difference in view points I call your attention to the article following this one.

Wants Them Printed.

M. T. Stradford, Birmingham, Alabama, wants the questions and answers printed. He sets his views forth as follows:

> I may be butting in when I write, in reply to your comment on F. W. Van Horne's letter, but the world being full of "but-inskys," I will not feel so lonesome. I note your remark about the possible disadvantage of publishing the questions and answers mentioned by him, but I do not think your point is well taken. Your reason for withholding the information is not a good one. If this same reason were carried out in all lines we would have no circulating medium. Uncle Sam would not print greenbacks, or mint gold pieces, for fear someone might see what they look like and counterfeit them; our scientists would not give us the advantage of their discoveries, fearing they would be misused; we would have no carbolic acid, because someone might use it to poison himself; we would have no gunpowder or guns, because some one might shoot himself; we would have no electrical works, because someone might learn to be an electrician, and so on. In fact we would be deprived of many useful and necessary articles, because even the best article may be misused. I merely used these few illustrations, which could be multiplied by thousands, to emphasize the fact that there is no excuse for your withholding useful knowledge which may be of benefit to legitimate users.

And thus we see that Brother Stradford of Birmingham holds views diametrically opposed to those of Friend Cheney of El Centro. As a matter of fact, if Brother Cheney's views are to be literally followed out to their logical conclusion we ought to close all our training schools, and burn all our electrical books, our books on iron working, on railroad building, and, in fact, all of our instruction books, including medical works, because by studying them someone might learn to build railroads or do carpenter work or electrical work and so on. How silly! How unutterably foolish such a proposition is! But enough of this. I am not going to print the questions and answers in book form, but I will use them, or those that seem to be available, in the next edition of the Handbook. The questions, of course, will not be used, but merely the information that has been brought out in the best possible manner and form in the various answers. I would suggest to Friend Cheney that instead of trying to prevent "Jimmie, the usher," from studying or getting hold of means of advancing himself he expend the energy that would be necessary to do this in improving his own knowledge, and then he will be so far ahead of "Jimmie, the usher," that he can give Jimmie the horse laugh.

Film Cement.

Roy E. Buzzell, Turner Falls, Massachusetts, sends in sample bottle of a film cement he is manufacturing, with a request that we try it out and express an opinion on the quality. His claim is that the cement welds the film together, but stops the welding process before the stock is weakened. He proposes to sell a two ounce bottle with a brush for twenty-five cents. Brother Buzzell says he has been using this cement for more than two years, and during that period has improved it until he has now what he believes to be a perfect product.

I would not care to express an opinion on this proposition, Friend Buzzell, for the reason that before doing so I would be obliged to make an exhaustive test, or else send out samples to operators in various parts of the country. I tried the cement on a piece of film, and it certainly made a good patch. Apparently it made a very strong joint, with but very little, if any, puckering effect, and that is exactly what is needed. From this experiment I can recommend that operators at least give the new cement a try-out. Unfortunately the brother has not said by what name he proposes to call it.

Book on Photography.

J. Otto Keig, Dalton, Massachusetts, writes:

> Am among those who swear by the Handbook, which I have many times said is worth its weight in gold to any operator. In November 14th issue, E. S. O'Neill, of Sioux City, Iowa, asks for a book on motion photography. I am now reading a book, entitled "Moving Pictures, How They Are Made and Worked," by Frederick Talbot, published by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Pa. It contains a fund of information on the subject suggested by the title, is profusely illustrated, and is altogether an interesting work.

For which information Brother O'Neill will, no doubt, be duly grateful. I have not seen the book in question, but will take steps to secure a copy.

Condenser Dope.

Michigan contributes the following:

> At your suggestion, and in reply to Brother Griffiths' article in November 14th issue, will say that he is absolutely correct in every detail regarding measurement, etc., viz.: picture 18 feet, aperture .906 of an inch, objective 6½ inch e.f., distance from aperture to center of condenser 16¼ inches. But the distance of the arc from the center of my condenser is 3½, instead of 3¼ as per Brother Griffiths' measurements. In six months I have not broken even one condenser, though that may be on account of their good quality, or my good luck. The lenses are the best to be had. Have experimented exhaustively with the meniscus-bi-convex combinations, and still am of the opinion that they are no better than the plano in my case, though I think likely that they would give excellent results with a shorter objective. Note the firm selling them now ask, in their ad in the World, that purchasers state distance from machine to screen; also kind of machine and kind of current used. They did not require this information before. Why do they now?

I don't know, Michigan, but perhaps the Laemmle people will favor us with their reasons. The measurement matter is respectfully referred to Brother Griffiths. Your experiments with the meniscus-bi-convex combinations are at variance with most of the other ones who have reported. Many operators are very enthusiastic over the improvement brought about through their use. As to the film samples you sent, it is an outrage, but unfortunately I have not space just now to deal with that matter. The department is enormously crowded, and I have simply got to chop down on things for a couple of weeks. I agree with you that the operator who has to put such films into decent condition ought to be paid for his work, and the exchange is the one who should pay him.

Same Old Rut.

C. B. De La Hunt, Memphis, Tennessee, says:

> I believe the projection department has, under your capable guidance, (Tanks for th' lobster. Ed.) done more to further the art of motion picture projection than any other factor. I have before me November 14th issue. On page 928, E. S. O'Neill, B. C., asks for books on motion picture photography. Here are some I have read and found to be very good: "Encyclopedia of Motion Picture Work," in two volumes, published by American School of Correspondence; "Practical Cinematography and Its Application," by F. A. Talbot, J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Pa., and "How Motion Pictures Are Made and Shown," by F. A. Talbot. I think the Lippincott Company are also the publishers of this book, but am not sure. There are also some very good articles on Motion Picture Photography in some of the later books on general photography. Hope this information will prove of value to Mr. O'Neill, and would suggest that he get after the librarian in the public library in his city, and urge upon him the necessity of procuring such books as this, as well as all others pertaining to the motion picture industry. I have interested the librarian in this city in motion pictures, and if any book pertaining to the industry makes its appearance he gets it instantly. I also note, October 17th issue, that you were visited by Mr. R. C. Tarlton, president of the Majestic Amusement Company, of this city. Messrs. Tarlton and Bridges are worthy of all you have said to them. Through their untiring zeal, hard work and study, and with the co-operation of some of their efficient employees, they have built up a chain of motion picture theaters which, for their air of refinement, good projection, excellent music and effects, and all-around good management, are rarely equalled, and I do not think are surpassed by any other motion picture theaters in the South. It is certainly interesting to read questions propounded by some so-called operators. The trouble with most operators is that they are content to remain in the same old rut, and earn fifteen to twenty dollars (I mean get from fifteen to twenty dollars) per week. I believe the high-class operator can make himself capable of earning fifty dollars a week, and that is not too much for a man who uses his brain. I think a good motto to be framed and hung up in some operating rooms would be the Universal Film Company's favorite slogan: "Use the Brains God Gave You." Through my close reading of the projection department for the past four years I feel that I know you personally. I am not an operator, but I have not seen anything in the department from Memphis in such a long time that I concluded to let you know this city is still on the map.

Now, here I am trying to cut matters down, and letters like this come in. What am I going to do? It is good dope, and there is a lot more good stuff in the same letter, too, but the trouble is I need eight pages instead of four, though they are already giving us all we can expect, so, like the fat lady, I will simply have to reduce somehow, and in this instance, at least, I will do so by chopping my comments down to the foregoing. Oh, yes, I will have to say though that I agree with that "same old rut" sentiment, and agree with it thoroughly, too.

A Fine Room.

R. G. Cameron, Tacoma Washington, sends in some splendid pictures of the Colonial theater, a new house which has just been added to Tacoma's list of photoplay palaces. I have turned the theater pictures over to another department, but the operating room photograph and the description I am using, much as I am crowded for space, because of the neat arrangement of things and the general orderliness of the room. Brother Cameron describes the room as follows:

> You will note three observation ports, and a port for the spot, though the latter, which utilizes the hole at the extreme right, was not in place at the time the picture was taken. Please do not give credit or censure for the port arrangement, as the operator who laid them out had no chance until the room was finished, and the small switchboard you see in the center was installed, conduit run, etc. The architect tried to get someone to lay out the openings, but the lessee told him to proceed, and, after waiting quite some time, Mr. Architect threw up both hands and let the electricians ruin a chance for a port in the proper location. In the ceiling are two vent flues, 12" x 12", extending through the roof. Doubtless you don't like the shutter arrangement, or the trip. Neither do I, but they were installed this way when Mr. Moore got the house and they comply with the city law and suit the Fire Marshal. In one wall is a window, so that fresh air is readily admitted, and here in Tacoma we are allowed to keep the operating room door open. At the left of the picture is a work bench. I have the late type Powers 6A friction drive. The room is 10 x 12, with an 8-foot 8-inch ceiling. As you see, I have a comfortable chair. The room is reached by a short flight of stairs. The throw is 114 feet, projecting a 15-foot 3-inch picture. They wanted me in the operating room picture, but I wanted a picture of the room, not of myself.

There are two or three points about this room upon which I wish to comment briefly. One is the neatness with which the tools and appliances are arranged. Everything has a place and is in its place, too. Evidently Brother Cameron is not of the "Sloppy Ann" type of operator. Another point is the ample size of those observation ports which allows a man to have a full view of the picture, either seated or standing. Still another point is the large fire shutter which closes all the ports at one fell swoop. This I do not approve of, however, for the very simple reason that if the shutter came down it would be with a crash that would startle an audience seated in a dark, silent theater, and would, therefore, tend to do exactly what it is wished to avoid, viz.: create alarm. The room is ample in size, and aside from this and the things mentioned by Friend Cameron, seems to be excellent, indeed, though those open switches seem strange to us here in the east. If our New York inspectors got sight of those switches, unprotected by an iron box, they would have hydrophobia at the very least. I presume the two incandescent lamps, one at the right of each machine, are for the purpose of threading the film in frame. I am sorry Brother Cameron is not in the picture. You are too modest, old man, too darned modest.

Duluth Defended.

A. Hudescher, Clinton, Ohio, defends Duluth as follows:

> In November 21st issue I saw a complaint concerning Duluth operators. Now, let me say that you could not find a better projected picture than that of the Lyric, Odeon and Rex theaters in Duluth. I worked in Duluth for three months and know that all the boys there are on the square and fair in all their dealings.

All of which will doubtless make mighty good reading to the Duluth boys. Brother Hudescher is a member of Local 332. I hope what he says concerning the matter is the even and exact truth. I pitched my tent in that little city for about three weeks, back in 1904, I think it was, and remember its terraced beauty very well indeed.

Menicus-Bi-Convex Lenses.

Harry E. Harbaugh, Cincinnati, Ohio, says:

> This dope on meniscus-bi-convex lenses has reached a point where I am going to shy my hat into the ring. In the beginning of the summer we purchased a set of meniscus-bi-convex condensers and a pair of Preddy holders and placed them on one machine, leaving the other as it was. We have run this all summer, so that certainly the plano as against the meniscus-bi-convex has had a thorouhgly competent test. The other machine, by the way, has two 7½ condensers. The conclusion the manager has come to is to order two more Preddy holders and another pair of meniscus-bi-convex lenses for the other machine. The difference in results was very marked. The meniscus-bi-convex lenses has given us a brighter picture, yet a picture of a softer tone. The spot is clearer and not so discolored around the edges; in fact the decrease in discoloration is fully 90 per cent. That is a big statement, but it is the truth nevertheless, and as a consequence we can carry a smaller spot and still have much better light quality. With the meniscus lens I find a 1½ inch spot serves, whereas with the old style it must be larger, and yet the quality is missing. With the plano lenses the field on the screen is very brilliant in the center, but the outer edges have a sort of yellowish cast not due to too small a spot. On the other hand the M-bi-C lenses give a perfectly even illumination all over the screen. The M-bi-C lenses are placed 14¾ inches from the aperture, with the arc 3½ inches from rear condenser. With the plano they are 15½ inches from the aperture and the arc 4 inches from the rear condenser, the front measurement in both cases being from the center of the condenser combination. The objective point is 4 inches, which gives a 15' 10" picture at 65 feet on a mirroride screen of medium matte, using 35 to 40 amperes d. c., and we believe we have a picture that is good to look at. We are in the downtown district and are supplied by d. c. three-wire system, but have to use 220 volts, since the light company compels it, therefore, to economize we use a Fort Wayne d. c. compensarc consisting of a 220 d. c. motor driving a 55 V, 35 amp. generator. We have double lines to the machines, one from 220 rheostats and one from the generator, either of which may be used by throwing over a D. P. D. T. switch. We heat up on the rheostats and then throw over to the generator. These little machines are certainly wonders, for we run ours fourteen hours daily, seven days a week and it is always on the job, but—we take care of it. Am watching Mr. Griffith's dope on lens measurement, and am deeply interested. Regardless of what others may say he has come nearer to it than anyone else. I do not understand geometrical optics, but I get the meaning. When a man stands forth with a rule that we all can understand, and which can be put into practice in everyday work, he sure will get a shower of thanks from the fans. You, Brother Richardson, have done a wonderful work in pushing this matter along, and deserve all the thanks possible. Your article on the spot was fine, "them ere's my sentiments tew," and have been for nine years. In fact you so often express my sentiments in your comments that I see no use in expressing them myself, hence my long absence from the department—nearly four years.

All of which is good except the long absence. Yes, we are making distinct advancement in the condenser matter, thanks to Brother James, who started it, Professor Wall of Syracuse University, Brother La Grow of Albany, Mr. Arkin of New York City, and last, but by no means least, my good friend John Griffiths of Ansonia. I think myself that Brother Griffiths is nearest right, up to date, but we must not forget James, because he was the pioneer; nor Arkin, who is not an operator, and who contributed his mite purely from good will. As to the meniscus-bi-convex data, that requires no comment. I still believe it is the right thing in condenser lenses. Those few who have failed to secure results have simply failed because they did not have the right combination somewhere.

Where Is the Sample?

M. G. Keller, Spokane, Washington, orders the question booklet, and says:

> Would like to remind Brother Gilbert, of Rosland, B. C., that I have not received the sample of carbon which he solemnly swore, with fingers crossed, he would send me.

For heaven's sake send that sample, Brother Gilbert. I don't know what it is all about, but send it anyhow!

Refractometer Scale.

H. W. Griggs, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes:

> I have a refractometer scale which will trace a ray of light through the condenser and objective of different glass and different index of refraction. This scale will settle all controversies as to the path of light rays through the optical system, showing the theoretical path and the actual path as seen through a movable pinhole source immediately back of the condenser, doing away with the halo for better observation and verification of any index of refraction. Will send you a reduced copy which can be used on any glass. The new "Strand" here I think has the best projection in the West.

All right, Brother Griggs, let us have the scale when you are ready. Will be glad to examine it and try it out, giving you full credit if it delivers the goods. As to the tension equalizer you inquire about, why the manufacturer has not decided about the time for putting the new machine out yet. That is all I can say, except that I am trying to get them to do it.

Condenser Breakage.

Charles I Reid, Millersburg, Pennsylvania, asks:

> Do you know of any reliable device or plan to prevent the condenser breakage, which seems to be a fault common with all propection machines? What is your opinion regarding the cause of this breakage?

The latter question has been answered so often that its repetition would hardly be advisable, especially in the present crowded condition of the department. This matter is very fully dealt with on pages 364 and 365 of the Handbook, a copy of which Brother Reid ought to have. In addition to the matter found there, I would suggest that the condenser mounts made by Walter G. Preddy, San Francisco, and by J. D. Elbert, also of San Francisco, are both excellent devices which will very largely reduce, if not entirely eliminate, condenser breakage. Mr. Preddy's advertisement appears on page 1164, November 21 issue, and Mr. Elbert's will be found in back numbers, but I do not remember exactly when. The address of these manufacturers can be obtained from their advertisements, that being a legitimate function of the advertising department with which I cannot consistently interfere too often.

An Introduction.

A. C. Wallace, Watertown, South Dakota, says:

> Am interested in the cause of film damage, page 1229, November 28th issue. My idea is that no projector, unless ready for the scrap pile, can cause this kind of injury. Take a sprocket that is not worn out and press a piece of film down on it so that the teeth come between the sprocket holes and you will find that four holes from the one you started from will drop back into place owing to the increased diameter at the outer end of the teeth. My greatest help has been the projection department and digging into the other boys' troubles before I bump into the same thing myself. Would like to butt in often, but when I am on the job from 8 A. M. till 11 P. M. for six years with only eight days off duty, why there is not much time for writing. The first two years I put in operating for this firm (The Idle Hour Circuit) and then they promoted me. During the past few years I have done no operating, except to relieve my man once in a while, still I make it a point to keep up with every detail of the game, and while I have an A1 union operator there is not a day I don't go over every bit of the equipment personally. Pardon the long letter, but felt I just had to introduce myself.

Brother Wallace is now local manager of The Idle Hour Circuit. He seems to have clinched my opinion of that injury matter with a point I had not thought of. It is quite true that the film could not very well run on the end of the sprocket teeth for any distance without slipping somewhat on every tooth, and that would be practically impossible, it seems to me. As to the introduction, Brother Wallace, why, I am much obleged to meet you. Come again, remembering that the latch-string is always hanging out for men with ideas. Better take a holiday! You know what "all work and no play" did to a certain juvenile individual named Jack.

Comments on the Films

THE VANISHING OF OLIVE (Edison), Dec. 15.—Portrayal of the fourth of "Olive's Opportunities," written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, and directed by Richard Ridgely. Very little that is edifying or intellectual pertains in this offering; it seems as though the author and director strove to embrace all the sensationalism they could possibly dig up and use in a chaotic state. The ending is morbid and without reason. Miss Trunnelle and her support are adequate.

THE LOOSE CHANGE OF CHANCE (Essanay), Dec. 15.—Adapted from a Munsey Magazine story. It tells how a valuable diamond is recovered in a most peculiar series of episodes. Photographically the picture is a gem and it is splendidly acted by Richard C. Travers, Beverly Bayne, Bryant Washburn, Harry Dunkinson and Lester Cuneo. The plot is a little puzzling in places, but taking all in all, it is more than an ordinary release.

CUPID BACKS THE WINNERS (Kalem), Dec. 15.—A very meritorious comedy, by Ruth Roland and Marshal Neilan, in which they play the leading parts. It is a pleasant structure in a comedy way and contains much originality—several children, including the Kalem baby and a primitive man and woman. Little Fay Brierly, Tom Hayes, Lloyd Hamilton, Juanita Sponsler all deserve mention for their work. A very pleasing release.

IT CURED HUBBY (Lubin), Dec. 15.—A reasonable and enjoyable little comedy, in which the president of the "Temperance Union" attempts to reform her hubby from being a "good fellow." The scheme works all right, but involves the schemers in a whole lot of trouble, including their friends and neighbors, before the husbands sign the pledge. Very good.

WEARY WILLIE'S RAGS (Lubin), Dec. 15.—On the same reel with "It Cured Hubby." A ridiculous and impossible series of happenings which get a few laughs.

THE MAN FROM THE EAST (Selig), Dec. 15.—A western drama, written and produced by Tom Mix, who features himself in the title role. It is about the average western release, and Mr. Mix does his usual thrilling stunts and it all ends happily. It can be recommended as a pleasing westerner.

ON CHRISTMAS EVE (Edison), Dec. 16.—A tender story of domestic life, by Mark Swan, featuring William West, who is very impressive as the grandfather. John H. Collins, the director, must be mentioned for the splendid little touches of pathetic situations he has engrafted in this picture. It is the story of a butterfly wife, who selfishly brings suffering to an honest and faithful husband. She receives her lesson on Christmas Eve, which is beautifully illustrated, and happiness results to all concerned. The acting is splendidly done. This is a beautiful release.

TWO POP-UP FABLES (Essanay), Dec. 16.—Here are two laugh-producing fables, as George Ade calls them, on one reel, and no one else digs up so much fun out of ordinary happenings as does Mr. Ade. First comes the "Girl Who Shifted the System," on the advice of a wise married woman, to whom she applied when she could not make a hit talking about herself to the men. Advice: "If He Likes Syrup Feed It To Him By the Gallon"—about himself. The other is the fable of the "Wife of a Sarcastic Husband," who spent an entire day shopping and brought home a spool of thread. He made remarks, but was forced to pay for two truck loads delivered later. Moral: "Never Arouse a Sleepy Shopper."

THE TEST (Selig), Dec. 16.—A sea drama, by James Oliver Curwood, featuring Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton. The action embraces quite an interesting love story, concerning the daughter of the master of a sailing vessel; therefore, most of the scenes occur on shipboard. Several taking fire scenes and thrilling rescues are shown, which make this picture attractive. After numerous hardships there is a happy ending. This picture will please almost any audience.

THE EGYPTIAN MUMMY (Vitagraph), Dec. 16.—While it is rewarded with considerable laughter this picture is made up of a lot of senseless balderdash scenes. The author is A. A. Methley and the producer is Lee Beggs, who plays the professor. Constance Talmadge, Billy Quirk and Joel Day are the other principals. This comedy falls short of the usual Vitagraph offerings.

RED DYE (Biograph), Dec. 17.—A supposed comedy, on the same reel with "A Natural Mistake."

A NATURAL MISTAKE (Biograph), Dec. 17.—On the same reel with "Red Dye." And about of the same calibre as the above.

SNAKESVILLE'S BLIND PIG (Essanay), Dec. 17.—The female element, wise and otherwise, through franchise have voted Snakesville dry, to the consternation of the male element. Sophie Clutts has been elected sheriff and she appoints her nearest and dearest friends deputies and furnishes them with badges of office. The former saloon keeper, not to be outdone, turns off the gas and inaugurates a "pipe line," through which, by underground advertising, he furnishes his former customers with their "usual" and gets rid of his surplus stock, until Sophie gets on and introduces kerosene. A very laughable release.

A QUESTION OF CLOTHES (Vitagraph), Dec. 17.—Transposed from a woman to a man, with the lone assistance of a man's wig, a young lady succeeds in deceiving family, friends, neighbors and strangers, including the man who really loves her. W. A. Tremayne is the author and Van Dyke Brooke has evidently did the best he could to make it reasonable. The cast is made up of the best Vitagraph talent, who do justice to their parts, and Norma Talmadge in the leading role deserves sympathy in endeavoring to fulfill an unwelcome task.

HIS PRIOR CLAIM (Biograph), Dec. 18.—A threadbare plot, concerning two brothers, one of a serious nature, in fact so serious and unreasonable that he is responsible for the sorrows of those whom he might have befriended. Later he redeems himself and brings happiness to the ones he unconsciously injured. H. A. Barrows, Augusta Anderson, Baby Jane Lee and the others in the cast deserve mention for splendid work. A very worthy release.

THROUGH THE KEYHOLE (Kalem), Dec. 18.—A farce comedy featuring John E. Brennan, Ethel Teare, Josephine Rice, Arthur Allardt, Carrie C. Ward and Fred Hornby, who all work hard in a strenuous effort to make good. The plot is a conglomeration of vehement efforts on the parts of the participants to create comedy.

THE COMEDIENNE'S STRATEGY (Lubin), Dec. 18.—A series of love episodes, concerning an old major and his daughter. This is labelled as a drama, but it should be billed as a comedy drama, and in fact it contains the elements of a farce. Rosemary Theby, Bartley McCullum, Ruth Eryan and Harry C. Myers are the principals in the cast and do good work. An average release.

THE TAIL OF A COAT (Selig), Dec. 18.—A comedy written by Clarence Frambers, featuring John Lancaster, supported by Lyllian Brown Laughton, Elsie Greeson and Sidney Smith. It is the old story of a family who has become suddenly wealthy and attempt to exploit social aspirations. There is considerable comedy emanating from their attempts to break into society, in a sort of burlesque manner. The whole thing is crude in construction and more absurd than amusing.

WHO'S WHO IN HOGG'S HOLLOW (Vitagraph), Dec. 18.—A very meritorious comedy in construction, which afforded great possibilities to Mr. Sidney Drew, in which he certainly failed to hit the bull's-eye. A splendid foundation has been built by Seymour Galland, the author for a legitimate comedy of the old "Jed Prouty" type, but as a picture it is spoiled in the direction. However, it is conducive of almost continuous laughter and is splendidly acted.

THE BOND SINISTER (Biograph), Dec. 10.—Why a bond sinister exists is not shown, which involves a man dominated by crooks, fraternizing with good society. It is not a pleasant picture to view in some respects, and some very thrilling scenes are introduced, while not impossible, they are absurd. It is well acted by a good cast made up of Charles H. West, Clair McDowell, W. J. Butler, Frank Evans and Sidney D'Albrook. There does not seem to be a great amount of reason why it all happens, but, nevertheless, it is somewhat exciting.

THE BIRTH OF OUR SAVIOUR (Edison), Dec. 19.—From the scenario prepared by Rev. De Witt L. Pelton and directed by Charles J. Brabin, with Carlton King as Joseph, Gertrude McCoy as the Virgin Mary, Harry Linson, Charles Sutton, and Harry Eytinge as the three wise men, and Frank McGlynn as Herod, supported by a large cast. It is a very impressive picture and adheres closely to the Biblical story of the birth of our Saviour. A beautiful educational, particularly for juvenile spectators.

BRONCHO BILLY'S CHRISTMAS SPIRIT (Essanay), Dec. 19.—A picture, although it is western in flavor, with the cast made up of rough western characters, shows how Christmas steals into the heart and softens rugged natures. Mr. Anderson has engrafted into this visualization more real human nature and sentiment than is contained in some more pretentious five reels which have been shown, and it is all beautifully acted, in a way that makes the audience draw long breaths.

THE BLACK DIAMOND EXPRESS (Kalem), Dec. 19.—Sixth of the "Hazards of Helen" series, featuring Helen Holmes, supported by Leo D. Maloney and J. P. McGowan. This is a very strenuous and highly exciting release, in which Miss Holmes indulges in a thrilling ride in an aeroplane. There is much that is melodramatic, but it holds close attention on the part of the spectators and the finale is very satisfactory. This release is one of the gripping kind.

WHO'S WHO (Lubin), Dec. 19.—Written and produced by Will Lewis, on the same reel with "Shall Curfew Ring To-night?"

SHALL CURFEW RING TO-NIGHT? (Lubin), Dec. 19.—Written by Edwin Ray Coffin and produced by J. A. Murphy. A burlesque on the old poem, "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-Night," which is far from being funny. On the same reel with "Who's Who."

THE LADY OR THE TIGERS (Selig), Dec. 19.—A wild animal picture, the scenario of which is written by Gilson Willets and produced by Thomas Persons, featuring Kathlyn Williams, Frank Clark and Lamar Johnstone, assisted by others who seem familiar with wild animals. It is a story of love and jealousy which is full of thrilling incidents. About half a dozen beautiful full grown tigers, who looked ferocious, figure in this picture and Miss Williams evinces temerity in handling them. This is an enticing picture.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE WRONG SANTA CLAUS (Edison), Dec. 21. Twelfth of the "Octavius Amateur Detective" series, featuring Barry O'Moore, supported by Bliss Milford, Richard Neill, Elsie MacLeod and others. A conglomeration of incidents in which Octavius gets mixed up with a burglar, and the burglar gets mixed up with Octavius and the others in the cast. It is quite entertaining to see how it ultimately works out, but of course Octavius comes out on top.

A MATTER OF COURT (Biograph), Dec. 21.—A comedy built on a very fragile foundation, but which gets laughs throughout the half reel. The travesty on the court and jury scene is very affective. On the same reel with "The Dentist's Janitor."

THE DENTIST'S JANITOR (Biograph), Dec. 21.—Of course a dentist's office is the most comical place in the world, for those who are not favored with a lame tooth. This is a really amusing number and will be appreciated by those who have had experiences in a dentist's office. On the same reel with "A Matter of Court."

THEIR CHEAP VACATION (Essanay), Dec. 21.—A very laughable little comedy, illustrating how Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed (Wallace Beery and Betty Brown), invest in an ideal cheap vacation trip, advertised in a newspaper. How they come out in the end and what they meet up with to keep them awake is wonderful to see. Can recommend this as one of the best comedies shown on the screen for some little time and it will be especially enjoyed by those who have been favored with an attack of the mumps.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 85 (Selig), Dec. 21.—This offering opens with scenes at the burning of the Edison plant, which were caught during the conflagration; 100,000 lbs. of flour being loaded on shipboard, at San Francisco, for European sufferers; scenes at John Jay Park, foot of 77th street, New York City, at the opening of the Public Playgrounds and the attending ceremonies; scenes at the outdoor school at New Rochelle, showing how the children are kept warm with woolen foot bags, etc.

ARTHUR TRUMAN'S WARD (Vitagraph), Dec. 21.—A picture drama which contains comedy elements in its construction but smacks of the "New Magdalen." Lillian Walker, Donald Hall, Lillian Burns and Denton Vane have the leading roles. There is considerable suspense engrafted in the plot, which the director has cleverly worked out to a pleasing termination. All the actors in the cast deserve credit for good work, as does the camera man. A very entertaining number.

Licensed Specials

A SCRAP OF PAPER (Biograph), Dec. 15.—A splendidly produced and well acted two-reel comedy, a review of which, including the cast of the principals, by Mr. George Blaisdell, will be found on page 1530, Moving Picture World, issued Dec. 12, 1914. Mr. Blaisdell voices our sentiments regarding this release.

OUT OF THE PAST (Vitagraph), Dec. 15.—A special feature in two parts, written by Eugene Mullin and produced by Lionel Belmore. While the story is full of intensity it is not a pleasant one to view, but a sympathy for the parent is engendered for the sacrifice he makes of his life to foil a despicable rascal and save his daughter from unhappiness. Some strong acting is done by Eulalie Jensen, William Dunn and Edward Elkas. The scenic effects are beautifully photographed. This picture is worthy of viewing.

THE HATE THAT WITHERS (Kalem), Dec. 16.—Much heralded as a modern two-act drama with an all-star cast, this picture was lucky to get past the censors. While it is splendidly acted it borders on vileness in construction and is morbid and senseless in plot. It is an indelicate subject of no particular interest to the general observer and is not handled with delicacy by author or director.

THE BOMB (Lubin), Dec. 16.—Two reels, written by Harry Chandlee and produced by Joseph Smiley. It is a story of Russian intrigue with the principal scenes located in the court of the Czar and its environments. It is a splendidly mounted and costumed picture, containing thrilling scenes. There is so much action that at times it is not really conceptive; to make it plain it is a story of anarchy. The photography and acting are very good.

WHEN THE BLIND SEE (Lubin), Dec. 17.—A morbid two-part story, written by W. M. Ritchey and produced by Paul Powell, concerning two sons of a farmer. The elder being of the practical disposition of the father and the younger disposed far more to literary things than money making. With the assistance of his sister he attains eminence as an eye specialist and eventually performs an operation on his brother, restoring his lost sight, thus gaining their just rights through the gratitude of the former ungracious brother. Very edifying.

THE COLONEL OF THE RED HUSSARS (Edison).—This three-part picture has been reviewed at length by Louis Reeves Harrison in the Moving Picture World and can be found on page 1085, issue of Nov. 21, 1914.

THE GIRL FROM THUNDER MOUNTAIN (Essanay), Dec. 18.—A two-part moonshiner drama, which tells the story of virile, rugged life in the mountains, in which the usual government official comes into contact with the natives and falls in love with the barefooted girl in a tattered dress. The second reel is full of ridiculous incidents, where she is introduced into high society environments, with very little previous preparation. The whole is rather absurd, but the mountain scenes are most beautifully photographed. An ordinary offering.

MR. SANTA CLAUS (Vitagraph), Dec. 19.—A special in two parts, introducing an unexpected Santa Claus, who really did not know why, only that he had the opportunity and through the fullness of his heart, because he was especially favored, made the merriest Christmas for a little girl and her mother that they had ever experienced. Mr. William Addison Lathrop had a happy inspiration when he wrote this Christmas picture and Mr. George Ridgewell, director, made of it a beautiful offering. It is a pretentious picture with a large cast, but credit is due to Lillian Herbert, Audrey Berry and Arthur H. Ashley, principals, for splendid work. A compelling picture.

THE MAYOR'S SECRETARY (Kalem), Dec. 21.—A two-act story full of political intrigue, written by J. L. Woodruff and produced by Kenean Buel. This story is very interesting from the fact that it shows the undercurrent of political life. It is filled with thrilling scenes, particularly the one where Alice Joyce, the Mayor's secretary, defeats the boss by strategy. It is all very well produced photographically and otherwise.

TILL DEATH US DO PART (Selig), Dec. 21.—A very strong drama concerning valor and weakness. Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Charles Clary supported by a large cast make of this release a most interesting one. The locations of the scenes have been well selected and excellently photographed. While there are some situations in the picture that might offend the prudish, it is strong in human nature and has a happy ending. This picture will entertain any audience.

Independent.

THE WAYWARD SON (Victor), Dec. 14.—An appealing story of home life in which Chas. Hutcheson plays the part of a home-coming prodigal. The girl, Elsie Albert, meets him and induces him to get a job and reform before his father sees him. This is successfully carried out and the celebration of Daddy Manley's eightieth birthday is a happy one, the latter playing the part of father to the youth. An inspiring sort of story.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 145 (Universal), Dec. 16.—A lot of interesting and diverse war scenes lead this number, which also includes views of the tidal flood at Seabright and other features of interest.

LOVE AND SPIRITS (Joker), Dec. 23.—Ernest Shield and Betty Schade appear as the lovers of this burlesque-comedy number. He breaks up a spiritualist seance at the girl's home. This is well-photographed and contains a number of laughs. The action is good.

HUNTING IN CRAZYLAND (Powers), Dec. 25.—A very amusing half reel of animated drawings, picturing the adventures of a hunter with a bear and a goat. This will bring laughter.

THE JAPANESE SILK INDUSTRY (Powers), Dec. 25.—On same reel with above. An interesting lot of pictures taken by Homer Croy showing the silk worm industry in Japan. Views of Yokohama are also given.

FOR THE DEFENSE (Eclair), Dec. 27.—Ethel Phillips and Stanley Walpole appear in this offering, which proves fairly strong. The young man becomes interested in the cashier girl and halts his downward course. Later her testimony in court saves him from conviction as a murderer. A good story fairly well presented.

THE MANICURE GIRL (L-KO), Dec. 27.—A characteristic comedy-burlesque, with Billy Ritchie in his familiar part. He and the barber become rivals for the girl. Toward the close there is a chase through some large sewer pipes. This contains laughable moments.

THE CHEF'S REVENGE (Sterling), Dec. 28.—Restaurant scenes predominate in this burlesque number. The chef becomes angered and he and the waiters jump on a steak before cooking it. This is only moderately amusing, the final scenes being best.

THE VIRTUOSO (Victor), Dec. 28.—Mary Fuller wrote the scenario for this story and also plays the leading role. The manager's experiences with applicants for stage work were amusing. When the girl plays to him he is transported to woodland scenes, which are portrayed to the observer. Instead of offering her a job he proposes marriage to her and she breaks the violin over his head. This is well-pictured, and while not very strong in any way, has a pleasing dash of originality about it.

THE FAT GIRL'S ROMANCE (Crystal), Dec. 29.—This number is better than the average comedy made by this company. The photography is very good throughout and the characterizations quite pleasing. Charles De Forest plays the part of a Scotchman in love with a fat girl. The action is of an eccentric character and has several laughs in it.

WHEN IT'S ONE OF YOUR OWN (Nestor), Dec. 29.—Murdock MacQuarrie and Agnes Vernon appear as father and daughter in this offering. He is a violinist forced by circumstances to become a head waiter. When his daughter comes in with a party and drinks are served he raises a very lively scene in her defense. This is full of interest and well photographed; the acting is spirited and convincing.

WITHIN AN INCH OF HIS LIFE (Eclair), Dec. 30.—This two-reel number is adapted from a short story by Eugene Manlove Rhoades. The cast and settings are very pleasing. Edna Payne, Henry Aldrich, Lindsey J. Hall and Norbert A. Myles have the leading roles. The story of how "The Wildcat" undertakes to aid the girl and clear her lover's name from the false charge of murder, is interesting and better than the average Western offering. It is not as well constructed as it should have been to bring out the strength of the various situations and lacks some of the feeling that the original story no doubt contained. The photography is good.

THE VILLAGE POSTMASTER (Joker), Dec. 30.—An eccentric comedy number, with Ernest Shield playing the part of a grocer in a small town. He defeats his rival in a race for the post-office, but regrets this after the parcel post comes in. The photography is good and, while this never becomes extremely funny, it contains a good deal of amusement.

WINNING A PRIZE (Imp), Dec. 31.—A comedy with Elsie Albert and Charles Hutchinson in the leads. The girl catches the prize fish and puts it on his line, thinking he is in hard luck financially. The woodland scenes in this are pleasing and it makes a very attractive comedy number.

LOVE AND WATER (Sterling), Dec. 31.—A typical eccentric comedy number with no very distinguishing features about it. The scenes take place in a park; the plot is very slight. Photography good.

PRUNING THE MOVIES (Nestor), Jan. 1.—A gentle satire on the state and city boards of censors, written by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke. A certain pompous individual gathers a board together and sits in judgment on the picture. They cut out hogging, doping, a girl's leg, a hatpin, etc. This is well-pictured and has considerable fun in it. It shows how absurd censorship can become.

IN JUNGLE WILDS (101 Bison), Jan. 2.—A two-reel jungle story, abounding in adventures [illegible] animals. Lions, bears, leopards, chimpanzees and other beasts are employed in a realistic manner. The story concerns rivalry over a girl, who finally marries John. The unsuccessful suitor goes away, but returns later. Jealousy on the part of John follows; the wife flees with her child in a covered wagon and becomes lost in the jungle. The baby's friendly play with the lion cubs was effectively shown. The scenes are all well-pictured and this proves a very interesting number of its type.

CHRISTMAS AT LONESOME GULCH (Frontier), Jan. 2.—This Western number has for its two leading characters a good brother and a bad one. The latter, a bandit, sleeps in his brother's shack in the hills, and the latter shields him from his pursuers. There is a good touch of Christmas sentiment in this, though the handling is none too strong.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, No. 103 (Mutual), Dec. 17.—Views of the Cossacks training for war, President Wilson receiving winners of the corn prizes, the Hanalaei wreck and storm scenes on the Atlantic coast are leading features in this interesting number.

SHADOWS AND SUNSHINE (Princess), Dec. 18.—A very pretty story, introducing the Fairbanks twins. At the beginning two babies are adopted from a home for foundlings. One goes into a wealthy home and the other falls among thieves. They meet later during a house robbery and learn they are sisters. This has a strong pull on the interest.

A COLORED GIRL'S LOVE (Keystone), Dec. 19.—An unusually funny darky number, with good characterizations. The colored swains pull their razors and do a lot of amusing knockabout work. The old man and the girl are also good.

SID NEE'S FINISH (Thanhouser), Dec. 20.—A comedy number in which Sidney Bracey impersonates a Chinaman who starts up in opposition to a widow washerwoman. The action is only moderately amusing.

BILL AND ETHEL AT THE BALL, No. 13 of the "Bill" Series (Komic), Dec. 20.—This can hardly fail to amuse, although it is not quite so fresh as some of the pictures in the Bill series have been. This is a particularly fortunate series on account of the ability of the players who are making it—Fay Tincher, Tod Browning, Tammany Young and Ed Dillon. It is a well directed series, too.

THE SOWER REAPS (American), Dec. 24.—Melodrama of political life, with the villain a district attorney who once bought a jury to convict an accused murderer and is being blackmailed by an old miser. Miser's daughter is the heroine and the hero is a young man running for the office of district attorney. It is not convincingly directed and is no better than fair as an offering. There is some excellent acting and one notices some fine scenes.

WILD WEST LOVE (Keystone), Dec. 21.—An eccentric Western number with some good broncho busting and other features of interest. Chester Conklin appears in the part of a man who robs a stage and steals his own money. This is good scenically and funny also.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL, No. 49 (Reliance), Dec. 21.—The Mutual Girl meets George Barr McCutcheon, who tells her what kind of a story he likes best to write. The tale follows. It is set in southeastern Europe; its hero is an American; its heroine is a princess, and its villain is the prime minister of the little kingdom—just the kind of stuff that McCutcheon loves to turn out. It will hold interest well.

BRASS BUTTONS (Beauty), Dec. 22.—A fine little comedy number based upon the old idea of a girl's love for a uniform. One lover poses as a policeman and the other as a fireman. The photography is clear and the offering a very pleasing one.

THE BETTER WAY (Majestic), Dec. 22.—A picture written and directed by Sydney Cabanne. The centre of it is a girl played by Dorothy Gish, who is amusing in the role and makes it a good offering. The story is fair and holds interest, but without much grip except in its setting forth a character that will appeal to spectators.

THE TIN CAN SHACK (American), Dec. 23.—First-class photography and interesting backgrounds help this picture much and the shack seemingly made from bits of tin likely to make a hit. The story is only fair, but it is ably acted and holds. In one scene Ed Coxen, who plays the lover opposite to Winnifred Greenwood, takes John Steppling, in the role of old man, on his back, and carries him out of the burning shack. This by itself is something of a feat and will attract attention.

A LUCKY DISAPPOINTMENT (Reliance), Dec. 23.—An Arthur Maclay picture with an especially well handled and tense ending. If the minister had been home the eloping farmer's daughter and her beau would have been married, but they are disappointed and have to go home. At the farmer's house there are yegg tinkers trying to force the farmer to give up his money. It is well acted and very effective.

A HAT FULL OF TROUBLE (Thanhouser), Dec. 27.—In this number Frank Farrington appears as a husband of sporty inclinations. He comes home intoxicated and the scene in which the room actually goes around is very funny. The photography is good and for a production of the kind this is acceptable and quite amusing.

THE BIG STICK (Luna-United-Warner's), Dec. 31.—This Luna farce has what always will be attractive with audiences—excellent clown work. The photography, too, is perfect. It is rough in places, but not vulgar. It is a split reel and should prove a good number on almost any program.

TOO MANY WIVES (Luna-United-Warner's), Dec. 31.—A Luna brand farce in which an actor who is hard up agrees to wear the whiskers of a stranger. The actor's wife, the stranger's baby and the stranger's many wives get the actor into temporary trouble and it is amusing to watch it all develop. This also is perfectly photographed.

PUTTING IT OVER (Royal), Jan. 2.—Elopement farce; the girl is in boy's clothes and the boy in girl's, and the boy's objecting father, a minister, does the marrying while the girl's father is kicking at the door. It will go all right, for it is lively and amusing.

KASTUS' RAPID RABBIT HUNT (Eclectic Pathe), Jan.—A scream cartoon picture by J. R. Bray that is indescribable, but full of fun and laughter.

GINGI, SOUTHERN INDIA (Eclectic Pathe), Jan.—On the same reel; a well photographed and colored picture of the Orient. It is well worth while.

WHAT IS IN A NAME (Gaumont Warners) Jan.—A farce comedy by Gaumont, made in America. Its idea is not very new, but it has been done in that gay and sprightly way that makes a seeming fresh offering and it will "go" pretty well.

REGINALD'S REVENGE (Premier-United-Warner's) Jan.—A Premier farce that is very clearly photographed and has rough but speedy action. It is not new in idea, but there is enough freshness to keep it lively. Reginald is not liked by Dad, who knew him as a boy. He dresses as a girl and Dad flirts with him till the deception is discovered and then there comes the chase.

CUPID KICKS A GOAL (Smallwood-United-Warner's), Jan.—A pretty romance farce by Smallwood that is slight, but sprightly and pleasing. It is a good offering for any kind of house. Ethel Grandin plays the girl who elopes with the man of her choice in spite of Dad. There is just enough newness in this elopement to make it seem fresh.

HOBOES (Starlight-United-Warner's), Jan.—A Starlight farce and burlesque full of runs, jumps, tumbles and stunts.

THE PLUMBER (United Program).—A Starlight farce showing how hard times for plumbers in the village suggests to the plumber a scheme to make work. Everybody's house is flooded with water and there is plenty to do and lots of money, but the cause of the trouble becomes known and the miscreants are tarred and feathered. The poor actor must often suffer in these days of stern realism.

DECREE OF DESTINY (Warner's Features), Jan.—A melodrama of a father separated from his lost daughter for many years. It is not convincing or dramatic.

Independent Specials.

HIS UNCLE'S WILL (Victor), Nov. 19.—A two-reel comedy number. The hero's uncle is a student of eugenics and selects his ward as the proper person for the youth to marry. The hero pretends to be engaged to another. Later, when he sees the girl his uncle has selected, he regrets the deception. The story runs along in a light, pleasing manner, without developing any very strong situations. The photography is uneven, some of the scenes being very good and others considerably below the standard. Elsie Albert and Sidney Mason play the young couple.

A STUDY IN SCARLET (Gold Seal), Dec. 29.—A two-reel adaptation of the famous Conan Doyle story, the scenario being written by Grace Cunard. Francis Ford plays the part of Sherlock Holmes. There is of course one of the thick-headed officers from Scotland yard and Dr. Watson to complete the picture. The characterizations are none too strong, but the story is well put on and holds the interest firmly. The finding of Drebber's body is shown and then the manner in which Sherlock Holmes takes the trail, finally rounding up the guilty man. The cabby's story is well-pictured, the American scenes being elaborately staged. The photography is a little dark in places, but on the whole this makes a good offering.

HOUNDED (Rex), Dec. 31.—This two-reel offering makes a strong plea for a better treatment of ex-convicts. Ben Wilson plays the part of a young man falsely imprisoned. He is released for good behavior, but hounded by his former employer, whose daughter he loves. He commits a real crime as a result, is imprisoned again, escapes and kills his persecutor. Mr. Wilson does some very impassioned acting in several scenes. The whole production is strongly presented and makes a good offering of its type, despite its tragic close.

THE BEAUTIFUL UNKNOWN (Victor), Jan. 1.—A three-reel romantic drama, featuring Yona Landowska in a rather sensational dance in the final reel. This is a story of court life; the costuming and settings are adequate but not elaborate. Matt Moore plays the part of a young king looking for a wife. The three sisters arrive from a neighboring province and in the last reel the Princess Yona impersonates a dancer and wins the king's heart. The story is a good one, but has not been handled to the best advantage from an artistic standpoint. The dance in the final reel is very breezy in point of costume and would perhaps make a particular appeal in picture houses with a sporting clientele.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Dec. 21.—Sixth episode. This number continues the Chinatown feature, picturing Ruth in the clutches of a big Chinaman. Dore gets on the scent and is assisted by the police in raiding the den. The Chinaman makes away with Ruth and gets her in a boat. Dore gives pursuit and rescues the girl. This is full of stirring action and excitement and makes a very entertaining instalment.

THE BEAT OF THE YEAR (Reliance), Dec. 19.—A very good two-reel offering from a short story by Robert Livingston Beecher. It shows how a cub reporter unravels a murder mystery and is a tense and well directed picture.

IN FEAR OF HIS PAST (Majestic), Dec. 20.—A two-part story of a villainess who contrives to get a man sent to prison for a theft she commits. He escapes and gets a job as secretary of an old aristocratic Scotch codger who asks for no recommendation from him since he "can read character" himself. Later the villainess also applies for a job as literary secretary and is also accepted. The young man is afraid of her for she knows him, of course, and can give him over to the police. The old codger on account of acting is the real center of interest, a character freshly conceived, amusing and well drawn. He is played by Spottiswoode Aitken. It is a picture that will be liked and has been well staged and directed.

UNDER FALSE COLORS (Thanhouser), Dec. 22.—A two-reel offering in which an heiress with artistic yearnings induces a country girl to go into society. Flo La Badie plays the latter part in an appealing way. The heiress becomes jealous of her protege and reveals the deception during a dance, afterward repenting. But the country girl goes back to her own people. This is constructed in an entertaining way and well photographed. It makes a good offering of the society type.

THE FACE ON THE CEILING (Broncho), Dec. 30.—A two-reel crook story. In the beginning Walter Edwards is seen as Buck Ryan conducting a school for young pickpockets. Later a detective gets wind of the gang's activities and cleverly works his way into the confidence of the gang. He falls in love with Ryan's daughter and she saves him when things threaten an end to his career. Buck Ryan is caught and hung in a trap door leading to a roof, which gives title to the production. Taken as a picture of low criminal life this is convincing and holds the interest.

THE DEADLY SPARK (Kaybee), Jan. 1.—A two-reel story of a girl who elopes with a society man who turns out to be a notorious card sharp. The card game is well staged and the photography very good. The later scenes become more conventional, picturing the scheme to rob her father's safe, and the placing of live wires near it. Though somewhat obvious in plot the closing scenes are dramatic and well presented.

THE EYE OF JUSTICE (Eclair, Warner's Features), Jan.—A three-reel Eclair offering made in France with a story of home life. The bad son burglarizes his father's house and safe and the secretary is accused. The end is years later when the man is blind and poor. Chance has brought the two families together for a moment and the secret of the whole transaction is out. The sentiment is acceptable and the characters intelligently acted; but the story is not wholly convincing although there is enough truth in it to keep it entertaining. The photography, sets and scenes are very good. A fair offering.

THE LASH OF FATE (Features Ideal, Warner's), Jan.—A two-part Features Ideal offering made in France. It tells a rural story that interests, though it has not much gripping quality, and is full of charming and perfectly photographed scenes in rural France, farms and farm carts, smithy, village streets and country groves, etc.

ALICE JOYCE CONTRIBUTES TO ACTORS' FUND.

Daniel Frohman announces the receipt of a check of $500 from Alice Joyce as a donation to the Actors' Fund, accompanied by a letter from Miss Joyce expressing her appreciation of the work being done by that worthy charity. The Moving Picture World takes this opportunity to bring to the attention of all photoplayers the present necessity for money of the Actors' Fund and remind them that donations will be thankfully received.

L. J. BAMBERGER DIAGNOSES SLACK OF BUSINESS IN MIDWEST.

L. J. Bamberger, assistant to C. R. Seelye, director of sales of the World Film Corporation, and who has just returned from a trip through the Midwest, says that exhibitors do not seem to be making as much money as in other parts. He says that they think it is due to hard times; but that the main trouble is due to lack of advertising by exhibitors. He finds plenty of evidence to prove it; for houses that use newspaper space, billboards, window display cards and a good quantity of heralds are not complaining. "They get something good; they talk about it, and are running their shows to a good business for two or three days and at top prices."

TO REVIEW AND REPORT ON PICTURES.

The Motion Picture Reviewing and Reporting Company, incorporated last week, has for its purpose the reviewing and reporting of all feature picture releases throughout the United States, Canada and Europe. M. B. Schlesinger, who is the general manager of the company, is also the special New York representative of the United Motion Pictures Co., of Buffalo, and the All Feature Co., of Canada, in which capacity he reports on and buys all the feature pictures for the various theaters and exchanges of these concerns. The new company has taken a suite of offices in the Putnam Building, 1495 Broadway, New York.

MARIE DRESSLER PICTURE A "KNOCK OUT."

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," in which Marie Dressler, Charles Chaplin and Mabel Normand play the leading roles and which was released last Monday by the Alco Film Corporation, has provoked the greatest bookings in the history of that organization. Four prints of this production are booked up so far ahead in New York State alone that two extra prints are being secured by the New York Alco Exchange to take care of the incidental bookings. Reports from the coast show all records broken.

Warner's Montreal Office Busy

FROM the Montreal office of Warner's Features, Inc., come statements which cast aside all doubts as to the extent the war is affecting Canadian trade. Though it is true that business is being materially affected, the probable falling off in trade is about five per cent. This is also the opinion of several prominent exchange men and exhibitors in Montreal. The Montreal office of Warner's Features is managed by H. A. Fischer. Manny Feldstein, the general manager for Canada, has likewise his headquarters in the Canadian metropolis. Both gentlemen are experienced in the film game, and have been located in Montreal for the past three years. Mr. Feldstein is a native of New York City, and Mr. Fischer hails from the Keystone State. Up till last June they jointly managed the Canadian Film Company, Mr. Feldstein taking care of the Famous Players output, while Mr. Fischer looked after the interests of the Universal program. The favorable positions held in Montreal by the above-mentioned productions are not a little due to the efforts and business acumen of these gentlemen. When the Universal people assumed the management of their own affairs in Canada last June, both gentlemen connected with Warner's in the capacities mentioned.

Manny Feldstein.

To the Montreal correspondent of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Feldstein stated: "During my last trip through Canada in the interests of the firm, I found everywhere signs of Warner's success. The war is affecting trade to a certain extent, but nothing to despair of. The best and only weapons to fight hard times with are good shows. You could not wish for better proof of this than conditions in Montreal these last few weeks. A large legitimate house put on big features and 'S. R. O.' business was the rule every night." Mr. Fischer, in discussing the position of Warner's productions in Montreal, said: "The new program which we are issuing is meeting with a success beyond all our expectations. The other features we are handling are also in large demand." The reporter was then shown around the ample quarters at the firm's disposal. A large renovating machine has only recently been installed, and an exhibiting room is in course of being fitted up. Messrs. Feldstein and Fischer were the first to include trade shows as a necessary adjunct to a film exchange in Montreal, and exhibitors will soon have the privilege of viewing a film before it is booked. Being asked if we would like to make the acquaintance of John, we consented though somewhat mystified. John turned out to be the firm's mascot, a pugnacious little bull pup.

FOREIGN RIGHTS FOR LIFE PHOTO.

Bishop, Pessers & Lorimore announce that they have secured the exclusive rights of all the releases of the Life-Photo Film Company, for Great Britain and her colonies other than Australia and Canada. This is an example of the many excellent programmes that Mr. Pessers closed before sailing for Europe on December 30, when he took back to Great Britain the agencies for a number of America's feature picture makers. Looks as though there was still a foreign market.

"The Three of Us"

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS five reel picture, "The Three of Us," made by Rolfe Photo Plays for the Alco program, may be depended upon to make a strong appeal on account of the nearness of its interest to the people's hearts. It is based on Rachel Crothers' play and its title comes from the name of a gold mine, the sole legacy of three children. The girl (Mabel Taliaferro) and the boy (Creighton Hale) are growing up; the youngest is a child and these three are balanced to get the most, dramatically, out of the lad's straining away from the home ties. They have a gold claim. The father had thought it good and the girl is doing her best to make the brother keep on with the fight; but he is dreaming of the delights of the city.

The second interest of the offering is a melodramatic love story in which Steve, Edwin Carewe, the hero, loves the girl, Rhy. He, too, is having discouragement in finding pay dirt in his mine, located next to "The Three of Us." The villain, Beresford (Irving Cummings), is a sort of capitalist's man. They know that Steve's claim is good and want Beresford to get it for them. Steve has an option that will expire at noon in a few days, and this option is the pivot around which the action turns with increasing speed. At the climax every character is influenced by the fate of that option and events are happening fast. It was directed by John W. Noble and has been well conducted in all its vigorously alive scenes, ably conducted in its love story scenes, and acceptably conducted in those scenes in which the background characters appear. It will make a good offering.

The scene that will be termed the "big" scene, the big "punch," is a fight between Steve and Beresford. The latter has stolen the option after Rhy, with, it must be confessed, some dramatic forethought, had taken it from Steve and left it in a jar on her shelf. She had seen a paper like it in his pocket at a party and now finding it gone, goes to his cabin to steal it back from him. Steve sees her there and sees the option too. It strikes him that she has played him false and is in the cabin because she wants to be there. There is a terrible fight between him and Beresford, they really break the cabin up. The best scenes in the picture are the home-like scenes and the most clearly drawn character is Steve, by Edwin Carewe, though the acting on the whole does all concerned credit. The photography and stage craft are very fair.

INCE A HUMAN DYNAMO.

Thomas H. Ince, chief of the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, where so much has been done to enhance the Mutual program, eats up time as most people do a meal. He works eighteen hours a day. Work is play, happiness, everything to him, and this quality has earned him the title of the human dynamo. Every morning he leaves his Hollywood home at seven o'clock and reaches Inceville by motor, and once there he arranges the day's work for his corps of directors, and then goes out personally to superintend the more important productions. The entire plant comes under his supervision, and with a dozen plays being filmed at the same time, this famous gentleman manages to keep very busy.

Betty Nansen Coming to America

BETTY NANSEN, of the Danish Royal Theatre, and known in America as the wonderful leading woman of the "Great Northern" pictures has already left Copenhagen, Denmark, to play in a series of big offerings that William Fox is preparing. She arrived in New York on the "United States" of the Scandinavian-American line as was expected on December 23. Her coming is an event of international artistic and literary importance and a large committee headed by Professor Brander Mathews of Columbia University and including many prominent fellow countrymen of hers and American players, among them Mary Shaw, and also critics and literary people who take this chance to pay, as it were, their respects to Ibsen through her.

Betty Nansen.

Betty Nansen's relationship to the Ibsen plays is peculiarly interesting. The Danish Royal Theatre was built and endowed by the Danish king for her to play these great Scandinavian dramas in and many of them were written by Ibsen with special view to having Betty Nansen play in them just as, at present, Sir James Barrie writes plays especially for Maud Adams. She is endowed with the power and scope that made it worth while for a writer like Ibsen to plan situations for her, and it is not saying too much to claim for her, now that Sarah Bernhardt has retired, the leading place among living actresses.

Such an artist naturally could not be induced to come to America without a princely recompense. William Fox has in preparation some big things and has felt that Betty Nansen is alone best able to do just what he wanted and so he induced her to come by an offer of $25,000 a year. A tug will take the committee down the harbor when the United States comes in to meet and welcome her.

A. M. KENNEDY SELECTED KRITERION PRODUCERS.

Franchises covering the manufacture of films for the Kriterion Program have been issued with great care and on an entirely original plan. The instigators have not selected their manufacturers indiscriminately. They entrusted to A. M. Kennedy the entire supervision covering the selection of manufacturers and the granting of contracts to the manufacturers in question. Mr. Kennedy was particularly well adapted to the requirements as he had for the last seven years been connected in an executive capacity as general manager and managing director of some of the largest and most successful film manufacturers.

One of the producing companies of the Kriterion—namely, the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, located in Santa Barbara, Cal., is under the general management of Mr. Kennedy. He has entirely reorganized this company to take care of the releases tendered it by the Kriterion people. This company is considered to be one of the best equipped motion picture companies in California, where it is well known that 70 per cent. or more of the films produced in America are made.

THEATER ON CHURCH SITE.

The Crescent Amusement Company, of Brockton, Mass., lessee of the New Orpheum theater, that city, has purchased for more than $60,000 the Old St. Patrick's Church building and rectory in Brockton upon which the company will build a big moving picture and vaudeville theater. Plans are being drawn, and it will be one of the biggest houses in New England. It will be 170 feet on Main street and will be about 150 feet deep. Work will begin on the erection of the structure in the early spring.

"The Exploits of Elaine"

First Instalment of the New Pathe-Hearst Serial Promises Much That Is Interesting.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

FOLLOWING on the success of "The Perils of Pauline," the new Pathe-Hearst Serial, "The Exploits of Elaine" from the pen of Arthur B. Reeve and picturized by Chas. L. Goddard, bids fair to surpass in popularity its predecessor, judging from the briskness with which the first two-reel instalment, entitled "The Clutched Hand," strikes the imagination.

In this first instalment the audience is given just enough daylight on the mysterious forms and happenings which characterize the story to arouse the most rabid interest as to what is to follow. From the mysterious death of Mr. Dodge, the wealthy president of an insurance company, and which, as the audience is shown, is brought about by the agent of "The Clutched Hand," through some mysterious use of an electric current and the fumes of a certain chemical diffused into the room above, where Dodge is in the act of using the telephone, by means of a connection with the heating register, the clever scientific detective work of "Craig Kennedy" is brought into play, when he discovers with astonishment that the finger-prints on the safe and articles handled by the murderer are an exact duplicate of his own.

At this point of the story our curiosity is suspended on to the next instalment, when the hope of solving the mystery will no doubt be deferred for several succeeding releases, the first of which is expected to make its bow to the public on Monday, December 28th. Fourteen weekly episodes of two reels each compile the series.

The mystery to be solved by "Craig Kennedy" is, "What, or who is the Clutched Hand that so surely descends and crushes life from the unfortunate individual who ignores its warning?"

Arnold Daly plays the role of "Craig Kennedy," Pearl White, that of Elaine, whose exploits will be followed with intense interest. William Riley is seen to advantage in the short-lived role of President Dodge. Other well-known names appearing in the cast are Sheldon Lewis, Raymond Owens, and Robin Towney. Director Wharton is engaged in the work of guiding this excellent cast through the intricate paths of the big serial.

"WITHOUT HOPE" WINS APPLAUSE.

On Sunday night, December 20th, the first of the Flamingo Comedies was shown for public exhibition to a crowded audience at the Olympia Theater, Broadway and 107th street, New York City.

"Without Hope" was the first production decided upon from the prize-winning scenarios of the American Telegraph and Chartered Theaters Corporation national competitive contest, and was a picturization of the work of Elaine Sterne, who has won many prizes recently for stories and scenarios.

The picture was greeted with loud applause and great enthusiasm. It certainly made a distinctive success and bookings from all over the country received through the Zone office of the Sawyer Film Corporation indicate that "Without Hope" will be a record-breaker.

Mrs. Julia R. Hurley

TO those who have seen Mrs. Hurley in photoplays, it is perhaps superfluous of the wonderful charm and splendid dramatic force instilled into every portrayal by this little lady. No matter how insignificant the part may be, in the hands of this gifted actress, it at once assumes stellar proportions; no better proof of this is her assumption of the part of the mother in "The Jungle," as well as her later interpretation of the grandmother in "The Price He Paid," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

One has but to witness the recent picture production of "Il Trovatore." Though the old gypsy mother is a small part in the original story, her taunts, her jeers and threats and finally her intensely gripping stake scene is uppermost in our memory.

Now that Youth and Beauty has had her full quota of adulation and stardom in the picture field, perhaps some enterprising producer will discover that a star chosen from the ranks of ability, ripened and mellowed by the finger of time, will go far towards re-awakening the somewhat cloyed public interest.

Mrs. Hurley's long association with the things theatrical has won for her the soubriquet of "the grand old lady of the stage." Her life story would almost be a history of the drama in this country and through all its vicissitudes she has retained the spirit of youth and a delightful personal charm that has endeared her to a host of friends. Pictures without number she has graced by her presence in the cast.

CHICAGO POLICE PASS "OFFICER 666."

George Kleine's "Officer 666" was passed by the Chicago censors last week after an exhibition before an assembly of city dignitaries which included Major Funkhouser, Chief of Police Gleason, Assistant Chief Scheuttler, a battalion of plain-clothes men, private secretaries and others. For an hour and a half the official crime-suppressing machinery of Chicago chuckled and giggled to the merry story of "Officer 666." Major Funkhouser then passed the film with two minor changes; namely, the elimination of a subtitle and the shortening of the scene in which the thief gags Officer 666 before donning his clothes and making his escape on the seat of a patrol wagon.

MR. POLITES DENIES HE SOLD THE REX.

In the Moving Picture World of December 26 announcement was made that J. D. Polites, proprietor of the Rex and Minerva Theaters in Steubenville, Ohio, has sold these houses to W. J. Curn. Mr. Polites informs us that he has not sold the Rex Theater, of which he says he is still the owner. He adds that he has promoted it to an amusement house of the highest standard, "and having made it the most successful enterprise of its kind in the country I have no disposition to sell it, and it is not for sale, and there is no prospect that I will ever place it on the market. The Rex is my baby."

ROSKAM RELEASES "ANOTHER GIRL."

The little lady arrived in his new home at twelve forty-five Monday morning. Two hours before that time the the happy mother and Eddie were enjoying a special performance of "The Pit."

At the time of going to press, the new arrival, the mother, Eddie, and the Life Photo Film Corporation were doing well.

"My Lady High and Mighty"

Two-Reel Victor Comedy in Which Mary Fuller Sets the Pace.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

STRICTLY a comic expression of the legitimate sort, without any other mission in this wide world than to make one laugh, "My Lady High and Mighty" fulfills to the very utmost the intention of its inception. And had Mary Fuller been moulded to the part she could not have given a more truthful presentation of the role of the tomboy Lady Mary.

In the preparation of the scenario Elaine Stern has paid more attention to the delineation of the character of Lady Mary than to any detail of the story, presenting her as a wayward, vivacious type, by the very force of her character carrying everything before her, and doing it in the most comic fashion. One feels tremendously sorry for the small dog whose "doggy" odor she seeks to annihilate by scrubbing him for twenty minutes in hot, soapy water, while the young lover who, in consequence of chagrin resulting from My Lady's treatment of him, betakes himself to his island solitude to brood over the girl that longs for a lover of the caveman type, calls forth but a passing smile and a shrug of anticipation, but it is at the point where My Lady's temper gets the better of her, and she greets the visit of her father, an aged but wealthy suitor, and the minister, to her room, with an unmaidenly shower of slippers, shoes and other articles of maidenly attire, that the most truly laughable situation in the picture is arrived at.

It cannot be denied that "My Lady High and Mighty" is distinctly a one-star feature. Regardless of the fact that Chas. Ogle, R. Benton and others have handled well the roles allotted to them, Mary Fuller walks away with the picture so spontaneous and charming is the manner in which she portrays the leading character of the play. Lady Mary of the picture, be it known, has the most utter disregard for conventions of any sort, and so disregards the matter of the application of sex to dress, that she apparently feels no compunction whatever at appearing in public in a fetching trouser suit.

"My Lady High and Mighty" may easily be classed as one of the best of modern comedy offerings, and the Universal Film Company may justly feel proud of the effort. The picture will be released Jan. 11.

PAUL PANZER GOES ON TOUR.

Paul W. Panzer, long time Pathe player, who has so materially added to his reputation by his work in the extensively circulated "Perils of Pauline," is to take a vacation from the screen and go on tour. For the week of Dec. 14 to 19 he appeared at the Auditorium Theater in Malden, Mass. After a holiday at his home he will on Jan. 1 under the management of Bill Casey of the John Quigley Circuit visit the theaters of New England. The trip will extend over three months. Mr. Panzer will take with him a fine lobby display. His entertainment will be on lines similar to those so successfully employed by him in his visits to photoplay theaters in the metropolitan district and on his trip of a year ago through the Middle West. At the conclusion of his engagement he will return to the Pathe studio.

"The Honor of Bill Jackson"

Charge of Big Herd of African Buffaloes and Other Sensations Are in Stirring Warner's Features Two-Reel Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT is probable that while men have red blood in them still the world will never grow tired of these thrilling, out-of-doors melodramas or to term them by their most attractive feature; these wild-life adventure pictures. "The Honor of Bill Jackson," is a two-part offering by the French Eclair Company which many will think was taken in Africa. It opens in France with a few scenes in which two lovers are parted. The hero goes to Africa and the girl marries an engineer chosen by her father. The story is not in the strict sense a melodrama, for the girl and her husband—they also go to Africa—are happy with each other till the end. Later on, they take the hero who has been run over by a stampeded herd in and tend him till he recovers and he is able to repay their kindness by making a heroic and thrilling ride to Johannesburg and bringing the mounted police when the mine hands (the engineer has charge of big mining operations) rise and attempt to carry the works by storm.

The special quality that gives distinction to the picture lies chiefly in the big, convincing way in which the incidents have been put on the screen. The choice of backgrounds, too, is most fortunate, they are outlandish and are what one would expect of African wilds, velt and swamp. The hero, a hunter, is charged by a buffalo bull, he slips in running and the big herd, on-coming at a gallop goes, so it seems, over him, trampling him down in mud. Some other hunters, whom we have seen splashing through an extensive, shallow swamp with the water just up to the mid-legs of their horses, find him and carry him to a nearby ranch house. This happens to be the home of the girl of the early scenes and of her husband. They make him welcome and restore him to health.

While the wife of the engineer is away shopping in Johannesburg, which is ten hours' hard ride from the mine, the workmen rise and the engineer, trying to get to his offices ahead of the mob, is hurt. The hero rides to get the police and to warn the engineer's wife. A bridge over a deep ravine must be crossed on the way.. The miners also think of this and determine to destroy it to keep outside help from coming to save the engineer and his party. They reach the bridge before the hero and set a bomb which actually goes off just as he is crossing. The bridge is demolished except the part on which his horse stands. The engineer's wife on the other side sees his predicament and throws him a rope on which he makes a crossing and they get the mounted officers who on arriving at the mines have a brisk engagement with the rioters and save the home. Then the hunter rides away with a free conscience. It is all done in a thrilling life-like way and will be counted a very good picture.

WALTER EDWARDS IN DESERT PICTURE.

An invasion of the Mojave Desert, which began in an automobile, but which terminated on the backs of plodding donkeys, was made recently by a company of players from the forces of New York Motion Picture Corp. to obtain a number of important scenes for "A Midas of the Desert," a gripping two-part production soon to be released by the Kay Bee Co. Jan. 8. The story teems with an interest in the life of an old miser who, disliked by his townspeople, goes into the desert in search of more gold.

The title role is played by Walter Edwards who instead of being satisfied—as are a number of other companies—with the desert stretch near Playa del Rey, journey all the way to Nevada for his realism. Mr. Edwards brought back with him a collection of toads and other reptiles which infest the desert and they are now on exhibition at the Inceville studios.

DONALD GALLAGHER IN ZUDORA.

Donald Gallagher is a newcomer to the Mutual program. He is probably the most famous of boy actors and is to make his initial appearance for Thanhouser in the eighth episode of "Zudora." In the past he has distinguished himself in plays with such celebrities of the stage as Sol Smith Russell, Maxine Elliott, Elenor Robson, Arnold Daly, Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner. In the juvenile performance of "Alias Jimmie Valentine," given at Wallack's, Donald Gallagher played Jimmie in a manner that delighted even Mr. Warner, and now, opposite Miss Snow, this young man goes through several of the most dramatic scenes and finally through a climax it requires histrionic skill to make sincere and convincing.

"The Sign of the Cross"

William Farnum Gives Impressive Characterization in Famous Players' Adaptation of Barrett Play.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT is an elaborately staged production which the Famous Players has given us in its four-part adaptation of Wilson Barrett's play "The Sign of the Cross." Added to its unusual pictorial value is the factor of dramatic quality, the adherence to the central theme, the main action, in spite of the large cast and the possibilities for divergence from the straight line. The picture will appeal to those who are ordinarily indifferent in matters of faith; to men and women of religious conviction deep or less deep it should appeal with great strength.

William Farnum is Marcus Superbus, the prefect of Rome who, on sight, falls under the spell of the charms of Mercia, the Christian maid. Mr. Farnum displays power in his interpretation—the strength of restraint. He is endowed with the physique and the bearing that fit the conception of what the character should be. Rosina Henley is Mercia. Miss Henley carries out her part with full appreciation of its demands; it is a role requiring the portrayal of the spirit of the Christian martyr, yet revealing unexpressed love for one who is without the bounds of her sect. One of the finest moments of the story is where Superbus, carried away by his passion, showers kisses upon the shrinking girl. As a woman of faith she repels him, but it is the weak-hearted battle of a being under stress of conflicting emotions.

Sheridan Block as Nero, the altogether bad and worthless, contributes to the atmosphere of the story. So, too, does Georgini Majeroni as Tigellinus. Where one is the reeling profligate, the other is the personification of all that is cold, calculating, unmoved by his surroundings. The remainder of the cast is worthy of the story and its manner of telling.

We have said before that the picture is elaborately staged. It is in the interiors that this phase of the subject stands out. The exteriors are those of a great estate, with backgrounds of marked beauty and Roman atmosphere. Of the studio, however, we have the great scene of the arena, of the palace, of the street and its mobs, of the prison. On the dramatic side the subject is filled with action, which, of course, turns upon the persecution of Christians by Nero. The culmination, as Superbus with Mercia goes to his death as a Christian, in its impressiveness matches what has preceded. "The Sign of the Cross" is well done.

GIEGERICH QUITS REVIEW.

Charles J. Giegerich has resigned from the position of Motion Picture Editor of the New York Review, and will devote his time to special motion picture advertising and publicity work.

Under his direction, the Shubert publication, the only paper devoted to theatricals that did not have a regular picture department, opened its columns to motion picture news. The recent publication of several articles in this paper, opposing the interests of the picture industry, is the main reason for Mr. Giegrich's resignation.

A. H. Van Buren

A. H. VAN BUREN, who has achieved a notable success on the stage as a leading man, has joined the Lubin players in Philadelphia and is playing the leading juvenile role in "The District Attorney," which was written by Charles Klein and Harrison Gray Fiske and adapted for the camera by Clay M. Greene. Barry O'Neil is directing the production.

This is Van Buren's first experience in pictures and in order to join the Lubin players he gave up the leading part in a new play by Frank Bacon and James Montgomery entitled "Me and Grant," which is to be produced in New York Christmas week.

A. H. Van Buren.

Van Buren's first engagement on the stage was as utility man with the Keith Stock Company in Philadelphia and Barry O'Neil was the director of the company. During the engagement O'Neil predicted that Van Buren would be a leading man within three years. Exactly two years and nine months later Van Buren was leading man with the Proctor All Star Company at the Fifth Avenue Theater, New York, with Amelia Bingham as leading woman, Frances Starr as ingenue, Charles Dickson, the comedian, and the rest of the company equally well known.

Van Buren has been leading man with Amelia Bingham, Henrietta Crossman, Virginia Harned, Odette Tyler, Laurette Taylor and Cecelia Loftus and has had prominent roles with James K. Hackett, Robert Edeson, George Fawcett and other prominent players. For the past four seasons he was in stock in Washington, where he starred with Dorothy Bernard at the Columbia Theater. He was Ben Hur in the play of the name during its largest revival. He has played everything from musical comedy to tragedy. Notable among them is "The Music Master," he being probably the only man besides Mr. Warfield to play it. He was the third man to play Consul Bernick in Ibsen's "Pillars of Society" in English, George Fawcett being the first and Wilton Lackaye the second.

"My being with the Lubin players has a rather sentimental reason," said Mr. Van Buren. "Barry O'Neil was my first director in stock and his prediction came true, therefore, I was anxious that he should be my first director in pictures."

WALLACE EDDINGER IN "A GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has engaged Wallace Eddinger to star in the forthcoming film production of "A Gentleman of Leisure," replacing Henry Woodruff in the stellar role of that piece. Mr. Woodruff was, unfortunately, taken ill almost immediately upon his arrival at the Lasky Studios in California and, as the release could not be delayed, it became necessary to engage another star. Mr. Eddinger was induced to sign at short notice and has already left for California.

Wallace Eddinger is one of the most noted legitimate stars in the American dramatic field, and has been particularly identified with productions and characters such as the stellar role of "A Gentleman of Leisure." The part of the adventurous young society man who wagers that he can commit a burglary without being apprehended should suit him perfectly.

This will be the first time that Mr. Eddinger has ever starred on the screen and the forthcoming release will therefore be of special importance. He has recently been the most important actor under the Cohan and Harris management playing Broadway houses and long and highly successful engagements in such hits as "The Only Son," "Officer 666" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

"Are They Born or Made"

Four-Reel Humanology Picture of Great Interest, Written by Jack Rose, and Showing How a Boy Became a Gangster (Warner's Features).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE title, "Are They Born or Made?" puts the question whether criminals of the gangster type are born or made by conditions. The picture doesn't attempt to answer it; its object is to give a little light on some of the conditions of underworld life—how the world seems to the man or boy penniless in a big city; the sense of injustice that he feels at being hindered and hampered; how ward politics makes use of the underworld, and the relationship of the political "Leader" to the gang leader and his followers in the ward slum. Some very vivid and, to this reviewer, quite convincing, pictures of a reform (the sub-title asks whether it is not a "deform") school are not the least interesting part of this deeply interesting and in many ways extraordinary offering.

Scene from "Are They Born or Made" (Humanology).

All that the picture—it was written by Jack Rose—shows of underworld life is convincing. Its scenes have the humanity that truth gives and have been so simply and naturally done that they hold irresistibly—the credit for this is due to the skill of the director, Lawrence McGill, who is truly among the not too many really first-class producers of the day. It is the quality of these scenes that make the picture a big offering. The story is very fair; but it fades behind the vitally interesting and important things that it brings forward for us to see. While there isn't a single individual character real enough to make acquaintance with in the picture, it is, the whole of it, a picture of an individual character, let us call it Conditions for want of a better name, that is expedient for us to know, for are we not living in the same house with it? I can assure all that this offering will bore none and that the vast majority will be very glad to see it.

The film is said to tell certain phases of Rose's own early experiences which had as their setting a slum environment. Jack Rose claims that the picture deals with actual conditions in the life of the underworld, with its slum types, its political types and its gangsters. There is, in fact, a good measure of truth in what it portrays—it has no melodramatic intentions and pays more attention to the experience of its characters than to the story. Yet it has all been made interesting and one doesn't need to care a fig for prison reform or reform of any kind to be deeply interested in its humanity. It is four reels in length.

LASKY RETURNS TO CALIFORNIA.

After a stay of less than a month in New York City, Jesse L. Lasky left for California again on Dec. 21, and will remain there for some time supervising the various new productions which are being made at the Lasky studios.

During his brief stay in New York Mr. Lasky has held a series of conferences with David Belasco and their decisions as to the next productions in the Lasky-Belasco series will be announced shortly.

Mr. Lasky is himself a Californian and welcomes the business necessity of spending the winter on the Pacific coast. Within a week of his own departure, his entire family will follow to remain there throughout the winter season.

Craufurd Kent

ANOTHER legitimate actor has been added to the role of film favorites in the person of Craufurd Kent. The All Comedy Films, Inc., have made arrangements for his services and their productions will be released through the Kriterion Service. Mr. Kent will be remembered by his roles in "Our Miss Gibbs" and "The Pink Lady." His best performance, however, was with "Adele."

Craufurd Kent.

He is of English birth and after his graduation from English Universities he entered the insurance business where he was known to be the youngest deputy underwriter. The depression in this line caused Mr. Kent to look for another field of endeavor. Having an exquisite tenor voice he entered the field of operatic work. He then took up the art of dancing and came to this country as juvenile lead in "Our Miss Gibbs." From this time his success was assured.

Last summer he played "Adele" in the Gaiety theater in London and an amusing incident happened at this time. The London papers making comment on the performance stated that it was a marked success, although Mr. Kent could have scored much better were he to use his lines in an American accent instead of trying to assume the English accent.

MARGUERITE CLARK IN CALIFORNIA.

Marguerite Clark, the bewitching little star who recently made her first triumphant appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players' production of "Wildflower," succeeded by "The Crucible," is now at the Pacific Coast Studios of the Famous Players, appearing in a film adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's beautiful novel and play, "The Pretty Little Sister of Jose," the former famous starring vehicle of Maude Adams. Miss Clark will play the title role of Jose's sister, little Pepita, the tiny, exquisite Spanish girl of a thousand moods and whims, who has vowed never to lose her heart, but who, when finally conquered by the handsome Sebastiano, loves truly and devotedly, ready to give her life for his, read to die when she thinks him dying, and gladly ready to live again when the good saints to whom she prays give her back his life.

With her fascinating dark beauty and charming grace of form and motion, Miss Clark is peculiarly adapted to the role of the dainty little dark-eyed belle of old Spain. The scenic environment of California lends itself faithfully to the atmosphere of the story, and its rapidly changing development, with its wealth of color and romance, should result in a thoroughly unusual and picturesque photoplay.

WHO'S WHO.

By F. H. Richardson.

The writer is in receipt of literature from a publishing company, in which he is invited to have his picture and autobiography placed in a forthcoming book entitled, "Who's Who In the Movie Game." There is also an accompanying blank which, to all intents and purposes, invites one to write his own autobiography, whereupon it will be inserted in the aforesaid book, provided the following sentence of the accompanying letter be complied with: "Send us your photograph, fill out the information blank enclosed, attach your check for five dollars in payment for five of the books and mail to us."

Presumably if you do not come across with the five you won't be one of the "Who's," regardless of what kind or size of a cog you may be in the wheel of the moving picture game. To the mind of the writer this book is simply an invitation to a man to advertise himself at an expense of five dollars. It seems to me it is about time this particular brand of foolishness be squelched.

"The Idler"

Charles Richman and Cathrine Countiss Do Excellent Work in Box Office Attraction Five-Part Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN his portrayal of Mark Cross, the leading character of "The Idler," which the Box Office Attraction Company is presenting in five parts, Charles Richman gives a performance that goes far to overcome the handicap of a loosely knit medium. His support, too, by Cathrine Countiss and a cast including Claire Whitney, Stuart Holmes, Walter Hitchcock, Harry Spingler and Maud Turner Gordon, is excellent. In its earlier stages the adaptation of Haddon Chambers' story does not bite; there is a lack of clarity, of cohesiveness.

The picture is well staged, and it is plainly to be seen that expense has not been spared, even in minor matters. The story has wide scope—of marked contrast—of country estates and of the primitive West; of drawing-rooms and of bar-rooms. We see men of position in society in England transferred to the open. The strength of the story is concentrated in its latter half; here it is that the action holds.

Scene from "The Idler" (Box Office).

Mr. Richman has the role of a man of means who finds his hasty marriage to an actress debars him from seeking the hand of the woman he really loves. John Harding, a man without means, in love with the same woman, goes to the western states and meets Cross, who has previously emigrated. When Harding gets word from home that he has fallen heir to the family estates he makes preparations to return, but just before doing so he accidentally shoots a man he is trying to save from getting entangled in a card game. Harding gets away and returns to England, where he wins the woman for whose hand the two had been suitors, failing to reveal to her that the wife of Cross had been killed in the States and that consequently he is free. It is when Cross and the brother of the man who had been shot return to England that complications follow fast. In the end there is a happy reconciliation.

Miss Countiss has the role of the woman deceived by Harding. She displays skill as well as feeling in her interpretation. Claire Whitney, too, as the sister who falls in love with the young man come to England on revenge bent, is a factor in the picture. Stuart Holmes is Simon, the brother; Walter Hitchcock is Harding, and Miss Gordon, the actress wife.

Some of the scenes that stand out are of the coaching party, the stormy interview in the dressing-room, with the dancers on the stage in the background; the fire in the bar-room, and the many clashes between the conflicting elements when the men have returned to England.

Gertie the Dinosaurus.

Winsor McCay, the famed creator of Little Nemo and a host of other fictions known to little ones and grown-ups, in his "Gertie the Dinosaurus," contributes to the gayety of picture-goers. His work for the Vitagraph Company several years ago when 11,000 drawings were photographed for the screen will be remembered by many. If his present production lacks the novelty of his premier effort, nevertheless it is highly interesting and amusing as well. We are told that in the making of "Gertie" Mr. McCay has made 10,000 drawings, and we get a glimpse of them, just as we did in the earlier picture. That means a lot of work, but it was worth while. As an introduction, we see pictures of the Museum of Natural History and of the bones of a dinosaur which in life was estimated to be 70 feet long and 20 feet in height. A wager is made between the cartoonist and one of his confreres that he cannot make the creature come to life. McCay wins the wager, and we see it paid.

Gertie shows us Mr. McCay's conception of what the creature was like. In obedience to commands she stands first on one foot and then on the other. She wags her head; she picks up an elephant by the tail and hurls him far out into the lake, but the animal gets back a moment later by using his trunk as a hose and showering Gertie. She retorts by drinking up the lake; we see the waters recede. She dances and she sulks—great tears roll. She does many other things, all of them funny.

"Gertie the Dinosaurus" is being released by the Box Office Attraction Company.

Adelbert S. Elliott

ADELBERT S. ELLIOTT, motion picture player and director, has a record that reads like a scenario of a regular "thriller." He was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1880. Two years later his father inherited a stock farm in Pennsylvania and brought the young man to the new country. By the time he was eight years of age he was riding almost everything with four legs on the farm, specializing on horses, becoming an experienced "broncho buster." Naturally this training led him right up to the equestrian department of the Barnum & Bailey show and he put in the next five years with the "big tops." Five years was enough of the "sawdust" for young Elliott and he took a turn at vaudeville and then joined the Henry Dallas Musical Comedy Company, then touring India, China and Japan.

Adelbert S. Elliott.

It was during the company's engagement in China that the Ning Poo rebellion broke out and the city of Ning Poo was surrounded by thousands of wild Chinamen. Count Von de Leighton, a captain in the Chinese army, called upon foreigners to lead the Chinese troops and Elliott was among the volunteers and helped to put down the rebellion. For this service the Emperor of China made him a Lieutenant in the Imperial Army. He returned to the United States as a member of the suite of Prince Ching who attended the St. Louis exposition, and held the rank of first lieutenant and mandarin of the third grade.

Some time later Mr. Elliott resigned his position with the Chinese Government and went to Japan as a guide to a motion picture company which was to take pictures of the Russian-Japanese war. This was his first introduction to the picture game. Since then he has worked for many of the best-known picture companies, the latest engagement being with the Centaur company.

STEFANSSON RESCUE FILM TO HAVE BROADWAY RUN.

Arrangements are being made to present the "Rescue of the Stefansson Arctic Expedition" in one of the large Broadway theaters. The plans are not entirely completed as yet, but it is understood that the run will begin shortly after New Years. The picture is intensely interesting, appealing from a dramatic as well as historical and educational viewpoint.

It should have a long and successful run.

A great deal of territory has been sold in the very short time this picture has been upon the market which indicates clearly that the feature film buyers all over the country are quick to realize the value of a picture of this kind.

"False Colors"

A Multiple Reel Bosworth Feature of Excellent Conception and Intelligent Portrayal.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE germs of great ideas and magnificent dramatic display are scattered through this remarkable production by the Bosworth company. In the working out and perfecting of the various scenes which go to make up this film play great skill has been shown. Padding has been most studiously avoided. The plot is strange and truly original and is based on a very pretty conception. A woman of humble station unselfishly, but none the less ardently, admires a great actor. Through a curious chain of circumstances the daughter of this woman becomes in later years the wife of the man whom her mother had worshipped from afar. The plot is, after some difficulty, made clear to the spectator and after he has begun to grasp the essential facts his interest is very well sustained to the end.

Scene from "False Colors" (Bosworth).

In some respects the picture lacks perspective and proportion. If the care which characterizes the making of the single scenes had continued when it came to the problem of balancing the values of the scenes and putting them together in the most intelligible manner possible unqualified praise could be given to this effort. There are too many rifts in the action the changes are often confusingly abrupt and toward the end the action begins to gailop because its early pace was somewhat slow and was uncertain of its direction. The opening scenes are splendid the climax is splendid but the things leading from the opening to the ending seem at times to zigzag on the screen when they might just as well have run a straight course. The result is that much of the story has to be told by means of correspondence and telegrams. When a man has to get a telegram while he is mourning by the sea far away from human habitations the law of probabilities begins to creak in agony.

Lois Weber had really a subordinate part as Mrs. Moore and a most difficult part as Flo. She was thoroughly convincing in the first part and but for the hurry which the direction forced in the last part measured up to the exacting requirements of the second part. Of Mr. Smalley's part it is difficult to speak in terms other than of respect. Dixie Carr's performance was fair. In the scene where she repels the belated interest of her father the possibilities were very great, but the scene went off rather disappointingly.

Charles Marriott made an excellent butler. Courtenay Foote had strong moments, but rarely resists the temptation to overdo things.

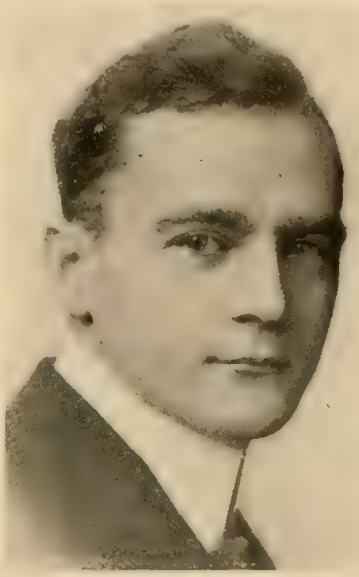
The production as a whole will "get over." The last two reels surely hold the interest and the climax is bound to please.

PLINY CRAFT'S FATHER DIES.

Henry Clay Craft, father of Pliny P. Craft, of the Apex Film Company, died at his home at 49 Wellington Court, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Sunday, December 20, at the age of 82 years. The deceased was born in the South and was a journalist by profession. He is survived by widow, one daughter and three sons. The funeral occurred on Tuesday, December 22.

W. D. Thomas

A NEW face is seen in the advertising field in the person of W. D. Thomas, who comes from the commercial field. He was born and raised in the East and was liberally educated at Dickinson College and the University of Pennsylvania.



W. D. Thomas.

For the past four years he has been advertising and sales manager of U. S. Linen Company, Chicago. He is now advertising manager of the Mica Film Corporation, which is putting on the Kriterion program. He considers film as much a commercial commodity as any merchandise and states that advertising copy should follow along this line. He also considers his advertising department not only a copy and publicity force, but one to keep in touch direct with his exchanges and exhibitors lending them every assistance. One of his novel advertisements appeared last week in the form of a football selection, using his brands as players on the All-American team. Very favorable comments on this ad have been passed through the trade. It certainly is "decidedly distinctive." We believe that his copy will be read with much interest.

EVANS COMPANY SUED.

The Evans Film Manufacturing Company, of 416 West 216th street, New York City, is named as the defendant in an action on file in the United States District Court to recover $10,000 damages for alleged infringement of copyright.

The complainant in the suit is Arthur W. Pinero, author of the four-act drama entitled "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" which was produced several years ago. He alleges that he obtained a copyright of his dramatic production in 1894, giving him exclusive rights to the play, but despite this he asserts the film company ignored his rights and produced a photo play embodying some of the scenes from his work.

He demands damages of $10,000 in addition to an injunction restraining the defendant from continuing the alleged infringement and asks that all films of the photo play be impounded pending the determination of the suit.

PAYTON'S LEE AVENUE THEATER FOR PICTURES.

For a generation Payton's Lee Avenue theater has been the chief rendezvous for the amusement loving public of the Williamsburgh section of Brooklyn. On Sunday, December 20, it opened its hospitable doors, having been renovated and redecorated from pit to dome, as one of the finest homes of photoplays in Greater New York. It will be operated by that wide-awake coterie of young men who as the Clarendon Photoplay Co. have opened the eyes of the exclusive Flatbush section by their enterprise and sound business methods. W. H. Kemble, well known in financial circles, is President and General Manager, and it is his purpose to gradually establish a chain of photoplay theaters which shall be second to none. This company is selling no stock, but is proceeding slowly and sanely doing real things with real money.

A full first-run Universal service has been installed at the Lee Avenue, as well as at the Clarendon, and novel and effective advertising methods will be employed. Feature films will be used as real features, being shown frequently but not constantly, so that the public's taste will not become satiated with so much of a good thing that they come to regard a "Quo Vadis" or "A Million Bid" as part of a regular show.

With its seating capacity of 1,400 and its up-to-the-minute methods of exhibition and projection, Payton's Lee Avenue Theater under its new regime purposes to be the biggest and best theater devoted exclusively to photoplays in all Brooklyn.

"The Pit"

Wilton Lackaye and Gail Kane Head Fine Cast in World Film's Spectacular Production.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE World Film Corporation will release on December 28 a five-part adaptation of "The Pit," taken from William A. Brady's play. It is a big production—a good one. It is elaborately staged, well directed and finely played. In the cast is abundant leading material for several pictures. There are Wilton Lackaye, Gail Kane, Alec B. Francis, Milton Sills, Julia Stuart and Chester Barnett among others. There are two interiors of pictorial and spectacular value uncommon even in these days of big productions. These are the scenes of the opera house and of the operators in the pit of the Chicago Board of Trade.

The theme is that of the man absorbed in business—"big business," this time—so much so that he thinks of nothing else, not even of the attractive wife with whom he is so strongly in love. As he gets deeper into the toils of the market his wife in her loneliness turns to an artist, a former lover. She is on the point of departing with the latter when the husband, broken in fortune and in spirit, enters his home. The threatened break is off; her arms are about the neck of her husband.

The story is well and convincingly told. The interest is cumulative. Mr. Lackaye has the role of Jadwin, the speculator. Miss Gail plays the wife. Mr. Sills is the former lover. The work of each is just what we would expect. Mr. Sills plays the villain without being villainous. There are no tempestuous love scenes leading up to the proposed elopement. It is done in cold blood—each with a full understanding of the gravity of the proposed step. But this is only an incident in a story of a business battle, for the relation of which all tracks are cleared—with the exception of perhaps one other, that of a subsidiary theme, which is lost.

Mr. Francis is the broker who induces Jadwin to join him in a big clean-up. Chester Barnett is his clerk. These, with Miss Stuart, are among the better known of the screen players in the cast; their work is of their best.

The views of the speculators fighting in the pit are the best this writer has seen. They are a bit prolonged, but by no means do we imply that they tire. There are hundreds of men employed in them, and in but one instance—where a path is somewhat prematurely cleared for Jadwin—are they other than what might be expected on a smashing day in wheat. It was a real battle, and it must have seemed so to every participant; even to Big Bill Aldridge, leading the floor forces of those opposed to Gladwin, that day a Filipino bullet plowed its way through his leg must have seemed in comparison like an afternoon under the apple trees.

"The Pit" ought to be a big winner.

PEERLESS COMPANY GOES SOUTH.

A company of thirty players, at the head of which is Lillian Russell, is in Charleston, S. C., to take exteriors for the Peerless production of "Wildfire." As this is a racing play advantage is being taken of a picturesque old race track in the Southern city. Edwin Middleton is in charge of the company. "Wildfire" will be released on January 25 by the World Film Corporation.

NICHOLAS POWER AGAIN HONORED.

It is not generally known that many millions of people attend motion picture theaters daily and this fact brings to mind what an enormous task it is and has been to safeguard their lives. This is principally attained by means of proper and sufficient safety devices on the picture projecting machines and it is interesting to note that the grand prize for exclusive safety devices on these machines has been awarded to the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of Power's Camegraph No. 6A, by the American Museum of Safety, under whose auspices the Second International Exposition of Safety was held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, December 12 to 19.

The Nicholas Power Company was also awarded the Gold Medal at the same exhibition held in 1913 and in being awarded the highest honor in competitive exhibition this year proves that Mr. Power is in accord with the much talked Safety First campaign that is sweeping the country at the present time. This distinguished tribute to the mechanical genius and untiring efforts of Nicholas Power has been the occasion of much rejoicing by those who have been bending their energies to uplift the motion picture art, especially with regard to the prevention of fire and accident and Mr. Power is receiving wires and letters of congratulations from all over the country. The efforts of the American Museum of Safety, of which Dr. William H. Tolman is director, have met with the greatest success as is evidenced by the quality of exhibitors at the Safety show. Some of the largest employers of labor in this country were represented. The Edison Company, The Westinghouse Company, New Haven, Northern Pacific and, of course, the New York City Fire Department. The attendance of the public was very gratifying and this will no doubt encourage the officers of the museum greatly during the coming year.

OHIO LEAGUE CONVENTION DATE.

President Neff of the Ohio Exhibitors League announces that the annual convention of the Ohio State Exhibitors League will be held at Columbus, Ohio, on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 9 and 10, 1915. The purpose of changing the place of meeting from Cleveland, as selected at the last state convention, to Columbus, is to be present in a body at the state capital when the legislature is in session. It is believed that much legislation of a detrimental character will be offered and the holding of the convention at Columbus will enable the exhibitors to place their views before the legislators in an impressive form.

SAWYER FEATURES BOOKING STRONG.

Sawyer Film Corporation announces that their biggest bookings for the week come from the Colossus Film Co., of 110 West 40th street, New York. Each week Sawyer intends in the bulletin sent out by the Co-operative Publicity Department, to mention the three offices doing the largest business for the week preceding, as a roll of honor.

The Colossus Film Co. has already received over $5,000, in advance bookings for the two great features released during the week by Sawyer. "As a Man Sows" is a spectacular five reel modern society drama by the Aquilla Co. of Italy, and the other feature released was the first of the Flamingo prize-winning comedies, "Without Hope," in four reels, with Margaret Loveridge and Catherine Proctor in the cast.

"MRS. WIGGS" OUT JANUARY 4.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," the California Motion Picture Corporation's second big feature production, will be released on the World program on January 4th. The screen story combines Alice Hegan Rice's two famous novels: "Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lovey Mary," which were successfully dramatized by Anne Crawford Flexner under the former title and produced by Liebler & Co. in 1903 at the Savoy Theater, New York City. The play has had great vogue, passing around the world, and has been played in all English-speaking countries and even been translated into German.

Beatriz Michelena, whose work in "Salomy Jane" has brought her to the front rank in filmdom with one stride, appears as "Lovey Mary," the good angel of the drama, while Blanche Chapman plays "Mrs. Wiggs." Other featured players are Andrew Robson and House Peters.

Howard Esterbrook, the star in George Kleine's production of "Officer 666," has been engaged by the World Film Corporation to appear in its forthcoming production of "The Butterfly," an adaptation of Henry Ketchell Webster's successful novel.

"The Black Spot"

Cosmofotofilm Releasing a Production of the London Film Company That Is of Remarkable Strength.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Cosmofotofilm Company is releasing a four-part production from the studios of the London Film Company that for dramatic strength is of unusual merit. George L. Tucker directs the subject. The story is of Russia and England, of revolutionaries compelled to leave the former country. One of the factors of the drama is a grand duke of benevolent intentions and actions. A. Holmes-Gore is the grand duke. His interpretation of the role is artistic —worthy of the highest praise. Miss Jane Gail is the daughter of the revolutionary Professor Scerloff, played by Charles Rock. Frank Stanmore is the secretary of the traveling duke, and he introduces a mild comedy touch to an otherwise sternly serious story. Gerald Ames is Captain Drouky, the representative of the implacable Russian System.

The picture opens with a driving, smashing first part. One is tempted, before seeing the succeeding reels, to admire the boldness of a director in bringing into his story such extremely dramatic situations—the liability of an anti-climax is impressed on the observer. Fears are groundless; the action increases with certainty and celerity right to the finish.

The beginning is in the home of Professor Scerloff, the revolutionary, and of his betrayal to the police by a spy. Outside in a driving snowstorm the uniformed men of the Czar gather for a descent on the professor; but there are stormier doings when they break in. The knout is applied to the old man; the wife succumbs to the shock. The grand duke enters and commands the police to desist; he says they need not send their prisoners to Siberia, that banishment will do.

So it is we find the professor and his daughter in London as members of a group of Nihilists, of the intellectual sort. When the newspapers print a story that the grand duke is coming to England incognito the revolutionaries decree his death. It falls to the daughter to carry out the mandate—she has always believed Paul to be responsible for the death of her mother. Paul in disguise has given the password and been admitted to the group. He asks permission to aid Olga in her mission of death, and it is granted. In a logical way it comes about that the daughter is asked to do secretarial work for the grand duke. The killing is not consummated; just why also is logically and most interestingly shown.

"The Black Spot" is a picture that may be featured in the best theaters; it is one a good house—or a bad one, for that matter, if any there be—cannot afford to overlook. It holds tight from beginning to end, and in that ending the grand duke does not marry the girl he has done so much to save from herself and her associates, though he reveals the fact that by her he is charmed—"even as you and I." It is a fine production—in story, in direction, in acting and in photography.

WATKINS RECOVERING.

W. J. Watkins, Vitagrapher, who was operated upon recently for appendicitis, is making a good recovery.

CHARLES L. GASKILL, AUTHOR AND PRODUCER.

Three years ago, from out of the West, there came into the motion picture business a man who had made a reputation as a writer of special stories, that evidenced the keen insight of human nature possessed by the author. This man is now known to every one in the industry. He is Charles L. Gaskill, author, playwright and producer.

Although he has hundreds of stories to draw from, Mr. Gaskill has never written a picture play that is an adaptation of any of his previous writings, and has never adapted for screen presentation the creations of any author. All of his picture plays are original in theme, motive and motion, with the exception of "Cleopatra" and that was an original and interestingly new conception of the famous Queen.

A close student of nature, he has gained an intimate knowledge of human emotions that is reflected in his productions, he believes the picture play is an art, limitless in its possibilities, and looks upon the screen as a mirror capable of reflecting greater things than mere sensationalism and the parade of railroad wrecks, love and jealousy, virtue and vice, without a solid foundation of reason. All of his picture stories are developed on psychological principles, and have therefore a strength and realism that appeal to the mind as well as to the eye.

In comedies as well as in dramas, Mr. Gaskill always aims to visualize the motive behind the action, and in so doing is giving to the industry plays with a stimulus necessary to the highest development of the art.

Mr. Gaskill's position in the motion picture world is decidedly unique; as a director for the Vitagraph Company, he enjoys the distinction of being the only man connected with a great manufacturing company, who writes and produces his own plays exclusively.

CAMERA MEN TO DANCE.

The Cinema Camera Club of America, Inc. (motion picture photographers), will hold their second annual ball at the Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street near Lexington avenue, on Friday evening, January 8, 1915. The tickets are two dollars, admitting lady and gentleman, including wardrobe.

Arrangement have already been made to have Lillian Russell and Robert Edeson lead the grand march.

There will be a special dancing contest and a prize given to the winner. Music by the Hippodrome Band.

Many manufacturers have already reserved boxes and the Cinema Camera Club intend to make this coming ball a far better success than the last as they have in store many surprises for the evening.

BAGGOT PLAYS SANTA FOR CHARITY.

King Baggot as Santa Claus was one of the holidav sights on the streets of New York on Dec. 17. By permission of the Universal Film Company, Mr. Baggot, the popular leading man, presented himself as St. Nick at the New York Post Office as the official representative of the Santa Claus Association of New York, to take over letters from the poor kiddies of the city to the justly celebrated S. Claus.

John D. Gluck and King Baggot (as Santa Claus) on N. Y. City Post Office Steps.

He came away with several bushels of letters which were opened at the headquarters of the Association at the Hotel Astor. The opening and sorting of the mail was done by prominent actors, actresses and society ladies. There were manv pathetic little pleas to Santa that would have gone the way of all waste paper were it not for tl.e Santa Claus Association.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

HISTORY OF THE EUROPEAN WAR.

In these days of war talk and an unprecedented activity on the part of motion picture manufacturers, who endeavor to present the news features of the world in films, a most unusual production has been released through the General Film Company, by the Selig Polyscope Company. It is entitled, "A History of the World's Greatest War Told in Five Reels of Motion Pictures."

Belgian Infantry Defending Louvain—from Photograph Taken Before Destruction of the City.

Although coming from the same source as the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial this five-reel special production is not to be identified with the twice-a-week Hearst-Selig News Pictorial Service. It is announced as being produced by the Hearst newspapers in conjunction with the Selig Polyscope Company.

The five reels are of particular interest and show actual battle scenes with shot and shell, and all the carnage of war. These pictures were taken by Selig camera men assisted by Hearst newspaper correspondents who worked together to obtain them. These intrepid news-picture gatherers photographed the scenes from dangerous positions, along the battle lines in Belgium, East Prussia and other places. Many of the scenes were photographed in the fighting trenches with the allies and with the Germans.

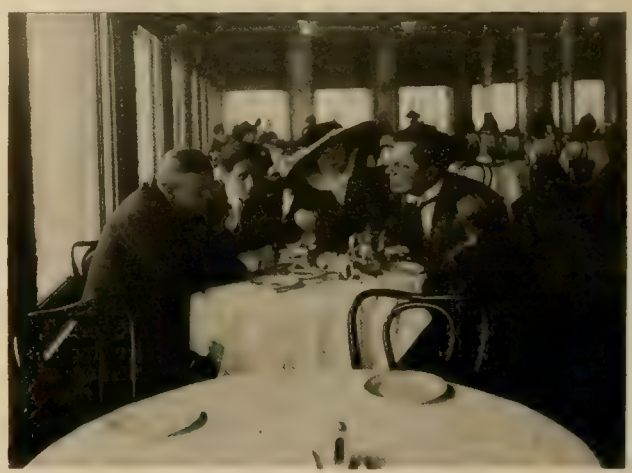
Taking this great five-reel war picture in its entirety, it illustrates the intrepidity and fearlessness of the men who have produced these most remarkable results in order to show motion picture theater patrons just what real war is like.

Scores of scenes were eliminated from the pictures when finally released owing to their gruesome character. There were hundreds of feet of film showing the dead and dying, which were realistically horrible, but these were cut out in order to avoid appealing to the morbid sensitiveness of the public. Enough of the horrors remain to give examples of the terrible ferocity of the opposing forces and the frightful results.

While there have been other releases of pictures said to have been taken on Europan battle fields, the Selig publicity department declares that this one is the only authentic and genuine picture actually taken on the European battlefields while the fighting was going on.

EPISODE SEVEN OF "THE MASTER KEY" (Universal).

In the latest installment of John Fleming Wilson's story Robert Leonard and Calder Johnstone have "written in" some slashing action. Robert Leonard as John Dore lifts up Wilkerson's emissary, a second-story worker who has been caught trying to steal the deeds to "The Master Key" mine, and throws him bodily from the roof of the Manx Hotel in San Francisco to the street below.



Scene from "The Master Key" (Universal-Special).

When this episode of the picture was produced in San Francisco the roofs of skyscrapers surrounding the hotel where the action of the photodrama took place were crowded with spectators. A net was stretched several stories below the roof out of range of the lens, and a high-diver was engaged to play the part of the second-story man.

Spectators who witnessed the desperate fight on the roof of the hotel in which Ruth Gallon (Ella Hall) takes part, cheered frantically when finally Robert Leonard seized the sneakthief and, poising him high in air, finally cast him out and over the roof edge. The sneakthief falls to his death on the street below, narrowly missing several passing pedestrians—in the film version.

Interesting views of San Francisco, Cliff House and hotel life in the western metropolis are also interspersed in the seventh reel of "The Master Key." The action of the episode turns about Wilkerson's repeated attempts to recover the deeds to "The Master Key" mine. Wilkerson's tool enters Ruth's room in her absence, but is discovered by Dore. As a result of the crook's death, Dore is arrested.

"THE HEART OF A MAN" FIRST LARIAT RELEASE.

The first Lariat picture is "The Heart of a Man." It is scheduled for distribution by the United Film Service December 28. The Pike's Peak Film Producing Company, who are the originators of the new brand, have just begun operations at Colorado Springs, and "The Heart of a Man" represents their first production. Hector A. Cobb, who portrayed the part of "Curley" Smith in "Across the Border," a notable western film issued some time ago by Warner's Features, Inc., assumes the leading male role in "The Heart of a Man."

George Gebhart, who has been engaged as assistant director and leading man of the new organization, will devote his time between directing and acting. He was not cast in the first Pike's Peak picture for the reason that the multitudinous details connected with launching the new organization monopolized his time. He will, however, appear in the second release. Josephine West, one of the most experienced of "movie" actresses, is the heroine.

The Pike's Peak Film Producing Company is the most recent addition to the organization comprising the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc.

"THE INTRIGUERS." (Lubin.)

"The Intriguers" is one of George Terwilliger's best photoplays. It tells a very dramatic story of two high class crooks, who come very near being successful in a robbery and blackmail. The man is a thief and the woman his partner, a brilliant adventuress. The scenes are laid in aristocratic life.

Scene from "The Intriguers" (Lubin).

The near victim being a diplomatic agent connected with a foreign mission. The powerful plot is cleverly carried out and it comes very near wrecking an admirable love match. The cast is unusually strong including Ormi Hawley, Florence Hackett, Edgar Jones and Earl Metcalfe.

BRAND OF THE "MADE IN U. S. A. DAY."

The committee on general arrangements for the impending nation-wide campaign to establish a Made-in-the-U. S. A. Day has selected its official insignia. The design chosen is one of forty-nine submitted by the cleverest commercial artists of the city and was selected principally on account of the predominance of the geographical element.

It reproduces, in black and white, the map of the United States, which, in accordance with congressional action, inspired by Theodore Roosevelt during his term as President of the United States, is now officially known as America, which word appears in bold white lettering across the surface. The map, in solid black, being background. The motto, "Boost for U. S. A. Day," appears on the design, divided so as to partly surmount and partly form the base of it. The legend, Made in America, also appears so worded as to be incorporated in the geographical tout ensemble.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "THE ETERNAL CITY."

A private showing of "The Eternal City," a motion picture version of Hall Caine's story of the same title, will be given at the Lyceum Theater, West 45th street, New York, on Sunday evening, December 27. This picture was made under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford with a carefully selected company headed by Pauline Frederick, which went abroad to secure proper locale. Many beautiful scenes were taken in the Vatican gardens and other points in Rome mentioned in the story. The picture will be appropriately staged.

"THE STRANGE CASE OF PRINCESS KHAN" (Selig).

In the making of high class and distinctively excellent picture plays, the Selig Polyscope Company occupies a place in the front rank of quality creators.

"The Strange Case of Princess Khan," a Selig, Oriental, mystic drama, a number of unusual situations are developed and have been filmed with full regard for their exceptional character. The scenario is from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, and the production was made under the direction of Edw. J. Le Saint.

The leading part—that of the "Princess Khan," is played by Stella Razeto, who is admirably supported by Guy Oliver, Jack McDonald and other well known Selig players. The picture requires a number of minor characters, including detectives, police, servants, guests, etc.

Jack McDonald as "Sadi Khan," the Hindu mystic, who is in truth a charlatan and impostor, portrays the character with that customary regard for the niceties of detail which distinguish all his work.

Guy Oliver as the investigator, who exposes the fraud practiced by the mystic, and who releases the imprisoned princess, appears in his customary form and plays the part well. Stella Razeto is particularly enjoyable in the character of the Princess, and while the part is unusually difficult, she closely follows the required visualization of her part as written in the scenario, with great fidelity.

Scene from "The Strange Case of Princess Kahn" (Selig).

The story tells of a tourist, who becomes enraptured of a beautiful and mysterious Princess, who is claimed by the old charlatan, under whose protection she appears, to be the reincarnated spirit of a Hindu Princess whose body has been dust for two centuries. The tourist is attracted by her beauty and by the strangeness of her environment. He discovers that she is flesh and blood instead of a spirit, and the principal features of the story are connected with his attempts to rescue her.

One of the most remarkable scenes ever filmed, is where a large automobile, carrying the fleeing charlatan with the Princess and attendants, dashes through a broken bridge into a river.

The picture is full of exciting thrills, and a pretty love story develops at the finish.

"A PURITAN CONSCIENCE" (Flamingo).

When people try to live up to tradition, they are undertaking a difficult task. Son and daughter of an old Puritan family, Puritan White, and his sister Purity live strictly according to doctrine until both of them leave their home town in Massachusetts. Purity marries and goes West. Puritan marries and settles down in New York. Years pass and they are both very wealthy, and both very worldly. Purity is now a widow with one daughter Prudence, and both are devoted to fashionable society. She announces by telegram that she will visit her brother. Both, through the years, have practiced deception, and pretend to be living up to the old Puritan doctrines.

Puritan, ashamed of being a back-slider, resorts to deception and purchases an old-fashioned furnished house in Dobbs Centre, Massachusetts, a small village miles from the railway.

Scene from "A Puritan Conscience" (Flamingo).

With his entire family he moves to the country, and they all don the costumes of Puritan farmers of the 17th century. The villagers knowing nothing of Puritan customs think that the new family are Mormons. Purity and Prudence arrive, stop on the outskirts of the little town, and also make a quick change to Puritan costumes. The villagers decide that the Mormon is getting two new wives.

From this point on, the fun is fast and furious. Puritan telephones to his town house butler to send out two servants, a cook and a laundress. He promises that if the servants "come in ancestors costume, he will double their wages." Dinah and Bridget arrive, and each of them come attired in the costume of her own ancestors; Dinah as an African savage, and Bridget as an Irish peasant. The villagers think that the Mormon is getting two more wives, and one of them black, so they decide to drive the new family out of town. Many exciting events occur. The village parson tries to convert the "Mormons," and point out the error of their ways to them. The village magistrate sends the constable to look for criminal evidence against them. The whole household is arrested, including children and servants, and taken to the village lockup. Here, Puritan and his sister Purity make a mutual confession of their deception, but by squeezing one of the children through the jail bars to phone to the city for aid, the whole difficulty is straightened out and the brother and sister decide that "Tho we are wealthy and worldly, we need not be wicked so long as we possess 'A Puritan Conscience.'"

CLEVER FOLDER ON AUTOMATIC TICKET SELLER.

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register, of 1476 Broadway, New York City, Company's new three-leaf folder on its devices is a fine bit of advertising paper. It is well designed in clear black and red printing and is illustrated. and there are two "X-ray" cuts showing how the device serves the customer who presses the button and get his ticket. "The Automatic" sells tickets from two to five times as fast as by the old hand selling method. This does away with much of the crowding. The manager holds the key and the machine makes a record of each ticket that goes out. The buttons are numbered from one to five and the required tickets appear like magic. The only human attention needed is in the change making. This machine is one of our modern up-to-date methods of helping business.

"PATSY AT SCHOOL." (Lubin)

This is the first chapter of a series which will tell the unfortunate happenings which follow the life of Patsy Boliver. "Patsy" has become the synonym for one in bad luck and poor young Bolivar had more than his share and mentally resolved to lick any man, woman or child that said that there was no such thing as bad luck. He has a nemesis in Fred Sykes nicknamed "Sykesy," who loses no opportunity to get Patsy in trouble. Being of emotional temperatment he early falls in love. His first object of adoration being his schoolmistress, but he has a powerful rival in Jack Prince, who eventually wins out. When Patsy sends flowers to the young schoolmarm, Sykesy shakes pepper over the bouquet and Patsy is sent supperless to bed. Aside from his little sister, Kitty, he has one champion, Sykesy's sister Jane, but she fails to attract Patsy, who upon finding his first love hopeless transfers his affections to Tilly Grace, who really has no use for him as her heart is already given to the horrible Sykesy. With each chapter of the series more misfortune will be told to the credit of this very unlucky boy. The serial will continue for fourteen numbers written by Clay M. Greene and directed by Percy Winter. Patsy is played by Clarence Jay Elmer.

"THE NIGHTINGALE" GOING STRONG.

Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale," the first release of the Alco Film Corporation, although now five months old, enjoyed its most prosperous week during seven days beginning December 14, when every print in existence worked the entire week and orders were received for additional prints from several of the territorial offices.

All in all the booking departments of the various Alco Exchanges sent in the most optimistic reports during the week just passed and combined to make it the biggest Alco week since the inception of that company under its present direction. The future is opulent for the Alco concern and from the appearance of the releases promised the forthcoming quarterly should prove even more optimistic than the most sanguine Alcoite anticipates.

SELIG MONTHLY RELEASE HERALD.

Exhibitors all over America have just received their copies of the latest number of the Selig Monthly Release Herald, a well printed and remarkably interesting magazine issued by the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company, from the executive offices in Chicago.

The entire program for the month of January is illustrated and a synopsis of each picture is given in this issue. The illustrations are remarkably clear and distinct, while the synopses are cleverly written, so that the exhibitor can readily form his opinion of each picture.

This edition bears the date of January, and is number one of volume two. Since the inauguration of the monthly magazine by the Selig publicity department, a great many letters have been written by exhibitors complimenting the Selig concern on the excellence and desirability of the publications for the use of exhibitors.

There are three pages of editorial notes and general information in connection with future releases by the Selig Polyscope Company, and in every way it is a handsome and effective piece of publicity and the kind that creates a strong favorable impression regarding the subjects thus advertised.

"THE SIEGE OF LIEGE" (Mina Films).

This is the first of the cartoon comedies by Harry Palmer, the well-known war correspondent and newspaper humorist.

Mr. Palmer went to Belgium last August, and at great personal risk, made a series of sketches of the historic siege of the stout old fortress of Liege. These sketches, which numbered about 12,000, were stolen from the Mina studio the day after their arrival.

When Mr. Palmer returned and learned of the theft he immediately set to work from memory on a new series of sketches along burlesque comedy lines.

Great care has been exercised to keep the story free from any suggestion that might offend the partisans of either of the countries engaged in the battle, and the thousand-foot subject as it now stands is crowded with humorous situations and hearty laughs.

In addition to its humorous elements "The Siege of Liege" is highly interesting as an example of the progress made in cartoon photography.

A COSMOS STATE RIGHT FEATURE.

The coming release of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation, featuring Beulah Poynter in her own play, "The Little Girl That He Forgot," in five parts, will be marketed as a state right proposition. Arthur H. Jacobs, vice-president of the above mentioned concern, left for Chicago on Friday, December 4, and from latest advices received, the disposal of prints is going on rapidly.

"HER COLLEGE EXPERIENCE" (Sawyer).

"Her College Experience" is the title of the third two reeler in "The Mona Darkfeather Series," released by Sawyer Film Corporation. In this the popular Indian star is seen in far different surroundings from those in which she has won her fame. To her tepee home come some wealthy Easterners, who offer her college education and a home of refinement and luxury. The old Chief consents, and the daughter, Mona, leaves with the kind Easterners. Many dramatic situations develop, and the Indian girl has to go through many trials in her college experience, but the Chieftain's blood within her gives courage to conquer all difficulties. It is a charmingly told, powerful and interesting story, picturized under the direction of Frank Montgomery.

An explosion which tears down the whole side of a mountain completely burying a mining town under tons of rock and dirt and the head-on collision of two trains are two of the senstional features in the forthcoming Lubin drama, "The Valley of Lost Hope," written by Shannon Fife and produced by Romaine Fielding of the Lubin staff of directors.

The mining town was built during the action of the play, showing how mushroom towns spring up during a "strike-gold-quick" craze. The little town was laid out in a valley close to the mountain. Over a ton of dynamite was distributed from the base to the top of the mountain and when the fuse was lighted a dozen cameras were turned upon the scene, four of them being driven by motors. The explosion itself was spectacular in the extreme and the little town was wiped out by the immense amount of dirt and rocks that descended upon it.

To secure the train smash, two trains were driven into each other at the rate of 35 miles an hour on the Pittsburg and Susquehanna Railroad, near Phillipsburg, Pa. One train consisted of an engine and three passenger coaches and the other of an engine and seven freight cars. The crash was a thriller in every detail and a few seconds afterward the trains were only a mass of burning kindling wood.

KLEINE'S "OFFICER 666" BOOKS SOLID.

George Kleine's reputation for doing things thoroughly is standing him in good stead, if the remarkable influx of bookings for "Officer 666" has any special significance. Since the announcement of its release, many dates have been made by letter and wire, indicating a sound confidence in his first American-made production. His fame as an importer of the best European-made subjects has attached itself to "Officer 666" with extraordinary results. Happily, "Officer 666" exceeds all expectations and in it theater managers will find themselves possessed of a splendid feature of rare money-making possibilities.

THE NEXT FAVORITE PLAYERS RELEASE.

"The High Hand," by Jacques Frutelle, will be the next production of the Favorite Players Film Co. This photoplay, arranged by Richard Willis, will be directed by William D. Taylor. A five-part photoplay has been made from this famous story, and the leading part will be taken by the ever-popular Carlyle Blackwell.

The "High Hand" was selected as a story which lends itself particularly well to screen treatment, and some of the scenes called for unusual and beautiful sets. Following, as it does, such excellent pieces of motion picture production as "The Key to Yesterday," "The Man Who Could Not Lose" and "The Last Chapter," much is expected of it, and although Carlyle Blackwell maintains that "The Last Chapter" is the best effort he has yet produced, he admits that the opportunities in the "High Hand" are indeed excellent.

"'FLORA FOURFLUSH' MUST NOT BE TAKEN TOO SERIOUSLY."

The startling announcement has been made that the Vitagraph Company would release on Monday, January 4th, and the two following Mondays: "The Ten-Billion Dollar Mystery Serial," entitled, "The Fates and Flora Fourflush," in three parts; the first part, "Treachery in the Clouds," to be released on Monday, January 4th; part 2, "The Treasure Temple of Bhosh," released Monday, January 11th, and part 3, "A Race for Life," released Monday, January 18th.

After making this statement the question arose as to whether the people would take the announcement seriously or come to the conclusion that it was a hodge-podge of nothing. These three releases are not to be taken seriously and cannot in any way be discounted as comedies of the funniest and the most convulsing nature. It is quite clear that the three comedies are a travesty on the recent serials advertised as containing thrills, shivers and shocks as well as mysteries of unfathomable solution. "The Fates and Flora Fourflush" in its separate releases, make one of the most laughable burlesques on the thrilling, perilous and dare-devil concoctions. To follow "Flora Fourflush" for three successive Mondays will tax our sense of the humorous to its limit, in our appreciation of the pointed and satirical way in which they make the absurdities evident.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL IN "THE LAST CHAPTER."

The next release upon the Alliance Program, in which Carlyle Blackwell and Ruth Hartman appear, will be "The Last Chapter," taken from Richard Harding Davis' famous novelette, "The Unfinished Story."

The film, which is in five parts and was released Dec. 21, narrates the romantic adventures of an African explorer whose exploits in the jungle are vividly portrayed on the screen. The theme is handled by Mr. Davis in his usual effective manner.

"The Unfinished Story" is an excellent mystery tale which up to a certain point offered many opportunities for successful photoplay making. The point in question which barred further progress was the ending or rather the lack of an ending, for in writing the story Mr. Davis gave his readers a chance to exercise their imaginations and made it in fact as well as in name an Unfinished Story. This mode of treatment did not, in the mind of Mr. Blackwell, lend itself to the making of a film drama, so when the scenario was being prepared it was found necessary to finish the plot in a definite manner. Thus was the concluding and last chapter written and from this incident the title was suggested to Mr. Blackwell and Mr. Davis. Being no longer an Unfinished Story it was re-named "The Last Chapter."

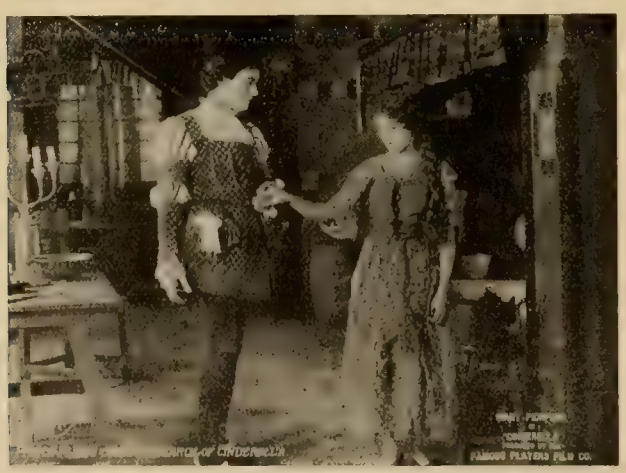
"CINDERELLA (Famous Players).

The Christmas release of the Famous Players Film Co. presents Mary Pickford in a charming version of the century-old classic, "Cinderella." This idyllic story might have been written to order for "Little Mary," so amazingly does the role of the ragged but beautiful cinder-girl fit her.



Scene from "Cinderella" (Famous Players).

Tender and pretty as is the old story itself, it has been so enriched in the film version, so many new features have been artistically blended with the old, in which the natural and the super-natural, the eerie and the human, mingle, and the romance of the handsome and courageous prince with the little maid of the cinders is so originally and exquisitely portrayed, that the picture promises to be as great a treat with the grown-ups as with the children.

"Little Mary," whether as the poor, reviled little cinder girl, or the pretty, jewelled and ermined princess, is equally effective, and every passing phase of the sympathetic character is appealingly intensified by the beauty and grace of the wonderful little star.

The production was released Dec. 28.

"A SOLDIER OF PEACE" (Lubin).

This is another of Emmett Campbell Hall's excellent stories which will doubtless become popular, especially with the lovers of heroism and pathos. John Woodward, a city health officer, has just married a spoiled girl and about to start on their honeymoon, when an epidemic of diphtheria breaks out in his town. The young wife protests against abandoning the honeymoon, but the husband insists on doing his duty regardless of the fact that his wife declares to leave him. She in turn endeavors to occupy her mind with social functions, until one day she hears the tale of a dear old woman who had given up her lover to go to the war and never returned. The health officer contracts the disease and the wife, now changed, hastens to his side and nurses him back to health. The cast features Earl Metcalfe, John Ince and Mary Keane.

"FOR THE DEFENSE (Eclair).

A man on trial for his life, saved by the girl who has redeemed him from the gutter and finally reunited with his father, the prosecuting attorney in the case, form the gripping elements which go to make "For the Defense," a one-reel Eclair drama released Sunday, Dec. 27, a most unusual offering. Ethel Phillips and Stanley Walpole are featured in the leading roles. Their work in the dramatic climaxes are superb and the photography is of the regular Eclair standard, which means nigh perfection.

Notes of the Trade

TWO freight trains of twelve cars each will be used in a scene in "Zudora," Thanhouser's new serial. The action requires both trains to be running at top speed, when James Cruze climbs over a car on one train, releases a lever and cuts the train in half. In one of the cars is Marguerite Snow and Helen Badgley, who are rescued by Cruze just as the car is sent skyward by an explosion.

An American-Mutual company under the direction of Thomas Ricketts has just completed "The Strength o' Ten," the scenes of which are taken in the Virginia mountains. He played with the Empire Stock Company under Charles Frohman and also with Maud Adams, William Collier and Elsie Janis.

There is no "atmosphere" more coveted by a director than an animated street scene in Chinatown, due to the fact that Chinamen object to facing the camera, mostly because many of them have been smuggled into this country and fear apprehension. Aware of the fact that the cameraman of another company had been nearly mobbed when he attempted it, Langdon West, of the Edison, determined upon getting the necessary street scene, by stationing a fake rodman as if the street were being surveyed. The Chinamen, unsuspectingly, walked in and out of the picture until they discovered the hoax. With a yell, they rushed the camera, but West and his trusty men made a safe "getaway."

John Collins, the young Edison director, whose rise to that position without any acting experience was remarkably rapid, has written another play, "The Stone Heart." The cast of it is exceptionally strong, the feminine lead being taken by Viola Dana, known country wide as the phenomenal child actress, in the title role of the Broadway success, "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and equally as well known as "Broadway's Youngest Star."

Devore Palmer has been engaged by the Kinetophote Company to play in its new feature, "A Man's Shadow," and will support Tom Terris in that story as Gaston, a "heavy" of the gangster type. The production was made by Director F. A. Kelsey and Eugene Pallette is featured.

"Hearts and the Highway" will be shown soon at the Vitagraph theater, followed by "The Ban of Coventry."

Unlooked-for realism, unfortunate to the actress, but giving a crowning thrill to the film, is shown in the big fire scene of the "Lesson of the Flames," one of the "Olive's Opportunities," Edison, in which Miss Mabel Trunnelle is featured, when her hair catches fire while she is being carried down the rope through the flames. The picture plainly shows the hair ablaze and the desperate attempt of Miss Trunnelle, three stories up, and her rescurer, Edwin Earle, to put out the blazing hair.

"A Political Feud," soon to be released by the Ince companies in the Mutual program, is the simple chronology of the life of an urchin who battles his way to success and a worthy wife. Being "the goat" has no terrors for William Fables. To him belongs the unique distinction of being the best impersonator of animals on the stage or screen. "Commodore," the tiny monkey whose face is already looked for in the Edison "Olive's Opportunities" series in which he appears with Miss Mabel Trunnelle as the gypsy, is as temperamental as a prima donna. How much this is due to Simian intelligence or to association, he has not yet given out in an interview.

Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane has gone into pictures. The genial Californian who presides over the vast public domain of the Nation posed for the camera last week. Frank Borzage in "The Panther," a stirring north woods narrative, soon to be released in the Mutual program by the companies of Thomas H. In "The Lesson of the Flames," of the "Olive's Opportunities," Edison series, in which Miss Mabel Trunnelle is being featured, occurs a fire scene tense with realism where a locked-in baby is overcome. The remarkable acting done by the baby—"Miss" Loel Steuart—is one of the features of the film.

The mount ridden by Miss Beverly Bayne in the scenes of Essanay's photoplay, "The Crimson Wing," formerly belonged to the Countess Gizycka. It was her favorite mount and was named for her when she sold it. Miss Bayne, while an expert horsewoman, had never ridden side-saddle before taking the scenes.

E. H. Calvert, who takes the leading part in Essanay's photoplay, "The Crimson Wing," was hurled headlong from his horse when taking a scene on the Chatfield-Taylor estate. The State Rights Case

Supreme Court Claims "No Jurisdiction in State Rights Case"—Its Decision of Great Importance to Manufacturers and Exchanges.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington, D. C., Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Supreme Court of the United States has refused a writ of certiorari to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the case whereby it seeks a reversal of the decision of the United States Court of Appeals which found against it in its suit against S. Copperman, doing business as Thalia Music Hall, and A. Polacoff, doing business as Special Film Company, Ltd.

In the brief which the Universal Film Manufacturing Company submitted to the Court there was stated that the suit, brought to restrain infringement, is of great importance and of general and immediate interest to the public by reason of the wide reach of the moving picture industry and because the finding of the Court of Appeals will result in a great and obvious injustice and render invalid many important contracts heretofore universally considered binding, jeopardize vast interests and compel a revolutionary change in the manner and methods of conducting the moving picture business. The decision of the Court of Appeals nullifies a system of State Rights contracts on the theory that no territorial restrictions upon the disposition or use of motion picture films are capable of enforcement. The ultimate scope, effect and outcome of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals should it finally be held to evidence the law of personal property, in the respects covered, must be prodigious and more easily imagined than set forth.

The facts involved in the litigation are substantially as follows: The foreign author and proprietor of a motion picture photoplay sold original copies thereof in Europe, printed from the original negative, before attempting statutory copyright in the United States, but printed on his bill rendered to the purchaser a statement that the same were not to be used outside of the country in which they were sold. One of these copies coming into the possession of a second-hand dealer in films in London, the defendants to the suit purchased it in good faith and without knowledge of the original restriction, and brought it to the United States before any other copy and before attempted copyright was offered or granted, according to the statements of the defendants. After the importation of the film, "The Great Circuit Catastrophe," they state, the foreign proprietor of the positive assigned the right to United States copyright to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The film was copyrighted.

The film company then filed suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, alleging infringement of its copyright, its bill praying for an injunction, a writ of seizure and an accounting. A writ of seizure was issued and the film taken. This court held the copyright to be invalid and the case was carried higher, and the Circuit Court of Appeals decided in part that "Sale of positive films after copyright, was as consistent with the statutory copyright as was the sale of films before copyright with its common law ownership, but neither it nor its assigns as owner of the statutory copyright could repudiate the licenses it had given before copyright to the purchaser of film in England, and his assigns. Therefore, the defendants cannot be treated as infringers." In reply to this the plaintiff held that this ruling has resulted in a great and obvious injustice occurring in a matter of exceptional importance and public interest, in that it will result in compelling a revolutionary change in the manner and method of conducting the industry of motion picture production in this country. As set forth in the official statistics the motion picture business is one of five leading industries and even approximately to estimate the number of people concerned in it directly or indirectly would be impossible, but that number is very great. Principally by means of a system of sale and agreements establishing "state rights" is this great business carried forward. The expenses of producing motion pictures and photoplays is very great and to meet this the manufacturers have been compelled to sell the positive prints to a large number of different individual exhibitors.

"Each one of these customers has insisted upon exclusive territorial rights to the production of photoplays and representations from the film purchased and the manufacturers found that they must guarantee to each individual customer the exclusive right, in his own special territory to exhibit pictures of which prints were sold, and that no one else should be able to show the same picture in the same state, in the same street, or in the same city, as the case may be. Such exclusive right of exhibition has been provided by the manufacturers of photoplay films, and by the assignment of exclusive territorial rights to such persons as might buy 'state rights.'

"Under the decision which has been herein rendered it is deemed that all transfers of exclusive territorial rights heretofore made will become ineffectual as against any purchaser of film who may determine to break his restrictive covenant either through a vendee or personally, and hereafter a manufacturer will be unable to sell the exclusive right to exhibit pictures within certain states because to cite a concrete instance, any bonafide purchaser from a purchaser, say of the New York State Rights, might take the picture to Pennsylvania and there exhibit it while neither the purchaser of the Pennsylvania 'State Rights' nor the manufacturer who sold the right to each state separately and exclusively could prevent such exhibition. A situation so arising would result in indescribable confusion and chaos, and cause the various motion picture manufacturers, distributers, exhibitors and patrons excessive pecuniary and personal loss."

The Supreme Court held that it had no jurdisdiction in the matter and refused to order a review of the case.

GOOD TIMES IN WASHINGTON.

Exhibitors Prospering in Capital City and Hope for Good Winter.

THE Washington correspondent of this paper was agreeably surprised last week to hear an exhibitor say, "I haven't a kick in the world for I'm getting my share of the business." It sounded pretty good and it seems true for a visit to Crandall's theater, it was Harry Crandall who made the remark, showed that the Box Office Attractions, World's Special Feature films, and others of like calibre were bringing in the dimes to the box office. Mr. Crandall has been working hard on his matinee proposition, in making his house the mecca of tired shoppers and this with his scheme of running shows as per schedule is meeting with satisfactory results. His last Sunday's show kept his house filled during all performances and while he expects that the first few days of the present week will show a decrease in the number of tickets sold, he believes that beginning on Christmas Day the moving picture business will be pulled out of the rut and everybody will do well during the balance of the winter season.

Equally optimistic are many of the exhibitors in the residential sections, for in the northeast section there are three large houses which look for better times. J. P. Morgan, of the Princess theater, expects soon to emulate the late financier of the same name, in the buying of famous masterpieces of equally famous artists for the adornment of his house. Samuel Greenberg, who is interested in but two houses at the present time, will be able to add a few more so as to make a string, and Mr. Waters, of the Apollo, may have to take the lot which adjoins that theater and make the house cover both sites in order to hold the business. In the northwest section there is a host of fine houses and exhibitors whose pocketbooks will be swelled by the business now to come, for there is the Savoy, Lyric, Regent, Washington, Olympic and Elite. In the southeast there's the Eastern and Midas, and others.

While we're talking about prosperity, it might also be said that there are three houses on Fourteenth street which have been closed probably because business has been so bad. These are the Royal, Acme and Belmont theaters.

No Penalty Tax.

The Senate has adopted a resolution that no penalty or additional tax shall be collected on account of failure of any person, firm, or company to make return or to pay any tax imposed by the act of October 22, 1914, on the first day of December, provided such return and payment shall be made on or before the first day of January, 1915. The resolution further provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the filing of such return and upon the payment of such tax on or before the first day of January, 1915, abate and refund any penalty or additional tax assessed or collected on account of failure to file such return or to pay such taxes as previously provided.

CENSORSHIP IN OHIO AND KANSAS.

Mutual Film Corporation Enters Appeal in Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of the United States has adjourned until January 4, and thus the hearing on the case of the Mutual Film Corporation against the State of Ohio and others has been postponed until some time during that week.

The Mutual Film Corporation has also entered an appeal in the Supreme Court from the order of the United States District Court for the District of Kansas, denying its application for an injunction restraining the enforcement of the act passed by the Legislature of Kansas, which went into effect April 1, 1913, providing for the censorship and approval of motion picture films by the State superintendent of public instruction, and there being the right to have an additional examination of rejected films made by a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney-general and the secretary of State, the Mutual Film Company's original suit was brought against Governor George H. Hodges, Secretary of State Charles H. Sessions, Attorney-General John S. Dawson, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction W. D. Ross, all of the State of Kansas.

The Mutual Film Corporation alleges that while the censorship laws of Kansas and Ohio are dissimilar, yet both are fundamentally the same. Considerable interest is being manifested in these suits as the decision of the Supreme Court will have an important bearing on the industry as a whole.

Other Washington Notes.

Mrs. J. P. Anderson, wife of Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, manager for the Greater New York Film Rental Exchange and the Box Office Attractions Company, has taken over the active management of the Eastern theater, on Eighth street, Southeast. This house was practically rebuilt and greatly enlarged during the summer months.

Great regret is being expressed here at the report recently received that Daniel M. O'Brien, who was formerly manager of the Electric Feature Film Company in this city, has been laid up in a hospital in Charlestown, W. Va., for several weeks following an operation. During his stay in the national capital Mr. O'Brien made a host of friends with his ready wit and proverbial good nature and all were sorry when he left to join A. Dresner, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Mutual Company. It seems that Mr. O'Brien was offered a better opportunity in the management of the Charlestown branch of the Buckeye Film Exchange of Cincinnati, Ohio, whose operators are old friends of his. Mr. O'Brien was succeeded at the Pittsburgh office by Guy Brandt, formerly a booker for the General Film Company here.

The officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Washington are expressing themselves as well pleased with the results obtained from the circular letter in which they asked a number of questions with a view to ascertaining the feeling of the exhibitors with respect to the reorganization of the league. While not all of the forms have been returned with the questions answered, yet among those received are many from exhibitors who have heretofore not been affiliated with the league. A second letter is to be sent to the delinquents and later a personal visit is to be made upon those who neglect to make reply. One and all they have found a need for co-operation and they believe that now is the time for getting together for mutual protection.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company has just completed a series of motion pictures of the United States Navy taken at Newport, R. I., which have just been presented to Secretary of the Navy Daniels by Siegmund Lubin, of that concern. These pictures show various phases of the work conducted at that station and on the battleships, cruisers and submarines.

Fred C. Wright, of the Colonia theater, Hagerstown, Md., was a visitor here last week.

Alan Bachrach, manager of the Colonial theater, has just returned to duty after being confined in the Georgetown hospital for two weeks following an operation for appendicitis. He is being congratulated by his many friends upon his quick recovery.

ST. LOUIS NEWS NOTES.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The management of the Shenandoah theater, at Broadway and Shenandoah avenue, is getting ready for its annual Christmas treat for the children in the neighborhood. Every year, for the last four years, the company operating this theater has made special preparations for this festival which grows more popular with each repetition. The exterior of the theater is roped off from the street and decorated with Christmas greens and wreaths, and on the inside the eight electric fans that occupy little stands along the wall are taken down and replaced by small Christmas trees, all fully decorated, while in the rear of the auditorium is placed a big tree that reaches to the ceiling. On Christmas eve a Santa Claus marches up and down the aisles searching for children, and every youngster in the house gets a huge bag of candy. On Wednesday after Christmas a big free special children's matinee is given. Films that appeal to the little ones are chosen. This year Vitagraph pictures with the Costello children, and Edison plays will be used. Special music and effects are rendered, and John E. McKinnon and Lois Peyton "talk" the pictures in language suited and understandable to little folks. Three big shows are given, and everything is free; no coupons, no schemes of any sort are used. All the requirements for admission is youth. The Shenandoah is owned and operated by a stock company on South Broadway, and is managed by Dr. Demko. The liberal policy of the house has built up a fine patronage in the neighborhood.

A Junior Auxiliary of St. George's Chapel, at Olive street and Pendleton avenue, is preparing for an entertainment in which moving pictures will be the chief factor. A series of motion pictures representing famous women of both the old and new testaments of the Bible will be shown. The characters will be appropriately costumed, and everything will be done to make the representations natural in every particular. Music suitable to the occasion will be rendered by Miss Elsie Able, Mrs. Willard Bartell, O. F. Fahlert and E. B. Lemen, all musicians of considerable reputation, and the choir of the Chapel will sing old English Christmas carols. The proceeds from the performance will be used for home and foreign missionary work.

Evidences are apparent on every hand that the period of slow business that has been afflicting moving picture theaters in St. Louis for the last few months is about ended. T. F. Richardson, manager and proprietor of the Russell theater, at 2123 South Broadway, says that on December 5, the box office of his theater made a better showing than for any other day since last March, and as his audience is composed chiefly of the foreigners who live in that part of town, who, as a rule, are first to feel the pinch of poverty when mills and factories close, it is a good indication that times are getting better, and money will be more liberally spent from now on.

At the annual frolic of the "Snoopers," a dramatic organization of the City Club, a civic body comprised of prominent business and society men of St. Louis, which was held at the Victoria theater on December 3, a two-reel moving picture play was shown which was easily the hit of the entertainment. The film was widely advertised as the only moving picture play that was written, staged, directed and played by all amateurs. The scenario was written by William LeBeaume, and the parts were played by men of local and international prominence in financial and business circles. The pictures were taken at Robertsville, Mo., on the 4th of July, and the story tells the adventures of amateur actors seeking rest among Arizona cowboys, who become infatuated with three of the actors who do Julian Eltinge stunts. The cowboys, whose love turns to hate, lead them to harrowing experiences when they peek through a window and see the supposed fair ones smoking and shaving. The play was without a title, and a prize of twenty dollars in gold was offered for the best name. Miss Catherine Gatch, who suggested "Why Boys Leave Home," landed the prize.

Censorship in Ohio

Henry T. Hunt, Once Mayor of Cincinnati, Has Prepared Bill to Eliminate State Censor Board.

By Kenneth C. Cardwell, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWS of no little interest to exhibitors in Cincinnati and all over Ohio, was the recent announcement that former Mayor Henry T. Hunt, of Cincinnati, has prepared for presentation to the General Assembly which meets in January a bill providing for the elimination of the industrious and much-harassed Ohio Board of Censors of films. The bill has been drawn, it is announced, as a result of the visit to Cincinnati of Dr. Orlin C. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Censors, and J. W. Binder, one of the directors of the Board. Mr. Binder addressed a meeting of the publicity committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the Advertisers' Club while in the city. He pointed out through the newspapers, while in the city, the fact that the National Board, composed of disinterested and competent persons, does all the censoring which is necessary, and suggested that local boards organized for the purpose of co-operating with it, instead of operating independently, would do much more good than acting as separate censors. The Ohio censorship has proved so generally unsatisfactory, as far as exhibitors are concerned, and so apparently useless that it is more than probable that the Hunt measure will be approved, in spite of the fact that the new Legislature is of the opposite political party to that of Mr. Hunt.

Other Cincinnati Notes.

MANAGER HITE, of the Mutual Film Corporation's Cincinnati office, has been busy lately paving the way for the new Mutual serial, "Runaway June," which for fifteen weeks, beginning on Jan. 13, will hold the attention of those who followed the adventures of "Our Mutual Girl." Norma Phillips will be featured in the new serial, which, according to Manager Hite, will meet with even greater success than its predecessor. Arrangements have not yet been completed with any downtown theater for the first run of the new serial, but indications are that there will be some competition for the attraction.

The first war pictures bearing the imprint of official authority, that is, those taken under auspices of the Belgian Government by Photographer Weigel, of the Chicago Tribune, were exhibited at Music Hall in Cincinnati on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Good-sized crowds attended, as the pictures had been well advertised, and there was considerable interest in them. Roland McKechnie, a real war correspondent, who saw many of the scenes reproduced in the pictures, accompanied them with a lecture. All seats were 25 cents.

Exhibitors visiting the city to arrange, in most cases, for progress of special attractiveness for the holiday season, kept the film exchanges busy last week. Some of the better known exhibitors were: J. B. Howard, of Columbus, O., manager of the Colonial, now enjoying a prosperous season as a photoplay house after running for a time as a Shubert house; A. J. Brown, of Wapakoneta, O.; J. C. Trulack, of Aurora, Ind.; Manager Krapmeyer, of the Lawrenceburg, Ind., opera house, and many others.

The advertising possibilities of moving pictures and moving picture theaters have received not a little recognition recently in both Cincinnati and Hamilton, O. The Cincinnati Advertisers' Club, which includes practically all of the advertising fraternity in the Queen City, submitted last week its report to the Chamber of Commerce, as to the best means of advertising the city, and of impressing on the people themselves its beauties and advantages. It was recommended that moving pictures of the parks, playgrounds, schools, industries and so forth be shown all over the city, in the various theaters. At Hamilton, the thriving city just to the north of Cincinnati, the newly-organized West Side Commercial Association, composed of merchants in the western part of the city, recommended to its members the use of advertising slides in the photoplay houses, as well as the giving of admission tickets by the merchants with their names printed on them. These recommendations will probably be adopted in the respective cities.

The first woman to apply for a license as a moving picture operator in Cincinnati, Mrs. May Anspacher, took the examination required of operators last week and will doubtless secure her license in due course. She stated that she desired a license to enable her to travel from city to city and obtain work whenever she wanted it. Women operators are rather scarce, but there is no apparent reason why they should not do the work, and Mrs. Anspacher may be the advance guard of a new invasion in this line of activity.

The great interest felt in Cincinnati in the government work of improving the channel of the Ohio river, which has been interrupted seriously by the economy now being exercised, will be stimulated through the efforts of the Business Men's Club by the exhibition of pictures showing all of the locks and dams on the river, which will be secured from Washington. It is aimed to provide a 9-foot channel for navigation the year around.

Another big double bill, of the sort which is becoming the regular thing at the Orpheum, in Cincinnati, drew large crowds on Sunday afternoon and evening of last week. Both attractions were of the first class, the Hecla three-reel production featuring Madame Sarah Bernhardt in "The Romance of an Actress," being undoubtedly of high grade, while the five-reel Lasky film version of "The Man on the Box," with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, was one of the best things of the season at the Orpheum. It had, of course, already been seen in the city, but this apparently did not detract from its drawing power up on the hill.

Manager Julius Leopold, of the Mecca theater, one of the leading photoplay houses of Dayton, showed a fine spirit recently, in connection with the running of the initial section of the Universal picture serial, "The Master Key," at his house. He had announced that this would be free to all, and had distributed complimentary tickets, giving everybody a chance to visit his handsome house and get the start of the new serial free of charge. More than two thousand persons saw the opening installment; but it seems that not all of them had complimentary tickets, for the sum of $14.45 was taken in at the box office. Manager Leopold, sticking to his announced position, and determined to make nothing out of the day's business, promptly turned this amount over to a Dayton paper which has been collecting money and supplies for the thousands of people who are cold and hungry in the Ohio mining fields on account of the strike which has been going on for months, and the donation was, of course, greatly appreciated.

The stunt of the Maxwell Motor Co. in exhibiting all over the country moving pictures of its plants and of its processes of manufacture had unusual interest in Dayton, O., because two of the company's four plants is located in that city. The free display of the films at Memorial Hall, in Dayton, last Saturday, drew large crowds, which included many of the 2,000 employes of the two Dayton plants, who took this opportunity to see themselves in action. Many students also attended the exhibit on account of its educational value.

The Clifford, one of the several houses in Urbana, O., has instituted a periodical bargain day, when five reels are shown for five cents, advertising the event in its newspaper space. Results have justified the management both in giving the bargain and in advertising it, as the house is jammed to capacity from opening to closing in consequence.

The Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., which for more than two years has been taking local views in Cincinnati and other Ohio cities, has now perfected a connection comprising seventy-three theaters in Cincinnati and stretching from Lima, O., to Lexington, Ky., to use its "Cincinnati in Motion," issued weekly and covering events of interest in the Queen City. Moreover, the management of the company has just announced the early release, for use by these theatrs, of a still more ambitious program. It will consist of a weekly reel of 1,000 feet, under the title of the Ohio State Weekly, of views taken all over the State. Arrangements have also been made with the concern at Rochester, N. Y., which will issue the Empire State Weekly beginning Jan. 1, for an exchange of matter which will enable each to handle two reels a week Thus, the Cincinnati company will issue, beginning Feb. 1, in addition to its weekly Cincinnati reel, a reel of Ohio matter and one of New York matter, making in all three reels a week released from its office for its territory. The company's industrial business is also growing steadily, according to Clarence Runey, who has supervision of this part of the business, and bids fair to realize all that well-posted advertising men predict for this branch of the motion picture industry.

Trade Betterment in California

Film Exchange Owners Planning State Organization Like San Francisco Film Board of Trade.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The unqualified success of the plans for trade betterment inaugurated recently by the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco has led to plans for the formation of a State organization and it is probable that these will be consummated shortly. R. E. Stebbins, manager of the local Board of Trade, paid a visit to Los Angeles this week and explained the objects and workings of this organization to film exchange men of that city. A meeting was arranged for a later date, when it is planned to organize along the lines of the San Francisco body.

NEW THEATER AT BERKELEY.

Turner and Dahnken Open Magnificent Picture House in the College City.

THE Turner & Dahnken Circuit opened its magnificent new moving picture theater at Berkeley on the evening of Dec. 9, the opening offering being "Cabiria." In spite of a heavy rain an immense crowd gathered and the event was a gala one in the College City. Society and city officials were out in full force to grace the occasion and a short address was made by Wells Drury, of the Chamber of Commerce, who then introduced Mayor Charles Haywood and Samuel C. Irving, president of the Chamber of Commerce, each of whom made short talks.

The new theater is located on Kittredge street, near the Shattuck Hotel, and represents an investment of about $200,000. It is the largest amusement house on the east side of the bay and resembles the Tivoli of San Francisco in size and appointments. It covers a lot 100 by 135 feet in size and has a seating capacity of 2,100. The lighting system is unique, the distinctive feature being an arrangement of red, green and amber lights on three separate circuits controlled from the operating room. When a fire or volcano scene is thrown on the screen the house is illuminated by the red lights, and the green and amber effects are used on equally appropriate occasions. The admission is 15 and 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

The present house is the third one to be occupied in Berkeley by Turner & Dahnken, each of the others having been disposed of when they proved to be too small. The eight houses of this concern are under the management of C. L. Langley, and A. H. Moore is resident manager of the T. & D. theater, as the new house is called. An idea of the importance of this concern in the coast field may be judged from the fact that its capital stock is now $2,500,000. The Turner & Dahnken Controlling Co. has just been incorporated at San Francisco in this sum by J. T. Turner, Fred Dahnken, C. L. Langley, J. A. Buck, Jr., and E. B. Johnson.

California Film Exchange Occupies New Quarters.

The California Film Exchange, located for several years on Seventh street, near Market, has moved to new quarters at 121-127 Golden Gate avenue, which has become the Film Row of San Francisco. These new quarters are doubtless the most commodious of any given over to the film business here and embody the latest ideas for the handling of film and posters. Two entire floors are occupied, each with an area of 37 by 137 feet. Two fireproof vaults have been installed for the storage of film, one with a capacity of 4,500 reels and the other of 3,000 reels. The installation of vaults is not compulsory here. The California Film Exchange, under the highly efficient management of Morris L. Markowitz, has become one of the largest exchanges on the coast and is the distributor of Universal films. The move to new quarters was a necessary step and marks a growth of which the moving picture industry is justly proud.

Portia Theater Ready for Exposition Year.

The Portola theater on Market street, near Fourth, San Francisco, Cal., has been renovated and refurnished in preparation for the Exposition year under the direction of General Manager Eugene Roth. The lobby has been repainted and tapestry work installed, greatly improving its appearance. New lighting effects make a daylight house out of the theater, and an improved screen has been put in. The ladies' rest room has been refurnished and two maids placed in attendance. The theater in its present form is a decided contrast to the house taken over a few years ago by the present managment and is a distinct credit to the Exposition city.

It is alleged that Cohn entered into an agreement to purchase the Washington Square theater in Stockton street for $8,000, half the sum to be cash down. When the check was presented for payment it was not honored.

The Retail Grocers' Association of this city recently had moving pictures taken of local manufacturing and wholesale houses and these were shown at the annual theater party of the organization at the Gaiety theater.

The Camera Club of San Francisco, with which many motion picture cameramen are affiliated, supplanted its regular illustrated lecture for December with a moving picture show at Native Sons' Hall. New England Optimistic

Many Exchanges Did More Business Last Month Than in the Same Month a Year Ago.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS and exchangemen of the New England territory are optimistic over the business outlook for the coming year. A large number of the film exchange men state that business has started to boom and claim that they have done more business during the past month than was done in the same time a year ago. A large number of the exhibitors are not doing the business of a year ago, but this is attributed to the increased competition in this territory; however, a great improvement in conditions is looked for during 1915.

LEAGUE HOLDS DINNER.

Motion Picture Exhibitors Get Together and Hear Report of Ball Committee.

Forty members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts were present at a meeting and informal dinner held at the Hotel Georgian, Park square, Boston. President Ernest J. Horstmann presided. A report of the ball committee, which was read by Chairman Samuel Grant, showed that this great social affair was a financial success. On a motion made by Mr. Grant, it was decided that a vote of thanks should be given to Mr. John Wylie, managing editor of the Moving Picture World, for his kindness in devoting so much space to the report of the ball.

After dinner had been served those present were entertained by vaudeville performers from Gordon's Olympia, Scollay square, Olympia, and the Beacon theater.

Addresses were delivered by M. N. Brooks, of the Automatic Vaudeville Company; Alden Washburn, of the Unique theater, Boston; Joseph A. Di Pesa, publicity director of the Modern theater and Tremont Temple, Boston; Harry F. Campbell, of the Box Office Attraction Company; Charles Wesley Fraser, of the United Booking office; Hiram Adams, president of the Famous Players Company of New England; former State Senator John Gartland, who looked after the league's legislative work during the past year; J. Murphy, of Warner's Features, Inc.; Harry Asher, of the Famous Players Company of New England; Thomas Sprye, of the Alco Film Corporation, and J. Rifkin, of the Eastern eature Film Company.

An active membership campaign of the league will be launched in the near future. At the next meeting of the league new officers will be elected. Much regret was expressed by many members over the desire of the present incumbents to retire.

Paul W. Panzer, the renowned villian of the Eclectic feature. "The Perils of Pauline," was given a rousing reception when he reached the hall. He delivered a short address to the gathering and expressed his appreciation of the many courtesies which have been extended to him whenever he has visited the Hub.

Among those who were present were Hiram Abrams, Harry Asher, M. N. Brooks, Stuart Kollins, Harry F. Campbell, Joseph Di Pesa, J. A. Eslow, C. W. Fraser, John Gartland, Samuel Grant, Samuel Hass, Frank Howard, Ernest Horstman, L. S. Levine, John Leonard, J. Lourie, Patrick Lydon, Fred J. Murphy, John Maley, Paul Panzer, John F. Patten, Samuel Pinanski, J. Rifkin, Thomas Sprye, Herman Sivovlos, C. W. Seeley, Alden F. Washburn and James Walsh.

PAUL PANZER IN NEW ENGLAND.

Perils of Pauline Villain Well Received by Governor Walsh.

Paul Panzer, the villainous Owen in "The Perils of Pauline," visited Governor David I. Walsh of Massachusetts at the State House, in Boston, on December 16. Mr. Panzer is playing a vaudeville engagement throughout the New England states. Despite the fact that the governor was very busy when the renowned picture villain called, nevertheless, when his secretary presented the visitor's card, he was immediately ushered into his excellency's private office. The Executive told the actor that he was very glad that he had called and hoped that any of the other film stars whom he had met at the Exhibitors' ball would not fail to call on him whenever they visited Boston. The governor and his staff will be Mr. Panzer's guests at a performance when he plays the Boston Scenic Temple. On his visit, Mr. Panzer was accompanied by Stuart Kollins, of the John Quigley Booking Agency, and A. S. Stein, Boston manager of the Allen Feature Film Corporation.

Last week Mr. Panzer appeared at the Malden Auditorium, Scenic Temple, Cambridge, and Somerville theater. At each performance he received a rousing reception. His act consisted of the explanation of thrilling sections of five photoplays in which he has performed.

While fulfilling his Cambridge engagement he was to have held a reception after the final performance, at which Mayor Timothy W. Good and his family were to be the guests, but owing to a delay with his performance at the Somerville theater, the reception was called off. At the invitation of the mayor, the film star called upon him at his home, where he was introduced to the members of the first family of the University city.

Building Commissioner of Boston Makes Stringent Ruling.

Building Commissioner Patrick O'Hearn of Boston has prohibited exhibitions of stereopticon views or moving pictures in churches, hotels, halls and even private homes. Only first-class buildings will be allowed to have these shows hereafter. Mr. O'Hearn describes a first-class building as one that is constructed like a theater. In discussing his decision on the matter, he said: "There is not a hotel, church or private building in the city that has conditions suitable for the safe exhibition of motion pictures. They are not equipped as a theater and I would not dare give permission for an exhibition of pictures unless they were. This matter has been put to me and I am proceeding very carefully."

Allston Theater a Model Fireproof House.

The Allston theater, on Brighton avenue, Allston, Mass., is a model of an up-to-date fireproof playhouse, according to Building Commissioner O'Hearn. It is constructed of incombustible material. The floor, balcony and roof are of reinforced concrete, and the walls are of brick with granite trimmings. There are eighteen exits located in all parts of the building. The stage is fitted with automatic fire extinguishers and fire hose. The most modern heating and ventilating devices are used and arrangements have been made for cooling the air during the hot weather so that the temperature inside will be from 15 to 20 degrees cooler than the street. The lobby is finished with black and gold marble dado, nine feet in height, above which is a frieze of gold leaf. The orchestra is composed of six pieces. Edward Watson and Theodore Walker are the proprietors of the house.

Although he had been deprived of his sight, Mr. Haynes was a royal picture fan and the first place he went to on the recovery of his sight was to a moving picture show. He recovered his sight accidentally. He was groping his way about his home when he struck a bedpost. This blow restored his power of vision. He says that he has been a lover of moving pictures for over a year. He could not see them, but he liked to wait in the crowd and hear the comments and listen to the music. "Home Rule" Plan Suggested

National Board of Censorship Suggests to Ohio Local Censorship in Co-operation with National Board.

By J. D. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WITH the assurance of J. W. Binder, publicity director of the National Board of Censorship, and that of Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, representing the same organization, moving picture exhibitors of Ohio are confident legislation will be enacted at the coming assembly to repeal the present statute authorizing the legalized Ohio Board of Censors. Mr. Binder and Dr. Cocks addressed members of the Cleveland local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Wednesday, Dec. 16.

Mr. Binder declared he had been in conference with Frank B. Willis, newly-elected governor of Ohio, and received support in the movement against the legalized board of censors. Mr. Willis told him that if the National Board of Censorship and the exhibitors of Ohio could supply a substitute measure for the regulation of films, serving the needs of this State, he would recommend it in his program to the legislature.

Dr. Cocks has made a number of informal talks to the various social, civic and business organizations of twenty or thirty cities of Ohio. In each he has received assurance that selected members of this organization will go to Columbus and urge action by the legislature.

The "home rule" plan which the National Board suggests as a substitute for the present Ohio board in part provides as follows:

"An efficient number for a motion picture commission is five or seven. They are selected by the mayor from diversified groups representing public opinion and from those interested in pictures. The function of the commission is to discover and voice public opinion on the character of motion pictures to be exhibited in the city. It represents a city executive. The members concentrate their attention primarily on fugitive and uncensored films which theater owners or lessees desire to circulate. They also inspect films in which there are cuts or eliminations made by the National Board. The members of the commission review, also, with power to reject, those films about which they have received written complaints by citizens. The commission allows properly censored pictures to be publicly shown with a minimum of delay and friction. In considering controversial subjects like those dealing with the white slave traffic and the use of drugs, the labor conditions and religious themes, they are advised to seek counsel of skilled citizens before condemnation or approval. They have independence, at the same time they co-operate.

"The city plan involves the submission to the commission of a list of pictures it is proposed to show before the date of the first exhibition. A reasonable amount of time is necessary, so that any necessary action can be taken by the commission. It is also understood that proper arrangements shall be made for the review of pictures without charge to the city.

"The Bulletin of the National Board containing the complete action taken by that body on films each current week is sent to the representatives of the city commission. The complete list for the year will include ninety-five per cent. of all the motion picture films in circulation throughout the country. The National Board agrees to furnish these and other advices freely to the city commissions.

"The Standards of Judgment have been printed by the National Board and will be furnished as a guide. These standards define public opinion on definite ideas and scenes shown in motion pictures. It is understood that no pictures which are obscene, indecent, improper, licentious, immoral or sacriligeous shall be shown. It is to be noted that no official body has jurisdiction over other pictures, which, though commonplace, thrilling or sensational, do not overstep these lines indicated by law.

"The city plan is not theoretical. It has been working satisfactorily in a number of the cities of the country, among which are New York city, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Portland, Ore., Pasadena, Los Angeles, Jackson, Miss., Dallas, and Joplin, Mo."

Meeting of Michigan League

To Try for Repeal of Theater Inspection Fee—League Opposed to Scheme—Various New Committees Were Appointed.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE semi-annual meeting of the Michigan Picture Exhibitors' League took place in the club rooms of the association in the Equity building, Detroit, Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 15. The attendance was a very small one, due somewhat to the cold weather and the further fact that there had been some misunderstanding as to the exact date. Peter J. Jeup, president, who recently returned from New York, presided. He gave a report of what took place at the meeting of the executive committee of the National Association in New York. J. C. Ritter of Detroit was elected National vice-president from Michigan. Mr. Ritter owns the Boulevard theater. Resolutions were passed instructing the legislative committee to try and have the inspection fee of moving picture theaters repealed by the state legislature; as it is now, under this law picture houses must be inspected twice a year by the State Fire Marshal department at an expense of $10 for each inspection. Committees were appointed as follows:

Revising Constitution—Messrs. Rumler, Orth and Fowser, Detroit.

Convention Committee, to look after arrangements for the annual meeting at Lansing, June 8—Messrs. Neal, Hall, Cady, Jarvis, Abel, all of Lansing.

Legislative Committee—Messrs. Neal, Cady, Hall, Jarvis, Abel, of Lansing, Jeup of Detroit, Moeller of Howell and Smith of Grand Rapids.

It was announced by Secretary Orth that at the Dec. 8 meeting 12 new members had been taken into the association and that since then 15 more applications had been received and accepted, making a total of 27 new members inside of two weeks. The association now has a membership of 160, 65 per cent. of which is in Detroit.

The association is strictly opposed to all schemes. A number of cases were brought up where theaters, both in Detroit and out in the state, were using coupons and other schemes to stimulate business, which were referred to the proper committee. There were also reported cases of theaters giving more than the regulation three and five reels for five and ten cents. President Jeup said he wanted members to report all such cases and that efforts would be made to stop the practice. The matter of giving a two or three-minute intermission between each reel of one thousand feet was also brought up. Some one said that at the next session of the Michigan Legislature a law would be proposed requiring an intermission between each reel to relieve eye-strain. The matter is now in the hands of the legislative committee.

Other Items from Detroit.

T. D. MOULE, manager of the Alhambra, is enthusiastic over the pipe organ installed in that playhouse. It is of the electro-pneumatic type; in its construction nearly a thousand pneumatic valves and over ten miles of electric wire have been used. It is built in two sections, rooms on both sides of the stage over the boxes having been prepared for this installation. Grilled openings from these chambers furnish vents for the exit of the tone. In addition to the Norman manuals and pedals for playing the instrument, provision is made for automatic operation, a self-playing device having been installed as an auxiliary to the musician's work.

H. W. Irons, manager of the Washington, thinks the day is coming when high-class singers will be used as an added feature of the leading photoplay theaters. "There is no doubt in my mind that a high-class singer rendering one or two solos between each performance would be thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated by patrons, and in fact would become a big drawing card. When I say a singer, I don't refer to the cheap $20 or $25 man or woman, but some one capable of earning from $75 to $100 per week. It may seem a lot of money to pay for a singer, but like the old saying, 'expenses are nothing if you do the business.'"

The Employers' Association of Detroit celebrated its twelfth anniversary Tuesday evening, Dec. 15. Two moving picture plays were shown, "The Price of Thoughtfulness" and "The Man He Might Have Been." One showed how easily an accident can occur and the other the advantage of an education.

Nearly 1,500 school children gathered at the Washington theater Saturday morning, Dec. 12, under the auspices of the moral welfare committee of the Political and Civic League to see a series of educational films and to listen to an address by Mayor Oscar B. Marx. The entertainment was the first of a series planned for this winter by the league, and has been given warm approval by Dr. Chadsey, Supt. of Schools.

A. J. Gillingham, proprietor of the New Empire theater, is erecting a double brick store and flat building on Woodward avenue, near Calvert avenue.

The All-Red Feature Co., of Windsor and Detroit, the main studio being at Windsor, has taken the second floor of the building on Pitt street and will use this for studio purposes, the main offices and workrooms being on the third floor. The company now has 6,400 square feet. In the spring the company plans to have erected a much larger studio on one and one-half acres of ground already secured. The All-Red Weekly is still being produced regularly and is a big success. The first large production of "The War Pigeon" is now being booked through Canada and is in great demand. The company consists of F. H. Lawrence and W. H. Lawrence.

Sam Johnson has been appointed assistant manager of the New Empire. For the past few years he has been operator at this theater.

The first "near-accident" staged in the interest of "safety first" for the Ford-Detroit Weekly took place at noon on Monday, Dec. 14. It involved two street cars and an automobile, showing how near they could come to colliding without actually doing any damage. Forty feet away from the scene was the moving picture man. The streets were crowded with people who saw the "near accident," but were not aware of the purpose. No sooner had the "accident" occurred when people rushed from every direction to see what the trouble was, and going away with a smile when they found out that it was all a rehearsal. A. B. Jewett, head of the Ford motion picture department, drove the car that was in the accident.

The Progressive Film & Equipment Co., 97 Woodward avenue, Detroit, has been offering "Two Holiday Specials." One, "The House of Bondage," six reels, paper included, 24 sheets down to half sheets, for $20; also "The Folks From Way Down East," in five reels, photographs, and paper included, for $15.

John H. Kunsky praised very highly the Pathe feature, "More Than Queen," which appeared at the Alhambra and also the Garden during the week of Dec. 7. In fact, he was so pleased with this picture that he had it play a return engagement at each house. He said that from a standpoint of scenery, coloring, details, etc., it was the finest production he had ever witnessed. This picture was booked through the Eclectric Company and is in four reels. Mr. Kunsky is of the belief that the day is not far off when natural colors will be the thing in motion pictures.

MISSOURI NOTES OF INTEREST.

By Kansas City News Service.

THE Willis Wood theater turned its house over to the San Carlos Opera Co. for four nights last week. The fact that grand opera was being put on at a picture theater caused some comment, and a large number of people attended the performances who had not attended the photoplays. Every one commented on the beauty of the theater. In this manner the management made many new friends in the exclusive homes in the city who will become regular patrons of the photoplays. All of the settings on the stage which were semi-permanent had to be removed so that the opera company could put up its settings. After the opera company was gone Mr. Wagner, house electrician and stage manager, changed the entire setting and added several hundred Christmas trees to the scene so as to add a little holiday cheer to the theater. A ten-day run of the Selig feature, "The Spoilers," commenced Thursday, Dec. 10.

N. J. Flynn and E. E. Richards, of Kansas City, Mo., composing the Richards-Flynn Amusement Co., which operates the Wonderland, the Subway and the Richlyn theaters, expect to make an extensive trip through the east, starting about Jan. 1. From Kansas City they expect to go to New York, thence to Washington, D. C., and then to Florida. It has been hinted in Kansas City that the reason for going to Florida is that Mr. Richards wants to play the fat man in some of the comedies produced in that state. From Florida they will return to Kansas City.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Eclectic Exchange, has six copies of the Perils of Pauline working all the time. He now is able to supply this serial in weekly episodes. He is also having remarkable success in booking the Pathe release, the "Life of Our Saviour," and several of the largest theaters in both Missouri and Kansas have already asked for it.

Four immense pictures of the star players in World Feature Film releases adorn the Kansas City office of that company. It is supposed that these pictures are intended to be put in one of the large theaters. However, the present manager, C. L. McVey, says that they look good to him and that he might keep them himself.

The Landers theater in Springfield, Mo., held an old fiddlers' contest Friday night, Dec. 11. The contest was under the management of the Old Fiddlers' Association and many valuable prizes were given to the contestants.

W. A. Andlauer, lessee of the Warwick theater at Westport avenue and Main street, Kansas City, Mo., has sold his interest in the theater to O. P. Rose for $7,500.

The Star theater at Columbia, Mo., showed "America" Monday, Dec. 8, to a large crowd. The management gave two performances at 10 and 20 cents, and the "One In a Million," World Film anti-war picture, proved to be a great drawing card for the Wonderland theater Saturday, Dec. 5, and Sunday, Dec. 6. Both days were rainy and disagreeable; however, the theater was crowded all of the time. Manager Flynn said that it was the greatest protest against war that he had ever seen.

The Twelfth Street theater made a hit with the Thanhouser release, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is a mistake to say that people no longer care for this story, because the crowds that attended the show proves that it is still popular.

NEWS NOTES FROM INDIANA.

By R. L. Jenne, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE moving picture exhibitors in Peru, Ind., deserved some credit for initiative in the fact that they are the first in Indiana so far to put themselves in position to find out exactly how the people stand on the Sunday question. They have gone to work in a systematic manner circulating petitions, getting signatures of those who favor keeping the houses open. There seems to be no question but that a majority of the people favor an open Sunday.

The Princess theater, Williamsport, after being closed two weeks to remodel the seats and install a new machine, was opened again with a free show. Needless to say the house had all the patronage it could accommodate.

Chas. F. Woods, Princeton manager of the Star theater, makes a public statement that he will not raise the price of his entertainment from 5 to 10 cents except when he has something very special in the way of a feature, when he expects the public will be more than willing to do its part toward helping him to make a profit from his show. Other houses in Princeton have raised the price.

The Luna theater, at Tipton, owned by Andrews and Kirkhoff, of Lafayette, was sold to Hamilton & Mote, of the same city. S. W. Houston, another Lafayette man, has bought a moving picture house in Indianapolis.

The Grand theater, Bluffton, is being remodeled, and manager Sawyer has closed on all except Saturday night for the time being.

The Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors are helping to spread the "Safety First" doctrine by showing films in 28 of the moving picture houses this week. NOTES FROM TENNESSEE.

By G. D. Crain, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new war tax of from $25 to $50 on moving picture houses has had the effect of putting several of the smaller houses in the mountain district of Tennessee out of business for the time being. A number of these small theaters which only operate one or two nights a week and only charge five cents admission are unable to pay even a $25 tax and make it back at this time of year, and will therefore delay paying the tax or operating until after the cold weather is over. To meet the increased cost in operating moving picture houses because of the war tax, increased cost of carbons and other supplies, it is probable that a number of the smaller exhibitors of the state will increase their admittance charge from five to ten cents. Under the increased maintenance cost it is almost impossible in isolated districts to operate at a profit at present prices.

The Lillian theater, of Clarksville, Tenn., has been showing four and five reels of mixed program with admirable success lately. A recent program included the Kalem two-act drama of prison life, featuring Paul Hurst and William H. West in "The Prison Stain;" "The Evolution of Percival," the Vitagraph comedy, featuring Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge, and "The Tempter." "The Dream Girl," a two-reel production, also went well.

The first of a series of moving pictures that are designed especially for children of Nashville, Tenn., were shown at the Princess theater Saturday, Dec. 6, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 1 o'clock in the afternoon. "Pilgrims' Progress" was the first picture shown. The plan for having special days and certain hours on these days set apart with pictures suitable for children was inaugurated and worked out by the Council of Jewish women through a committee of which Mrs. Harry Joseph is chairman. There has been a strong sentiment prevailing among these women for some time that much shown in motion picture offerings is not suitable for children to see, particularly from an educational standpoint. The Council of Jewish Women worked out a practical solution of the problem through the arrangement announced, which is in some part similar to that in use at the Mary Anderson theater, of Louisville. The pictures are for benefit of all children, of all nationalities, throughout the city, and Mrs. Joseph, as chairman of the special committee of the council, asked that mothers co-operate in making the project a success. She corrected an impression that had been made that the pictures were for Jewish children only. She said that this was not true, and that in working out the plans the committee had all children in mind, the aim being that children generally should see only good pictures when they visited the "shows," and that if it was known at what hour suitable film plays could be seen the children would visit the playhouses at that hour. Tony Sudekum, manager of the Princess theater, and a number of other theaters, is co-operating with Mrs. Joseph and committee in arranging for desirable pictures every Saturday. The program for each Saturday will be announced about a week in advance.

The Queen theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., some time ago started giving coupons with all tickets to the moving picture house, which were redeemable just before Christmas for a "tango racer" for boys and girls. This racer, as it is known, is one of the chief delights of juveniles at this time, and is constructed with four small wheels, a board and a handle, and is propelled by standing upon it with one foot and pushing with the other. Fifty coupons were needed to get the racer, and many of the children saved coupons for months. The management recently posted a notice in which the children were notified to come in and leave the number of tickets they had saved so that the theater would be in position to notify Santa Clause of how many racers would be needed. In many cases where the tots failed to get their full fifty, the management will not overlook them.

The Majestic theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is running moving pictures even with musical comedy, and the combined bills have drawn very well.

The Picto theater, of Chattanooga, recently showed the first two reels of "The Gentleman Adventurer," in which Warren Kerrigan takes the leading part. This story was written by Louis Vance, author of the "Trey O' Hearts." "His Heart, His Hand and His Sword," the first section of the Universal serial, which will run for fourteen weeks, went very well at the Picto.

An exhibition for the benefit of the war relief fund of the Nashville Commercial Club was held in the Ryman Auditorium during the afternoon and night of Saturday, Dec. 12. The moving pictures shown were taken in Belgium a short time ago by permission of the Belgian Government, with a provision for the benefit of non-combatants who have suffered by the war. Two performances were given, one at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and one at 8 o'clock at night.

Proceeds from moving picture shows in many cases have been set aside for the Belgium relief work, and in some cases special shows have been given in halls for this work. Tennessee exhibitors have shown a strong disposition to help, in every way possible, the committees which have been working on relief work.

She entered the theater carrying a chip basket covered with a newspaper at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. She took a seat near the center of the house and later left without attracting attention. At 5 o'clock a man who had entered the theater heard a noise in the basket and lifted the paper. Wrapped in a cheap cotton blanket and wearing a flannel gown was the baby. Manager Joe Steurle said afterward that even deserted babies had an advertising value to the theater, as the newspapers played up the thing.

Receipts from moving pictures exhibited at the Masonic theater for the Empty Stocking Club amounting to $26.93 were turned over to the club. This money will be used in purchasing toys for the children of the poor, who in many instances would otherwise have a very cheerless Christmas this year. The fund was started under the auspices of the Louisville Herald, which has just completed a fund which sent five cars of flour to the Belgians' relief.

"Little Breeches," the poem by John Hammond Hay, was shown at Keith's theater on Saturday, Dec. 12, during the special session for school children held in the morning. Mrs. E. H. Ellwanger read the poem aloud to the children as the film was shown. As the poem is in dialect it was feared at first that it would be too much for the little tots, but it proved very much appreciated. Other pictures shown at this performance were: "Monkey Land," a comedy; "Waterfalls of Krumell," "Hansel & Gretel." Two performances were given, one at 10 o'clock and the other at 11:15 o'clock.

The three moving picture theaters of Princeton, Ind., to meet the increased cost of films and general expenses, to say nothing of the war tax, changed the cost of admission from five to ten cents for adults. It is understood that a number of the smaller theaters in Kentucky will also increase their admission prices. The cost of carbons in itself has been heavily felt by the smaller houses.

Moving pictures taken for the Kentucky building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition are coming along nicely at this time. By Philadelphia News Service.

AT a meeting of the Trenton Screen Club, it was decided to hold the moving picture carnival that had been planned, at the Arcade, on Monday, January 18. The Armory could not be obtained for the date selected, but under the special arrangements that have been made for the affair, the event will be the largest ever held in the city of Trenton.

The main or leading thought of the carnival is to have lovers of moving pictures, personally meet their favorites of the screen. Among the stars from whom acceptances of invitations to attend have been received are King Baggot, leading man for the Universal and ex-president of the Screen Club; Maurice Costello, of the Vitagraph; Author Johnson, of the Lubin stock; Edmund August, of the Kinetephone; Mary Fuller, formerly with the Edison and now with the Universal; Ormi Hawley, Lubin; Clara Kimball Young, World Features; Gertrude McCoy, Edison.

Mary Pickford replied that she will be pleased to be present if she is in this part of the country at the time of the carnival.

Charles C. Hildinger, who called upon a large number of the leading film manufacturers of New York and Philadelphia in behalf of the Trenton Club, was readily given promise of support.

Siegmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Company of Philadelphia, stated that he would be on the job with about 20 of his star performers. He will have a box at the carnival, as will Mark Dittenfass of the Universal.

The officers of the Trenton Screen Club are Montgomery Moses, president; Chas. C. Hildinger, vice-president; Philip Papier, treasurer; Herman Wahn, secretary; Daniel Scullen, publicity representative.

The pictures will be shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco. Activities in other Y. W. C. A.'s throughout the country will also be shown to represent sectional work, but Newark's association will illustrate city work, and this will include the "gym," the swimming pool, club work members at supper, the lunch hour in the cafeteria, dressmaking and millinery classes and the process of preparing food for consumption in the cafeteria. The little girl's class in basketry work will also be shown.

Polly Evans Gives a Treat in Philadelphia.

If you happened to be a member of the North American Outing Fund, which has done so much for the poor children of the city, and failed to take advantage of the treat that was offered to you by Polly Evans, why that was certainly your own fault. What was the treat? Just motion pictures, that's all. Polly Evans sent each and every member of the association a postal card, which, when presented at room 513, the North American Building, was redeemed for a seat at the Chestnut Street Opera House, where Rex Beach's film romance, "The Spoilers," a Selig feature, is playing, or at the Stanley theater, which is presenting as a holiday attraction, the Famous Players picture, "The Sign of the Cross."

Tickets to the number of 150,000 and representing $15,000 were donated to the Emergency Aid Committee by three West Philadelphia theater managers. The tickets were sold at the Made-in-America Bazar by the aides and the proceeds obtained from their sale will be used in emergency work. The tickets, especially printed, bore a fac-simile of the signature of Mrs. Barclay H. Warburton. They will be good for admission at the following theaters: Belmont, 52nd above Market streets; Fifty-second Street theater, and the Apollo at 52nd and Thompson streets.

The Vitagraph Company of America, whose pictures are so popular throughout the world of moving picture theaters, has informed Manager Marlow of the Ruby theater, Seventh and Market streets, that they have selected that house to have first showing in Philadelphia of the Vitagraph Broadway Star Features, for every Tuesday. Many comments were to be heard along moving picture row on Market street, as the result of this action. It is a remarkable event for the Ruby theater as they can show their patrons the latest Vitagraph productions the same day as they are shown on Broadway. The holiday crowds will find much to entertain them at this well known establishment.

Ollie Moffett, the big blonde half-back of the University of Pennsylvania, has left school and will join a moving picture company in a tour of Alaska.

The new theater will be called the Hippodrome and will be opened by George Kline, who has been made manager, and who will address the audience as to the policy of the theater. Critics have conceded the new motion picture house to be a work of art. Although the interior decorations of the theater are of green and gold, they do not conflict with one's sense of harmony, for the way in which the colors have been blended is certainly a revelation. Nothing but the best pictures obtainable will be shown.

Plans have been drawn for the erection of a theater in Jersey City, N. J., for the Fairmount Amusement Company. It is to be three stories in height, with a basement, and will be made of brick and concrete.

The Griffith feature, "Judith of Bethulia," one of the sensations of the present season, and a picture which never fails to fill any house and which is always in demand for return engagements, was exhibited by Mr. Russell. The admission charged in the afternoon was 5 and 10 cents, and in the evening 10 and 15 cents. Every one in Chesterton, who could conveniently do so, attended the performances and helped Mr. Russell to forward his generous idea.

Settlement has been made by Clarence J. Shilock, through Horace Groskin, broker, with George R. Weikel, for a plot of ground on the west side of Broad street north of Rockland street, on which he will erect a moving picture theater. The Nixon and Erlanger Film Exchange, owing to the increasing amount of business, will remove to better and larger quarters, at 1337 Vine street, on the first of the year. On Monday and Tuesday, December 21 and 22, respectively, the first six-part comedy turned out by the Keystone Film Company, had its initial production in this city at the Regent theater. It was written for Marie Dressler, who was supported by such a happy combination as Mabel Normand, Charles Chaplin and Mack Sennett, the author of the work. It has often been said that the motion picture comedy, to be real amusing and entertaining throughout the length of its showing, could not be drawn out over three reels and still remain attractive to the audience. However, it is nearly impossible for any one to view "Tilly's Punctured Romance" and not crack a smile, as a fellow says.

The Franklin theater of Allentown, Pa., recently exhibited that famous soul-inspiring picture "The Man Who Came Back," a one-reel Eclair picture. It made a distinct hit with the people who viewed the picture and encourages the owners to continue displaying first-class pictures.

Leading picture houses throughout this city will show photoplays appropriate to the Christmastide and special offerings during the holiday period. Several houses will show Santa Claus sleigh, reindeers and all, at others, pictures which deal in all reverence with sacred scenes and subjects, will be given. One of the most elaborate productions will be that of Wilson Barrett's drama, made by Famous Players, "The Sign of the Cross," which will be shown at the Stanley. None of the houses, large or small, will fail to exhibit pictures which blend with that time-honored expression, "Peace on Earth and Good Will to Men."

The big Orpheum bill, for Rotary Week, which was held in Harrisburg, was nicely balanced by the addition of moving picture scenes taken recently in the countries that are now at war. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be given at the new Sayre, Pa., theater, to be opened January 1. W. J. Melarkey, manager, was formerly connected with the Victoria theater, Rochester, and the Colonial theater, Elmira.

An ordinance to prevent moving pictures on Sunday was recently prepared in Binghamton, N. Y., but later withdrawn. The reason is that the ordinance in its proposed form would probably prevent the production of stereopticon views in churches on Sunday evenings, if collections were taken after the exhibitions. The ordinance will be revised to protect the church people.

At moving picture shows at the Stone Opera House and the Star theater, Binghamton, N. Y., advertising of the public library of that city are thrown on the screens. This privilege is given free by the theater managers. Slogans showing the educational benefits from reading technical and other books are flashed from the machines.

The law prohibiting children under 16 years to attend moving picture theaters, unless accompanied by parents or guardians, will be enforced by Humane Officer Koerbel of Binghamton.

Besides having a good program of moving pictures, Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, recently had a fox trot dancing contest. Anyone in the audience was permitted to enter. Another feature was "international week or acts from all nations."

An action brought by Joseph P. Sullivan against the Happy Hour Amusement Co. is being tried in Elmira, N. Y. The case involves the lease of the Colonial theater of that city.

According to printed reports, O. S. Hathaway, a theatrical man of Middletown, N. Y., has denied the report that he will lease the Lyceum theater of Elmira, N. Y.

In keeping with the holiday spirit, the lobby of the Strand theater, Buffalo, is embellished with a Christmas tree carrying electric lights and other decorations. There are Christmas bells in which appear an announcement of the week's program. The decorations were planned by Assistant Manager Hyman. George Bouchard, formerly at the Hippodrome, Buffalo, has become director of the Strand orchestra. Lyndsay Spence, a local composer, is relief organist at the house.

Moving pictures of the Niagara frontier and New York state barge canal were recently shown at a meeting of the Buffalo Ad. Club.

Recent attractions in moving picture theaters: Shea's Hippodrome, "The Conspiracy"; Strand, "The Tigress" and "From Manger to Cross"; Elwood, "When Broadway Was a Trail"; Keith's, Francis X. Bushman in "Every Inch a King."

MONTREAL, ONTARIO, ITEMS.

By G. Gallager, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

P. St. Charles Hamilton, in a recent article in the local Herald and Telegraph, urges the formation in Canada of a National Board of Censors. Reviewing the history of the National Board in the United States, he finds that much good has been brought about by the methods used by the American organization. "We are not so advanced in Canada," writes Mr. Hamilton. "A film's fate in Canada is very uncertain. Still there is necessity for some sort of a purely Canadian Board of Censorship. This should be national rather than provincial or municipal; advisory instead of compulsory; gratuitous, as the National Board of the United States is, instead of being a substantial tax upon the theaters, the producer and the public, as it is here; independent and with some at least with expert knowledge, instead of being composed of men whose only acquaintance with the business was acquired with a pair of shears after their appointment. If some representative people such as compose the National Board could be got together in, say, Montreal, producers looking towards the lucrative Canadian market could send their films here at the same time that they are submitted to the Nationals' and an intimation that from sentiment or other reason they were not suited to our people, or needed trimming, would provide the most effective censorship.

The large building on Church avenue, Verdun, under erection for the Standard Amusement Company, is now well advanced towards completion, and under the name of the Park theater is expected to open about Christmas. Internally the arrangements are meant to make for comfort, and with bookings of really interesting films, the proprietors are hopeful that their efforts will secure the patronage of the southern suburb. The place will seat about 1,200, and the most up-to-date precautions for the handling of such a crowd have been made. The stairways are wide, and ample fire-hose connections are fitted, together with large fire-escape doors. Panic bolts provide additional means of outlet to the extent that it is calculated a full house can be cleared inside of a couple of minutes. S. J. Dunning is manager, with A. C. Clapperton as assistant. The cost of the building and fittings is about $50,000.

The Noted Players Feature Film Company is now located at 613 New Birks' building, having been compelled to seek larger quarters because of their large business. The new offices are large and roomy, and I. Sourkes, the manager, is beaming with pleasure. Mr. Sourk's announces that he is now handling the Atlantic program, having obtained the sole rights for Canada of that output. The London theater here has contracted for some of the Alliance releases, and will show them first run in this city. A Noted Players branch office has been opened in Winnipeg.

Mr. Lubin, manager of the Local office of the Allied Features, Inc., announces that he will handle the Sawyer releases in this district. Mr. Lubin claims good business is being done, and promises that he will be prepared to make an important announcement shortly.

L. O. Armstrong, official lecturer of the Department of Natural Resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway, states that the C. P. R. will have a series of moving pictures at the Panama Exposition next year of all parts of Canada that are likely to attract tourists and settlers.

An interesting moving picture exhibition was given at the Press and Advertising Club recently when Messrs. Pathe Freres showed their new Pathescope. The exhibition demonstrated the possibilities of moving pictures in the home, and also the adaptability of "movies" for advertising purposes.

The first and probably only entertainment of its kind ever held in this city took place recently at the Casino theater, under the auspices of the Chevra Kadish Sunday School to celebrate Chanukan, the feast of the Dedication. A splendid program was arranged for the occasion. Together with other selected Jewish historical and biblical moving pictures was shown "Joseph's Trials in Egypt," a beautiful colored subject in three parts. In addition a reproduction of the most vivid scenes of Palestine were shown by courtesy of the Zionist Confederation of Montreal. Proceeds were shared with the Patriotic fund and other institutions.

The Scala, under the management of Maurice West, is doing good business. Mr. West has reached an agreement with the Union people concerning the recent trouble with employees at the Family theater. Business at the latter house is fair.

The Globe theater's motto is "Safety First," and it truly lives up to it. It is the acme of perfection in construction. Good business is being done at the uptown house.

The New Grand has contracted to screen the Famous Players releases of the Paramount program. A novel competition is being held by the management. Coupons are distributed to every purchaser of a ten cent ticket at the matinees. When ten coupons have been secured a key will be given to the patron, which, if it opens a certain padlock, entitles the patron to five hundred dollars in gold. The competition closes on March 1.

"The Bells of Rheims" controlled in Canada by the Noted Players Feature Film Company, was shown recently at the London and Mount Royal theaters.

Beck's Weekly thinks it right that Alderman Lapointe's proposal that a one-cent tax should be placed upon all admission tickets for the purpose of raising money for charitable purposes, seems to have been allowed to drop into oblivion. Beck's comments in part: "At any rate, it is to be hoped that the City Council will think twice before it puts a tax upon tickets of admission to the cheaper moving picture theaters. 'The movies' are essentially the amusement of the poor. Anything tending to increase this cost is an added burden to the people least able to pay for amusement and most in need of it. At present fifty cents will give a family of five a whole evening of genuine pleasure, whereas if the alderman's scheme was applied indiscriminately, the cost would be much greater. If there must be an additional tax placed on our amusements let the poor man's amusement alone. Place the burden upon those better able to stand it."

The film men of Montreal wish their brothers in the trade a Merry Christmas and Prosperous New Year. I also take this opportunity of adding my greetings both to others and Montrealers, many of whom I shall not be able of seeing during this holiday season.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, NOTES.

By David K. Billing, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE three large moving picture houses have been fortunate in securing for Christmas week three of the biggest Christmas features. Shea's Hippodrome will show the Famous Players pictures, "Sign of the Cross," the Strand will have Cosmophoto Film offering, "Scrooge," and Loew's Yonge Street theater has closed with All Features, Limited, to show "A Christmas Carol," an English film.

Louis B. Hecht, who has been in charge of All Features, Limited, and who was formerly with Mark Brock and several other well-known American picture men, is going to Winnipeg to take charge of the western office of the company. The demand for patriotic pictures of which he is making a specialty, has increased, so that the care of the Toronto office will be left to Mr. Kauffmann. It is rather a coincidence that the big feature, "For the Empire," which is being shown at the Strand this week, should have been released the same week as the German attack against England, as this picture deals with this very thing.

M. Thaler, manager of the Playhouse, of College street, celebrated the first anniversary of the opening of his house last week by showing a special program of big features which included "Mother" and "Lola," both World Film offerings.

Harry Price, local manager of the World Film Corporation, has signed with George Brady, of the Madison theater, for two World features a week, while Phil Kauffmann, manager of the Famous Players Film Service, has also closed with him to show one Paramount picture a week. The Madison theater is the largest of the uptown theaters and until recently has run a cheap program.

Herbert Jennings has renovated the old Avenue theater, at the corner of Queen street and Spadina avenue and has built a ball room over the auditorium and will next week open it under a new name. This is one of the oldest picture theaters in Toronto and has been a big money maker, but poor management allowed it to dwindle. Mr. Jennings is going to have a first-class orchestra and will run high-class pictures.

The Provincial Inspector of motion picture theaters has sent out notices which will require that all theater owners send plans of all changes in theaters to the Provincial office to be passed on before the work is commenced. This will prevent the making of many changes which occurred when the inspector merely visited the completed work. This new ruling also applies to new theaters.

A private exhibition of the Belgian war pictures was held at the Willowvale theater, West Bloor street, Friday, December 4. All theater owners and operators in Toronto were invited, and also the entire company of "Adele," which was playing at the Princess theater, where the pictures will be shown next week. Several civic officials and prominent citizens were present and the exhibition received news notes in the daily papers.

Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, will, starting next week, bring two Paramount releases to Canada each week. The success which has attended their original once-a-week plan was far greater than anticipated. He has succeeded in booking the pictures at the best houses throughout Ontario.

An interesting event occurred here Saturday, December 5, when Parkdale Canoe Club and Balmy Beach Canoe Club hooked up in an exhibition game of rugby before 2,000 spectators in order that the Conness Till Picture Company might secure a setting for one of their scenarios. Besides the gate the teams will receive a thousand feet of film from the company of the teams in action which will be shown for the benefit of the clubs at one of the local theaters. By special arrangement with the Amateur Athletic Union, Parkdale, the winners are permitted to call themselves junior rugby champions of the city. Both teams will be given souvenir medals by the Conness Till Company.

It is just a year since three large vaudeville houses were opened in the downtown district. At that time it was predicted that nothing but a speedy death remained for the moving picture theaters unless they lowered their prices. Last week the Strand, Majestic and Colonial each did one of the biggest week's business in their history at their old prices, while one of the vaudeville houses is now featuring moving pictures in place of vaudeville.

The manager of Warner's Features reports that business for his company all over Ontario is better since the beginning of the war than at any time previous.

D. A. Lochrie, of the Park theater, since he has been featuring moving pictures instead of vaudeville, reports a twenty per cent. increase in business done at his theater, which is one of the largest in the suburbs.

George Brady, of the Madison theater, is now devoting his theater to Multiple Reel Features. He opened the new program last week by showing "Lola." He is the fifth moving picture manager who has practically eliminated the one and two-reel pictures from his programs. Everyone claims the venture a success.

Leon Schlesinger, manager of the Strand theater, has removed the illuminated picture of King George which he had over the main entrance to his theater and has replaced it with a similar one of Earl Kitchener, as more in keeping with the program of patriotic war pictures he is showing.

Phil Kauffmann had a private exhibition of "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" last Wednesday, immediately after the arrival of the film from England. The picture is a story version of the famous song and follows the words very closely. There is talk of trying to introduce it into the States.

There is being some delay in the opening of the Photodrome and on account of the dullness of the business at the Christmas period it will be delayed until after the New Year, as the Gordon Brothers under whose management it will open are afraid to risk anything while conditions are as bad as they have been the last two weeks.

Exhibitors in the city report that they have never known business to be as bad as it has been this week and last. The Classic theater, which seats nearly 800, has been showing feature films to less than a hundred people.

George H. Cooper is holding the release of the Kleine offering, "Julius Caesar," until the New Year, on account of the general quietness. He is arranging to have a private exhibition of the picture for the civic officers and for the university professors, as the interest in the film is very great. He also reports that after running for 21 months, the old picture "Quo Vadis" still heads the list of Kleine bookings in Ontario with "Antony and Cleopatra" a close second. "Between Savage and Tiger," the Selig offering, is proving one of the most popular pictures ever brought to Canada. It had an exceptional run at the Flower theater, Ottawa, last week.

After a little parley with the local censors, "The Naked Truth," a Kleine offering, has been passed without a single cut and will open here next week.

"The Making of a Scout," which was given a private exhibition in Ottawa recently before the Duke of Connaught and his suite and was heartily endorsed by his Royal Highness, is being started en tour under the auspices of the Boy Scout organization of the Dominion, which is to get a percentage of the receipts.

Rose and Robertson are completing a new theater in Newmarket, Ontario, that when completed will be one of the cosiest small town theaters in Ontario. It will seat 450.

J. W. Lamb, formerly of Orillia, Ontario, is building a motion picture theater at Pembroke to seat 900. The theater is one of the largest picture houses in the province outside of the big cities. It will have an orchestra and the seating is evenly divided between the ground floor and the balcony.

T. E. Christopher and F. E. Sullivan have built a theater in Spanish River, Ontario, a town of about five hundred people. The house seats over 200 and the manager says that it is already commencing to pay.

The Moore Brothers theater in Grimsby, Ont., which was opened last month, is reported as doing an exceptionally large business this winter notwithstanding the failure of the fruit crop, which left many of the fruit growers, the support of the town, short of cash.

VITAGRAPH.

THE FATES AND FLORA FOURFLUSH (Part 1 of the Massive Ten Billion Dollar Vitagraph Mystery Serial, "Treachery In the Clouds"—Jan. 4).—[Note—This picture is a parody on the numerous thrills, perils and mysteries recently perpetrated and must not be taken too seriously.] After being run over by a ponderous four-horse-power "1892 Combustible," belonging to Flora Fourflush, an orphan millionairess, Frank Goodheart, a poor but true-hearted young street-cleaner, is carried home in her car. While Frank is recuperating, Sir Simon Blackheart, a ferocious villain and a persistent suitor for Flora's hand, calls, and when his love is scorned, seizes Flora in his arms and endeavors to kiss her. Frank hurls himself upon the rascal and throws him out the door, while she exclaims, "My Hero!" but he refuses her hand in marriage, until he has first made his fortune. Sir Simon then sends a dynamite bomb through the mail to the unsuspecting Flora, but Frank is "on the job" and again the villain is foiled. Blackheart carries out a dastardly plan, shortly afterwards, breaks into Flora's hangar, where her trans-Atlantic flier is housed, and steals the aeroplane's engine. On the day of the big race across the ocean, Flora seats herself in her machine and the great ship wabbles up into the air, acting like a dragon fly with a broken wing. Sir Simon enters the grounds, laughing grimly. Flora, meanwhile, now 3,000 feet in the air, sudenly discovers that her engine has been stolen. Frank, watching her through his glasses, realizes the awful truth, and jumping into a balloon, soars upwards to the rescue of Flora. Brave Frank, "steering" his balloon nearly under the falling air machine, grabs the heroine as she passes him and drags her safely into the balloon. Sir Simon witnesses this, and boiling with rage, loads his deadly rifle. With one fatal shot, he bursts the balloon's gas bag, hurling out hero and Flora to earth. (To be continued in our next installment of the "Adventures of Flora Fourflush.")

TWO WOMEN (Broadway Star Features—Three parts).—John Emerson, a clean-cut manly man, worships his beautiful but weak and misguided wife, Cleo, and is blind to her disloyalty, although she gives him every evidence of her aversion. She is carrying on a flirtation with John's employer, Robert Lawler, and Lawler wishing to make his conquest complete, sends her husband out of town on a business deal, and invites her to take an automobile ride. She accepts, and, fascinated by each other's illicit companionship and with their sense dulled by the fumes of too much wine, take no notice of the time. John arrives home early, and not finding his wife, sits down to wait for her. At the sound of an automobile stopping in front of the house he looks out and sees her and Lawler as they return from their ride. When his wife comes in John upraids her for her disloyalty, and on the arrival of Lawler, who comes to return Cleo's purse, which she had left in the automobile, the two men come to blows, Emerson knocking his employer to the floor.

Six months later, John Emerson, now divorced, reads of Cleo's marriage to Lawler and their departure for Europe on their honeymoon. Broken in health and spirits, Emerson leaves for the North Woods, where he finds rest and recreation in hunting and fishing. On one of his many rambles, he meets Anita, known as Anita of the Woodland, and is completely captivated by her exceptional beauty and simplicity. Friendship ripens into love, but before he asks for her hand, he tells the story of his former wife.

In the meantime Cleo and her husband quarrel and Lawler, who has tired of her, becomes enamored of another woman, a married woman whose husband finds them in a compromising situation and kills both. Cleo now a wealthy widow returns to New York, and getting John's address from one of his friends, arrives at his cabin in the woods while he is away. Returning, and for the moment blinded by her beauty, he takes her in his arms. Anita, coming in at the moment when he is about to take Cleo back, he realizes that Anita is the one he really loves, and offers her a home and his protection while Cleo returns to New York a sadder and wiser woman.

BILLY'S WAGER (Jan. 6).—The wealthy Mr. Billy gives a party at his palatial residence. He is in love with the handsome widow, Mrs. Constance, and has a deadly rival, the Count De Meaux. During the evening the latter makes a wager for five thousand dollars with Billy that he could not earn his own living for one month without help. Billy takes the bet and the widow promises to marry him if he wins it. He is not to accept assistance of any kind from friends, nor draw any money from his bank, and he is to start out penniless. The wager is to expire at twelve midnight on Hallowe'en. After announcing his plans to the assembled guests and inviting them all to a big party to take place on Hallowe'en, Billy starts out with a firm endeavor to win his wager and the widow. After some terrifying and discouraging experiences, he is finally reduced to the condition of a hobo in the bread line. He is feeling pretty desperate, when he remembers that it is Hallowe'en, and that he may now return home and claim the wager, also the widow. When he arrives at the house, he finds two policemen guarding the steps, who refuse to let him pass for he is unrecognizable in his beard and disheveled appearance. He then sneaks in a back window, but is seen and arrested by the policemen. At 11:15 he is thrown into a cell. Rendered desperate by the thought of losing his wager and the widow, both within the short time of 45 minutes, he raves and storms until he finally gets the sergeant to telephone the house. The widow finally gets the disreputable "tramp" out of jail and he manages to get cleaned up and in more presentable style, appears among his guests on the stroke of twelve. The Count turns out to be a well-known crook and a fraud, so Billy loses the $5,000, but that doesn't worry him. He claims the widow's hand, and all agree he has fairly won her. The marriage takes place then and there among their friends and well-wishers.

THE MAN, THE MISSION AND THE MAID (Jan. 7).—Living in adjoining homes at Oakdale, Hal Gilman and Alice Blanchard are childhood friends and playmates. Some years later, Hal goes to college, and while there makes a bitter enemy of Bert Peyson, by exposing him as a card cheat and a thief. Hal takes up college extension and settlement work, and makes it his mission in life. Returning to Oakdale, he finds Alice a beautiful young lady of 19, with a love affair. She confesses to Hal she is in love, but does not divulge the young man's name, and as her father strongly disapproves of her sweetheart, she warns him not to come to Oakdale. Hal and Alice become almost like brother and sister, but friendship slowly ripens into love, with the result that she neglects the other man. Hal is called to the city to take up settlement work, and on the eve of his departure, Alice is persuaded by her old love to elope and goes to meet him in the city, on the same train with Hal. On the way, she confesses she is eloping and he gives her some brotherly advice. At the city station, the expectant lover proves to be none other than Bert Peyson. When he takes Alice's arm, Hal grimly steps between them and gives the rascal just two minutes to make himself scarce. With a vivid remembrance of the affair at college, Peyson, without a word, quickly disappears. Hal explains matters to Alice, but she does not seem to feel very badly over the affair and tells him, "I'm done with a man who runs away from another without a word." He prepares to leave the girl at a hotel when two telegrams arrive, addressed to "Mrs. Hal Gilman," insisting in a half-jocular manner, there must be a home wedding! Both Hal and Alice feel embarrassed at finding their parents supposed they had eloped and do not know just what to do until he takes Alice's hands and tells her he knows a minister who sits up nights. With a smile of confidence and love, they both start for the minister's house.

THE SMOKING OUT OF BELLA BUTTS (Jan. 8).—As secretary of the Anti-Smoking Society, Bella Butts proceeds to clean up the town of Hicksville and cure its citizens of the pernicious habit of smoking. The Ladies' Aid Society is won over to the cause, by means of a most amusing practical demonstration of the harmful effects of smoking, and as the Mayor's wife is a member of the Ladies' Aid, that gentleman is unduly influenced to champion the cause. He posts a proclamation throughout town and closes up the one cigar store. All the men have to smoke cornsilk. The Mayor loses his popularity and becomes very irritable because of the sudden stopping of his favorite after-dinner cigar. The rest of the town's citizens who formerly had been inveterate smokers, also became ill-tempered, and make life miserable for their families. The women begin to regret giving in to Miss Butts' strong-mindedness, but it is now too late. Fortunately for all concerned, a cigar salesman shows up in town. He is almost mobbed by the men, who buy his entire stock of smokables and then, led by the Mayor, all cautiously steal off to a vacant woodshed, where they lock the door and proceed to make up for their long abstinence from the weed. Miss Butts and Miss Jones happen by and see a dense volume of smoke pouring from the shed. They conclude it is on fire, and call out the local fire company. Farmer Jones is the only fireman to respond, but after some exciting experiences, he manages to shove the hoze nozzle in the shed window. The stream hits the Mayor full, knocking him over and drenching the others. All rush out and the crowd of women outside cheer the "rescues." The Mayor is so mad he grabs Jones and wrestles him all over the place. Jones hangs onto the hose, however, with the result that all the by-standers are deluged. After the water is turned off, Bella Butts is escorted out of town by the band and told to stay out. The Mayor and the other men smoke up harder than ever and happiness once more reigns supreme.

A DAUGHTER OF ISRAEL (Special—Two parts—Jan. 9).—Ill, and unable to pay her rent, Olga, a Russian refugee, is obliged to go to a hospital and leaves her child in the care of Israel Levi, a well-to-do, kind-hearted Jew, who has lost both wife and daughter. On the way to the hospital, Olga, weak and exhausted, faints in the middle of the street, is run over by an automobile and killed. Israel reads of her death and learns that she has not been identified, the wedding ring she left with Israel being the only clue on hand. Israel, with the help of Mrs. Benjamin, a good-natured widow, brings up the child as his own. Little Olga, now called Rachel, exhibits an extraordinary talent for music and on her fourteenth birthday Israel gives her a present of a fine violin. Rosenstein, a musician friend of Israel's, happens to overhear the girl play and goes into raptures. He interests his friend, Ivan Metroff, the great Russian violinist in Rachel, and realizing the child's really wonderful talent, Ivan consents to give her violin lessons. He is also haunted by something strangely familiar in her face. Later, Ivan's cousin, Loris, after concluding his music studies abroad, joins his uncle in New York. He meets Rachel, now a beautiful young lady, and becomes enamoured of her, but Ivan, who still retains his intolerant bigotry and pride of birth, refuses his consent to the match with "the daughter of Israel." Rachel, heartbroken, appeals to Israel, who tells Metroff that while he cannot tell just who Rachel is, she is not a Jewess and not his daughter. He exhibits the wedding ring left by Rachel's mother with the engraving, "From Ivan to Olga." Metroff recognizes it as the ring given his own wife, and Rachel, as his own daughter. There is a happy reunion and Ivan at once gives his consent to her marriage with Loris, while Israel remains their lifelong friend.

YOUNG MRS. WINTHROP (An adaptation of the noted play of Bronson Howard—Special—Two Parts—Jan. 1).—When a man is wrapped up entirely in his business enterprises and his wife in social affairs, the home is bound to suffer. Such was the case of Douglas Winthrop and his wife. Her brother, Herbert, had been making use of securities left in his possession for his own ventures. The usual result followed; he lost heavily and could not restore them. Enlisting his brother's aid, he pays all debts except one, that of Mrs. Hepworth Dunbar, a woman whom the Winthrops had repeatedly snubbed on account of her reputation, and who is thirsting for revenge. However, Douglas Winthrop makes an appointment with her and induces her to accept his personal check. He wants to keep his visit a secret from his wife, also its motive, but she by chance learns of it, and in a huff, suspecting her husband, instead of remaining home to watch over their sick child, as she had promised her husband she would, she goes to a ball with Buxton Scott, the family lawyer and friend, who tries to persuade her to return home.

That night the child dies and she is summoned to the bedside. She tries to locate her husband at Mrs. Dunbar's, who joyfully tells her that he was there and had left, but does not say what the meeting was about. Upon his return, he learns of the child's death and, realizing that they have both been neglectful of home duties, he tries to comfort his wife, but she turns from him and they decide to separate. Scott, as their lawyer, tries to reconcile them. He recalls their school-day affection and their courtship. Douglas agrees to give his wife half of his possessions. Then Scott plays his trump card by saying sadly, "How can we divide that little grave?" Parental love heals the breach and they resolve to place their different hobbies in a secondary place and the house of Winthrop first in their hearts.

UNCLE CRUSTY (Produced in co-operation with the National Kindergarten Association—Jan. 2).—Edward Van Nest was a wealthy bachelor, who, having been disappointed in love in his younger days, had renounced men, women and children alike, and whose only companions were a valet and a bad disposition. On account of the latter, and his dislike for children, he had earned for himself the appelation of "Uncle Crusty."

Crusty had a brother, William Van Nest, who was a widower with one child, Willie, a boy about four years old. When the war broke out, Willie's father, who was living in Antwerp, decided to send him to America to put him under Crusty's care, and although Crusty's dislike for children was strong, he loved his brother, and therefore made up his mind to put up with Willie, who arrived at his home in due time.

Willie was a lovable little youngster who tried to make friends with every one he met, but Crusty spurned all his advances and reprimanded him severely, so Willie set out to find somebody who would love him. While wandering about the street, he met Miss Burton, a kindergarten teacher, who took him to school with her; and Willie forgot his troubles playing games with a class of happy little tots.

When Crusty discovered Willie's absence, he became conscience-stricken and immediately instituted a search. He began to realize that somewhere in his heart he had a spot that warmed towards his brother's child, and although he blamed everything else for his ill-humor, the butler realized that the crust was breaking rapidly.

Finally, Willie was located in the kindergarten by Crusty. To keep up appearances, he tried to be hard-hearted, but under Miss Burton's charm he soon thawed out, and we find him happy once again, in his second childhood surrounded by a bevy of tots, writing out checks for St. Mary's Free Kindergarten.

THE CHAMPION PROCESS SERVER (Jan. 4).—When Lawyer Ketchum decided to serve a subpoena on Flighty, the brewer, he counted his chickens too early. In fact, his awakening came when his steady process man told him to serve it himself in a warm place. Ah! But here comes our hero, the Champion, to relieve a distressed beauty, Ketchum's client. He proffers his services, and is taken for better or worse.

Brr-t, brr-t, chug, chug, chug, 'tis the Champion's motor chariot, gleefully shrieking "I'll get you yet" as it drives up to Flighty's brewery. There is where our hero has his first brush with the enemy's hired ruff-necks. He finally reaches the sacred precincts of the Imperial Foam Dispenser, where he falls victim to a beautiful blonde siren's wiles, and is gently wafted out by the aforesaid gentleman with the kindly advice that the place is very unhealthy for him to risk his precious existence in. Gallantly, he waves the subpoena aloft, as he repeats the "Charge of the Light Brigade" up an iron-clad fire escape. Through fire and water he emerges with Flighty in one arm, and later on with the distressed beauty, her money saved, in the other. All hail the Champion!

OLIVE AND THE BURGLAR (Seventh of "Olive's Opportunities" Series—Jan. 5).—Olive, after her terrible lesson in the flames, decided not to return to a butterfly life in society, but to remain in the slums and do mission work. We find her aiding the poor unfortunates, and striving to remedy their ills, when Vance Coleman enters. In front of Brute Ballard, the burglar, Vance tries to slip an expensive ring on the third finger of Olive's right hand, but she hands it back and turns to inquire concerning Ballard's wants.

Ballard tells how his wife is a confirmed drunkard and his child is dying for want of attention. Olive agrees to go to Ballard's home, despite Vance's protests, so all three start out. Ballard, having seen the ring, leaves Olive nursing the child and follows Vance. He breaks into Vance's house, and after gagging the butler, escapes with the ring. The alarm is given by Vance and an exciting chase follows.

The brute finally manages to elude the pursuing police and takes refuge in his home, where he hides the ring in a milk bottle. Olive, happening to pour out the milk for the sick child, finds the ring and recognizes it as the one Vance had offered her. The brute, learning that she has found the ring, tries to strangle her, but the death of his child prevents this. Vance enters at this moment, followed by the police.

It looks as if Ballard were cornered, for he pulls out his gun as a last resort. Olive, however, realizing the man's terrible punishment already, puts on the ring which Ballard hands her, and denies the fact that Ballard had stolen it, thus saving the grief-stricken brute from the long arm of the law.

EXPENSIVE ECONOMY (Jan. 6).—Have you ever figured out how much money you spend in a year if you give away ten cent tips each day? $36.50 a year. Well, that is what made Walter Jones a member of the Anti-Tipping Society; no, the president, for nobody wanted the job; also the marked victom of the Something for Nothing Union. A delegate of the terrible Something for Nothing Union is pursuing his victim, the Hon. Jones, who has resolved never to pay another tip. He even refuses to give his wife a kiss, for fear of violating the rule.

Who is that shining Jones' clothes, not his shoes? Hist! It is the disguised desperate delegate. Hark! Are those crys of the wounded on a battlefield in Flanders? No, that is Jonesey trying to escape from a mysterious barber, who is the unrelenting delegate in disguise. Three hours for lunch is a long wait, but Jones is a good waiter. He is a commuter, and the waiters knew it, for they made him wait that long when the death-defying delegate demanded it. His commands are law among all legalized blackmailers.

Phew! It is warm! Is the steam turned on? No, no, it's only tobasco flavor of Mr. Jones' coffee. Like the Sultan, he takes the hint and abdicates, hotly pursued by his oppressor. Like a modern Mazeppa, he hangs between death and disgrace, on the wildest of steeds, a car driven by a fiend incarnate. He misses his train, and then—he gets wise. His return to grace is rapid, and all's well that ends well.

THE MAGNATE OF PARADISE (A dramatic adaptation of the novel by Mary Imlay Taylor—Special—Two Parts—Jan. 8).—Holland refuses Betty's uncle, the magnate of the town of Paradise, to drop a suit against the Traction Company brought by Harriet Hopper. As he passes the hallway, he fails to see Betty, and she, wondering at his distracted behavior, suspects that her uncle has caused it. She overhears Callander bidding Finlaison to do all in his power to down the young attorney. Two months later, Betty reads in the newspaper that Holland has accepted a bribe from the Traction Company. She reproaches Finlaison for this libel and he promises to clear Holland of the accusation if Betty will marry him.

By good fortune, Holland recovers a budget of letters, long mislaid. They will prove Callander's undoing, for they contain receipts for hush money. Holland pities Callander's infirmity of age, but conscience bids him defend Miss Hopper. Betty pleads that he refuses to institute action against Callander, with the result that he hands in his resignation to the Governor. Finlaison continues to molest Betty. He tells her that he has Callander's consent to marry her, and brutally describes how Callander had killed the previous district attorney in order to obtain secret papers, and how he had witnessed the crime, but money tied his tongue. Betty accuses Finlaison of being an accessory to the crime. He retorts by saying that if she refuses to marry him he will expose Callander. Betty demands the truth of Callander. He confesses and orders her to marry Finlaison, or leave his house at once. She chooses the latter alternative, and finds refuge with Miss Hopper.

That night, Holland was to speak in the town hall on the evils of machine rule. In a ward room of the hall, he hears a groggy youth, who had heard of Betty, propose a toast to her. Finlaison, himself fuddled, refuses to drink the toast, declaring that he could have married Betty had it not been for her intimacy with Holland. Holland floors him, but Finlaison wounds him, though not seriously. A mob attempts to lynch Finlaison, but the police spirit him off to a cell. Upon hearing the news, and learning that the Governor knows that he is a murderer, Callander collapses and succumbs to heart failure. Holland recovers his bodily vigor and Betty soon becomes the sharer of his prosperity.

THE GIRL AT THE KEY (One of the phases of the life of "The Girl Who Earns Her Living"—Jan. 9).—Girls were at a premium in Goldville, Ariz., so when Agnes, a telegraph operator, was stationed there, her suitors came from far and wide, but Jim Scanlon, owner of Scanlon's Hotel, held the highest hand as far as she was concerned. Nevertheless, Agnes felt that she did not care enough for him to give up her vacation. However, when Jim saved her from the onrushing wheels of an incoming train she began to look more favorably on his proposal of marriage.

Three bandits plan to rob the night express of eighty thousand dollars in gold which it is to carry on a certain date. They put up at Scanlon's Hotel and start from there to carry out their plan. By chance, one of the bandits happens to wear Jim's hat, which he took for his own, and in so doing he implicated poor Jim, for when Agnes learned that the wires were cut, and finding Jim's hat at the foot of the telegraph pole, she concluded that he was one of the gang. Jim happened to walk into the office at the time, and was greatly surprised to have Agnes accuse him of being in the plot that she felt was about to develop.

Leaving Jim amazed, Agnes started out to prevent the plan of Jim's gang, as she thought. Jumping on to a hand car, she dashed down the track. Seeing the bandits ahead of her, she left the car and disappeared in the undergrowth along the tracks, where, by a circuitous route, she avoided the outlaws, and arrived in time to warn the train crew of their danger. While the passengers were getting up a purse for this heroine of the Key, a posse, led by Jim Scanlon, rode up with the three outlaws. Agnes, learning that Jim was innocent, made full reparation for her accusations.

LUBIN.

PATSY BOLIVAR SERIES NO. 2 ("Patsy's First Love"—Jan. 4).—Patsy's love for his schoolmistress, Mary, receives a sudden shock in the announcement that her marriage to Jack Prince is to occur within a few days. He resolves to sever himself from a life that could not be happy without Mary. A bottle of rheumatic liniment is the only medium at hand with which to achieve the desired result, and as he is placing the bottle to his lips he is interrupted by sister, Kitty, who seizes his arm and cries for the family to come. The only sympathy he receives from his irate father is the usual command to perform his ordinary routine of chores before going to school.

On her way to school with Mary, Kitty reveals to Sykesy and the faithful little Jane, her brother's hopeless love, and this furnishes Patsy's evil genius with new material. On arrival at school, Sykesy writes a love poem expressing Patsy's wild passion for his schoolmistress, and as usual, the innocent victim of circumstances is punished. The school board orders a half holiday in honor of Mary's approaching marriage. In search of relief from his heart pain, Patsy consents to umpire a base ball game, and is nearly torn to pieces by the irate players.

Meanwhile, Mary's friends are fitting up and providing Mary's new home and Patsy climbs a tree where he can witness, unobserved, these proceedings and weep over them. He falls, owing to a breaking limb, and dislocates his arm. This, he is compelled to wear in a sling at Mary's wedding and his discomfiture is added to, when he falls headlong into the aisle, tripped up by the watchful Sykesy, and his father, believing that is the result of his own stupidity, sends him home. Patsy's accident and his mother's pleas cause father to consent to providing Patsy with his first pair of long trousers, and his first thought on securing them is to show them to Tilly, who, in spite of Sykesy's attachment, he has decided to bestow what is left of his shattered heart. He hurries to Tilly, who is at the Sykesy home, and taking her to a quiet corner of the garden and while he is asking her to try and mend his broken heart, the jealous Sykesy ruins his new suit of clothes by throwing a bucket of bran mash over them, and he is compelled to go to school in his old ones. Devising a revenge on Sykesy, he goes to a drug store and purchases a bottle of nitric acid. While seated behind his enemy, he pours it down his back. For this he is sentenced to the ignominy to being held on a boy's back, and beaten by no less a person that Sykesy himself. Kept in after the first recess, he goes to the blackboard and writes the words: "I sure am the human boomerang," and bursts into tears. Mary comes to comfort him and as he throws himself weeping into her arms, he is interrupted by Jack, and thus are sown the seeds of a causeless jealousy.

THE NEW EDITOR (Jan. 5).—Wellington Jones, editor of The Gazette, has trouble collecting from advertisers and starts a little roasting process. He gets his scheme in good working order and then sells out to Horace Gink, who has literary aspirations. Colonel Gore, a politician; Luke McGuke, a middle weight fighter, and Josephine Boggs, a boarding house keeper, do not approve of the roasting process, and they take turns mopping up the place with the new editor, the victim of their revenge. Luke McGuke gets into a street fight. The officer puts handcuffs on him but he breaks away and runs into the editor's office for safety. Gink, seeing the bully's helpless condition, proceeds to walk all over him and when the officer arrives he finds Luke very limp and harmless. The report is circulated that the new editor has conquered the notorious bully and the delinquents hustle into the office to settle their debts. The bully gets out on bail and also settles his bill, leaving the new editor in dumb surprise at his sudden prosperity.

THEY LOOKED ALIKE (Jan. 5).—Bill and Sam are two tramps and they look so much alike that they fool the Riverside cops completely. Rube, the champion sprinter of the force, is coaxed to chase Bill and not knowing that there are two, keeps after his victim while the tramps work relays and run him off his feet. This rouses the ire of his brother officers and they start out to avenge him. They run across Sam foraging and give chase. Sam runs to the shack where he left Bill and is relieved. They might have been running yet had not the owner of the shack locked the door. This enables the cops to capture Sam, and Bill is discovered in the shed. The owner of the place lends them a light wagon and the two tramps are forced to play horse and drag the weary policemen back to the station house, where they are made to run the gauntlet into the cells, to the delight of Rube.

But Ned, who is a care-free boy, has set his heart upon marrying Kitty, of the shipping department in his father's factory. When Hicks learns of this he discharges Kitty and buys an engagement ring which he gives to Ned, with instructions to go and propose immediately to Alice.

Alive lives with her father on a large suburban estate, quite a distance from Ned's city. Hicks hopes to kill two birds with one stone by having Ned secure from Trent a half-million dollar order for face-powder at the same time that he asks for the hand of Trent's daughter. Ned sets out by auto for the Trent mansion, But first he has persuaded Kitty to come along with him, it being their intention to elope and marry at the home of the first minister along the way. By nightfall, they find themselves lost in an immense wooded district, and still unmarried. They stumble upon the home of a jolly old Confederate soldier, Colonel Martin, who receives them and offers the hospitality of his house for the night. Ned explains his plight to the Colonel and, learning that the Colonel is about to be evicted for non-payment of rent, urges him to go along with him and Kitty as their escort and chaperon.

The Colonel consents and next morning the trio motor forth to the Trent mansion. They are followed by Alex Sweet, the petted, effeminate son of a rival face-powder manufacturer, who is also motoring to Trent's home in the hope of securing the immense order. Ned's party, as well as Alex's, put up at a tavern. Ned tells the Colonel that he must get to Trent's home ahead of Alex. Ned's auto is broken down and he is in a quandary. The Colonel solves matters by introducing himself, as a friend, to Alex, inviting him into a mint-julep drinking contest, and leaving him much the worse for liquor. Thus Ned, the Colonel and Kitty reach Trent's mansion unimpeded.

A ball is under way there. The affair is assuming a droopy, blase atmosphere and Trent's socially ambitious wife wishes for some incident to thrill her fastidious guests. Ned arrives and solves Mrs. Trent's problem by a daring bit of tragedy. He introduces Colonel Martin as a Count, Kitty as a Countess, and suggests that, as a society novelty, Kitty, as the Countess, distributes samples of face powder to the guests. The novelty is such a huge success that Ned has no trouble in securing his order from the grateful Trent. Ned signs the contract just as the frantic Alex rushes into the room. Alex faints when he hears Ned has triumphed. Instead of proposing to Alice, Ned tells her of his intention to marry Kitty. He has promised his father to be home by a certain hour. Desperately pinched for time, Ned and Kitty are compelled to be married on a rapidly moving hand car which they have utilized in order to reach the nearest station. Arriving home at the appointed time, Ned confesses to his enraged Dad that he has just been married to Kitty. But Hicks' rage is appeased when he learns that Ned has been successful in obtaining the coveted order. His good humor is rendered complete when he discovers that Colonel Martin is an old war comrade of his younger days.

A WAR BABY (Special—Two parts—Jan. 7).—At the opening of the Civil War duty calls Captain Willis, of the Northern army, from his bride, Louise, daughter of the Confederate officer, Col. Frear. At the same time Belle Darring, a zealous Confederate, breaks her engagement with Lieutenant Fiske, of the Union troops, though he vows to regain her love at the close of the war. After the passage of a year, Belle Darring has become a Confederate spy, whose exploits are the scourge of the Northern forces. Captain Willis is assigned to a certain outpost, and is given the special commission of capturing Belle. His duties are so exacting that he has been unable to return home to see his wife and the little daughter who has been born to him.

Belle falls into the hands of her lover, Lieutenant Fiske, but is beguiled into letting her go. Louise Willis determines to visit her husband with the baby, and writes him to meet her at Simpson's Corners. He is unable to obtain leave, but goes to the meeting under cover of night. He is delayed by the presence of Confederates, and reaches the Corners only to find that Louise has passed through in company with another woman, who, he rightly guesses is Belle Darring, the spy. Louise has secured a pass through the Union lines, and depends upon her friendship with the Southern officers to obtain her passage through the Confederates. She and Belle are captured by Union soldiers, and Belle persuades her to take a paper which she carries and give the pass in exchange, since, as the wife of a Northern officer, she would easily escape search. Their captor, however, is the one Union officer who does not know Captain Willis, and is detained while Belle escapes with the baby. When searched Belle's paper is found on Louise, and she is taken for the Confederate spy.

Returning from the meeting place, Willis is placed under arrest, accused of abandoning his post and of permitting Belle Darring to pass through. Louise and her husband are both sentenced to be shot. Belle, suffering a change of heart, uses Louise's pass to reach the Union general, and pleads for clemency for Louise if not for Willis. When the general refuses, Belle promises to deliver to him the famous woman spy if he will delay the execution until it can be referred to the authorities at Washington. The general agrees, and at the place of execution, Louise, Willis and the baby are united. Then Belle turns to General Slogan with: "I am Belle Darring, General, and your prisoner."

LOVE'S SAVAGE HATE (Jan. 8).—Andrea Moreno, a wealthy, high-class Mexican, together with his wife and daughter, Anita, persist in occupying their hacienda despite the fact that there is danger from raids of brigands operating under the guise of revolutionists. Anita has two lovers—one, Gabriel Romero, from the great city some miles away; the other, Jose Fulano, who owns a small mine in the foothills. One day both of Anita's lovers arrive at the hacienda at the same time. The girl has not made up her mind which one she will accept. Both show jealousy.

At the juncture, Miguel Parodis, at the head of his bandits, descends on the hacienda. There was no means of defense, so, at the suggestion of Jose, father, mother and daughter, together with Gabriel, retreat to Jose's cabin in the mountains, where there are rifles and a position easy of defense. The rebels besiege the cabin, the defenders returning their fire through port holes in the door. Wrought up to a high pitch of excitement and anxiety during the battle, Anita finds that it is Gabriel she loves and she throws herself into his arms and Jose is beside himself with jealousy. For five days the rebels besiege the cabin. The food gone, the defenders decide to cast lots among the men to select one to go for aid. It falls to Gabriel to go. Jose, from a window at the rear, sees a party of bandits prowling in the ravine, but none of the others see them.

A plan to get rid of his rival occurs to him and he tells Gabriel that there is a safe means of escape through the ravine. Gabriel, unsuspecting, follows his advice, and is captured before he has proceeded a quarter of a mile. From the window, Anita, watching, sees him fall into the hands of the bandits. Impulsively she follows, as they march their prisoner to the camp. Concealed in a thicket, Anita sees Gabriel taken before Parodis and the band and condemned to be executed. When he is tied to a tree she makes her way to him unseen and cuts his bonds. Before the firing squad can make ready, Gabriel vanishes into the thick background of shrubbery. The rebels pursue the girl and her lover. The fugitives climb the steep bluff behind Fulano's mine, first stopping to seize a box of dynamite at the mine entrance. When the rebels reach the foot of the cliff and prepare to follow, Gabriel hurls the box among them. The impact of the falling box explodes the dynamite and the band is wiped out. Gabriel and Anita return to Jose's cabin and are greeted by the girl's parents, but Jose, realizing that his treachery is discovered and that the girl can never be his, takes his own life.

FEEL MY MUSCLE (Jan. 9).—Will Denver and his wife, Mary, fail as a vaudeville turn in which he does acrobatic work and she "assists" Desperate, he takes his wife's clothes and wig and applies for an advertised job as lady physical instructor of a woman's gym. He makes an instant hit and nobody suspects. One of the girls, Jane, has a sweetheart, Harry, who immediately falls in love with the new instructor and a quarrel between them follows. Jane scorns Harry now, and he turns to the physical instructor in his new infatuation. Will is horrified but has to go on playing his part.

Nights, to get a little manly freedom, he dons men's clothes and a mustache and walks out. On one occasion he finds Harry trying to make up with Jane and she tells him he is insulting her. Seeing a chance to square matters he offers his services. They do not recognize him and when Harry gets peevish at the intrusion, Will knocks him down and escorts Jane away. Jane becomes infatuated with her rescuer, and Will finds himself sought after both as a man and a woman. In the midst of the tangle he gets a telegram from his wife that she is coming on.

That night, as himself, but with mustache, he goes to meet her. He meets Jane and has to escort her home, pleading further attention impossible that evening because of a date. He rushes to the station and finds his wife and children waiting and anxious. As they start back to his rooms he tells his wife of his many troubles and she laughs over them. On the corner he gives her the key so that she can go ahead and he will climb through the window.

Unfortunately, Harry sees him climbing through the window and at once is angry. His first thought is to follow and thrash the man, but on second thoughts, as the man is now Jane's escort, he will bring her along and have a double triumph. Jane won't believe his story, but finally agrees to go with him. They arrive at Will's place and enter the hallway. Through a keyhole Will sees them and frantically hides his wife and kids in the bedroom. Will tells them there is none. In trying to get past Will to the bedroom, Harry knocks off Will's wig. Consternation and explanations follow. Harry gets back his sweetheart and Will is saved by a new job.

SWEEDIE AND THE SULTAN'S PRESENT (Jan. 4).—Sweedie while reading a book in the kitchen, falls asleep. She dreams that Kao Yama, Sultan of Puff Puff, has sent her a present in the form of a servant. She refuses to accept the slave, telling the Sultan's messengers that her husband would seriously object to having him around the house. She is then told that those who refuse a present from the Sultan will be put to death. She prepares to defy the Sultan, when her husband, Swipes, comes in. He demands to know who these strange men are. Sweedie tells him and he becomes enraged at the nerve of the Sultan. They start to eject the intruders, and Sweedie awakes just as she is about to kill the messenger with a butcher knife. She finds her husband on his knees begging her to be merciful. She was about to slay him.

THE GALLANTRY OF JIMMY ROGERS (Jan. 5).—Jimmy Rogers is among the guests at a house party. The first evening at the dinner table he notices that Sara Sanderson seems to shrink away from the steady gaze of Ralph Morrison. Later Jimmy questions her and is told that Ralph holds some indiscreet letters which she had written to him the previous summer, and is threatening to show them to her fiance. The ever chivalrous Jimmy promises to get them. He takes his friend Livingstone into his confidence and that night they gain entrance to Morrison's room through the window. They are caught and brought into the library, where they are accused of theft. Jimmy managed to get the letters before being discovered, and carefully slips them to Sara. He then confesses to shield her. Suddenly they all burst into hearty laughter, and Jimmy is told that it was all a joke put up on him by Livingstone.

THE FABLE OF THE CITY GRAFTER AND THE UNPROTECTED RUBES (Written by George Ade) (Jan. 6).—"Sure-thing" Steve and his pals searched the map for prospective country towns in which they could bunco the inhabitants. They decided the town of Simpville would fall for a fake auction sale. The rubes figured that they were wealthy city chaps so soaked them double for everything. The regular rates at the hotel were 50 cents a day. To the city guys it was $2.50 per. They rented a $30-a-month store room for $100. Business started with a flourish. They were just getting things going right when in came the Village Justice and pinched them for operating without a license. They had a trial by jury and the fine was just $50 and costs. The leading citizens deposited money in the local bank next day, while the grafters beat it back to the city.

Moral: The Shake-down was invented in a small town.

THE BATTLE OF SNAKEVILLE (Jan. 7).—The proprietor of the O. K. hotel is advertising for a "lady" cook. Meanwhile, a Chinaman is stealing all his trade. Sophie arrives in Snakeville and applies for the position. The proprietor engages her without a moment's hesitation. At supper time he sends her over to the Chinaman's. The result is just as he wished it, all the men follow Sophie back to the O. K. At the supper table Slim and Mustang quarrel over Sophie and are thrown out. Slim finds a barrel of potatoes in front of the grocery store, while Mustang locates a box of tomatoes. The battle is then on. The sheriff finally comes upon the scene, followed by the entire male populace of Snakeville. Slim and Mustang join forces and attack them with tomatoes and potatoes. The sheriff orders out the fire hose and the two battlers are forced to surrender.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE CLAIM JUMPERS (Reg. in the U. S. Patent Office) (Jan. 9).—Broncho Billy, a prospector, makes a rich strike, but while he is examining the rock he is being watched by three claim jumpers. The minute he leaves the spot the jumpers gather up some samples of the ore, and after replacing Broncho's sign with one of their own, start for the claim agent's office. Here they learn that he will not be there until Saturday. Meanwhile, Broncho has written a note to his sweetheart asking her to accompany her father, the stage coach driver, on Saturday. She does so and they pick up Broncho at his cabin. There is a certain saloon at which the driver always stops, and the jumpers induce the bartender to dope his whiskey in order to delay Broncho. Their plan fails as his daughter graps the reins and while she drives, Broncho holds off the jumpers with his gun. The claim jumpers soon give up the race and Broncho files his claim first.

SURGEON WARREN'S WARD (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 8).—Army Surgeon Warren has been made guardian of Alice Barth at her father's death. He falls in love with her. He has a rival for her hand in Captain Gordon. She loves Warren, however, and when Gordon proposes she refuses him. Warren's betrothal to his ward is announced at a ball given in their honor. Gordon, to get revenge, persuades a girl of the underworld to go to the ball with him, where she claims that the surgeon is betrothed to her. He denies it, but the girl sticks to her story and Warren is courtmartialed and expelled from the army service. He goes to a lumber camp in the northwest.

The sweetheart of the girl of the underworld grows jealous of Gordon's attentions to her. He forces her to go to the army officers and confess she had been bribed by Captain Gordon to pretend that she was the fiancee of Warren. A messenger is sent to find him and tell him that he is reinstated. Gordon goes to Alice Barth and persuades her to marry him and go on their honeymoon at once. She reluctantly consents, not knowing that Gordon is in reality fleeing because of the accusation against him. They wander from place to place, Gordon trying to escape detection, until they arrive at the forests where Warren is working.

The captain is penniless. In desperation he steals from the lumber camp. He is caught by Warren, who saves him from the wrath of the lumber jacks. Gordon tells Warren that Miss Barth is dead. Then the messenger arrives, telling of Gordon's perfidy. Warren goes in search of Gordon and finds him in a little shack with Alice Barth, who is ill. The captain sees that he must face trial as a deserter and ends his life. The girl had never really ceased to love the surgeon and gladly goes back to the fort with him.

CAST UP BY THE SEA (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 4).—Meeting Ruth Adams, daughter of a millionaire, on an ocean liner, Lockwood, a professional gambler, falls in love with her. He finds a rival in Count Dupont, a fortune hunter. The latter informs Ruth and her father as to Lockwood's profession. When the gambler calls upon Ruth at her home, he is requested to leave. Ruth and Dupont are married. A few days after the wedding, the girl's father is ruined. Lockwood chances to see Dupont when the news is broken to the nobleman. The man's attitude causes the gambler to fear for Ruth's safety. When the Duponts sail for abroad, Lockwood follows.

A collision sends the liner to the bottom, Ruth, her husband and the gambler being the sole survivors. The three are washed ashore on an island. In the months which follow, Ruth comes to find Lockwood gentle and courageous. Dupont, on the other hand, is a monument of selfishness. Lockwood constructs a raft just big enough to carry two. Weary of her husband's brutality, Ruth consents to leave the island with the gambler. Dupont, attempting to board the raft, is knocked unconscious.

As Lockwood paddles out to sea, a bundle falls from Ruth's hands and opens. A tiny garment made by Ruth during her stay on the island informs the gambler that it is Dupont who should have the chance of being rescued with Ruth. The man paddles back to shore. The realization of his own unworthiness is forced upon Dupont for the first time, when he learns Lockwood's reason for returning. He vows to turn over a new leaf. Heartbroken, the gambler watches the tiny craft until it disappears from view.

THE WAITRESS AND THE BOOBS (Jan. 5).—Although business is bad for Hicks, a patent medicine fakir, the voice of his partner, Della, makes it worse. Every time she tries to sing, the crowd runs for shelter. The two are growing mighty hungry, when Hicks learns that the Greasy Vest Restaurant is in need of a waitress.

At Hick's suggestion, Della disguises herself as a Dutch maid and lands the job. Her false blond locks and smile captivate the heart of every one of the Greasy Vest's patrons. Even Butts, the proprietor, shows a desire for the first time in his long and checkered career to travel in double harness.

One by one, Della promises to wed Alkali Pete, Dutchie, Blondie, Curlie and Butts. She makes them first promise to present her with a diamond ring. Since Hicks owns the only diamond ring in town, Pete purchases it and presents it to Della. Della promptly passes it back to Hicks, who sells it to each of the suitors in turn.

On the day set for the weddings, the suitors dress in their Sunday best and set out for the church. Each is astounded to find the others waiting at the church for the same girl. Then comes the discovery of how they have been hoodwinked. With one accord the swains rush to the railroad station. Their worst wears are confirmed. On the platform of the outgoing train the men see Della and Hicks cheerfully waving good-bye.

PUT ME OFF AT WAYVILLE (Jan. 8).—While Billy is on his way to Wayville where he is to marry Betty Burton, the girl he has not seen in ten years, Jasper, an escaped convict, boards the train. The fugitive compels Billy to exchange clothes with him, after which he throws the boy off the car. Billy, a hard sleeper, had instructed the Pulman porter to put him off the train at Wayville at all hazards. Mistaking the number of the berth, the porter reaches into the wrong berth. Rousing Sammy Green, a newlywed, the man throws him off the train in spite of his struggles and protests.

A letter in his victim's clothes reveals Billy's

Romance to Jasper. Learning that Billy is to receive $5,000 as a wedding gift, the fugitive impersonates him. Billy, in the meantime, is captured by the sheriff and his posse. The timely arrival of Sammy Green, barefoot and clad in pajamas, saves Billy from spending the night in the calaboose. Jasper is warmly welcomed by Betty and her father. The latter, in his enthusiasm, presents the impostor with the money. Later that night, Jasper endeavors to escape from the house, but gets into a mixup with the Burton bulldog.

Billy has induced the sheriff to accompany him to Betty's home. They arrive in time to save Jasper from the dog's teeth. Betty and her father, attracted by the noise, arrive just as the convict is handcuffed. And while Billy explains the mistake to Betty, Sammy appropriating a handcar, pumps it down the track towards the next station where he has wired his bride to wait for him.

THE LEAP FROM THE WATER TOWER (Ninth of the "Hazards of Helen Railroad" Series—Jan. 9).—His dismissal brought about by Wadsworth, engineer of the Through Freight, Rand, a fireman, plans to cause the man's death. The freight is about to make the steep descent between the summit of Pine Hill and Lone Point, on the following day, when Rand renders the airbrakes useless by closing an angle valve between two cars. The scoundrel attempts to escape on a passenger train. He meets with retribution when he falls from the car and is mortally injured. Hanson, a lineman, who goes to his assistance, learns Rand's story.

Hanson immediately wires to Lone Point, where Helen is stationed. Meanwhile, Wadsworth, frantically endeavors to ascertain why the airbrakes refuse to work. Helen, realizing the peril which menaces the runaway, dashes to a water tower under which the freight must pass. Climbing out on the spout the brave girl waits until the freight is directly below. Then, although the slighest slip means death, she leaps down to the top of one of the cars.

Although badly bruised, Helen hastens forward and reveals the source of the trouble to Wadsworth. The valve is turned on and the runaway halted. Helen's heroism wins her another proffer of marriage, but she informs Wadsworth she does not love him.

BIOGRAPH.

THE HOUSE OF SILENCE (Dec. 28).—Unreasoning jealousy of his wife's former suitor causes the husband to hate her so that they never speak. Her baby is born dumb, and, realizing the terrible truth, the man turns her out of the house. "It is your fault!" he cries. At a state institution she learns how to care for children afflicted like hers. The doctor, her former suitor, gives hope that the child may speak. In a scene of great power their reconciliation is effected through their child.

THE CRIMSON MOTH (Special—Two Parts—Dec. 29).—Doctor Robert Huntington breaks his engagement with Ann Morton, a nurse at the hospital, when he learns that the ill health of his cousin, Jeffrey, may bring him into possession of the Huntington estates. Ann nurses Jeffrey at the hospital and later marries him, though confessing that she loves another. Too late, Robert regrets having given up the girl and tries to win her back. She repulses him. Doubly jealous now of his cousin, Robert schemes to put him out of the way. Ann's discovery of an old volume, "The Crimson Moth of the Huntingtons," suggests a grim expedient. "Whenever the Crimson Moth appears to a Huntington he is doomed," the tradition declares. Robert sees to it that a Crimson Moth appears to Jeffrey just when, having discovered Ann's past relations with his cousin, the last of the Huntingtons is in a frame of mind calculated to receive the full shock of superstition. But the treacherous ivy up which Robert has climbed hurls him down to death, and the curse is lifted.

TWO STRAY SOULS (Dec. 31).—His prison record hung over him. Even the happiness of wedded life never quite banished the specter. And while he dreaded the chance that might reveal his past to his wife, she, in her turn, feared lest somehow he might learn of her confinement in the reformatory. Then, on the threshold of his home, an ex-convict recognized him and demanded money as the price of silence, and he would have consented to blackmail, had not fate ordained that his wife found courage to tell him of her past, and so make it easy for him to disclose the secret that was eating out his heart.

DIOGENES WEEKLY NO. 4-11-44 (Jan. 1).—Another of those mirth provoking skits on news pictorial.

THE EFFICIENCY SQUAD (Jan. 1).—The chief, a stickler for efficiency in the force, is walking with his sweetheart when he provokes the wrath of the gunmen by taking a loaf of bread from their basket as they set out on a picnic. The gunmen vow revenge and, catching the chief unawares, duck him in a water butt. His sweetheart sees the outrage and hurries off to bring up the efficiency squad. Meanwhile, at the picnic, a very fat gunman finds himself without a lady, and the others volunteer to go and "grab off a dame." It is the chief's sweetheart, hurrying to bring up the squad, whom they seek to grab off, and after an exciting chase they are captured and given just such a ducking as they had given the chief.

ALL FOR THE BOY (Jan. 2).—To save his son from a mesalliance and enable him to marry the right girl, a broker first tries to buy off the other woman, and then, when she refuses financial settlement, lures her to a hunting lodge, where he locks her in so that she shall not carry out her threat to make a scene at the wedding. She vows vengeance and, with the aid of a financial powef who wishes her favor, finally ruins the broker. But when she exults over him he is borne up by the thought that he has saved his boy.

ALIAS GREASED LIGHTNING (Jan. 7).—Luck has been dead against poor Verace, who finally gets so down and out that he is ordered to leave his poverty-stricken "furnished" room. The landlord is just in the act of evicting him when a message arrives informing Verace that, by the will of his uncle, he has inherited an enormous fortune. Verace writes to his buxom sweetheart, and after he has togged out in the finest raiment meets her at the ferry.

A placard has been posted at the ferry slip offering $500 reward for the capture of "Alias Greased Lightning," a desperate crook. Verace is mistaken by the police for the fugitive, but is rescued by his husky partner and the two flee from their would-be captors. The chase which follows is a riot of thrills and laughs. Numberless unheard-of comical and ludicrous situations are developed, and the story reaches its climax with the explosion of a powder mill, the frustration of the cops and the escape of the much-abused lovers.

NESTOR.

FOR THE GOOD OF THE CAUSE (Jan. 5).—The Newleyweds take up their home in their bungalow Newleywed is dumfounded, however, when wifie receives a letter from her mother announcing her coming. Newleywed receives another blow when he learns that wifie's mother is a celebrated suffragette, Capt. Rosie James.

Wifie's mother arrives and immediately announces a series of receptions at the home of the Newleyweds. Accommodations being rather limited at the Newleyweds home, Newleywed himself is forced to take to the bath tub to sleep, while wifie and mother-in-law occupy the only bed in the house. Mr. Newleywed tries to break up one of the suffragette receptions by the use of the lawn hose, but meets with miserable failure.

For some time he is in a quandary, but finally hits upon a brilliant plan. He brings flowers and bon-bons for the mother and endeavors to overcome her great dislike for him. She is delighted and the attentions are gladly received. However, when he brings theater tickets for two instead of taking wifie, he takes mother-in-law. After the theater it is a bird and a bottle and they are all in when they finally arrive home. The result of it all is that next morning wifie gets her mother's traveling bag from the bedroom and rather forcibly escorts her to the taxicab outside. Newleywed is delighted with the success of his plan and is convulsed with laughter.

WHEN HIS LORDSHIP PROPOSES (Jan. 8).—Billie is in love with Jack, a clerk in her father's office, but father is not pleased with the idea of it, as he has a match for his daughter in the person of His Lordship. His Lordship's proposal is forced upon her and preparations are made for the wedding. Billie appeals to her girl friend, Constance, and they together with Jack frame up a plan. Billie invites His Lordship to meet them and he accepts, being in love with Billie.

At the little party, the friends so work it that His Lordship and Constance are much taken with each other, and Constance plays her part ardently. He is in a quandary as to which girl he loves the best, but finally decides it is Billie.

The day of the wedding arrives and the guests are assembled. Billie is dressing in her room, when by a previous appointment Jack drives up in his car and she escapes with him.

Father sees the escape of Billie and Jack in the car and he, His Lordship and Constance rush out in pursuit. A lively chase follows. Jack is forced to stop his car at a point where the road is being repaired and father's car catches up. Constance and His Lordship have meanwhile been making ardent love in father's car and by the time they reach the point where Jack is forced to stop His Lordship has lost his heart and head for Constance.

He announces his decision to Billie's father, who is much put out by the change in things. Rather than disappoint the guests he gives his consent to her marrying Jack. Accordingly they return home, and it is arranged that Jack and Billie are married first. His Lordship takes his place in turn, with Constance, but at the last moment she announces she has changed her mind and is going to become a Red Cross nurse, which causes His Lordship to faint dead away.

BISON.

CUSTER'S LAST SCOUT (Two Parts—Jan. 9).—The action of "Custer's Last Scout" takes place in 1876 when our Indian wards took it into their hands to exterminate the white soldiers. General Geo. A. Custer is in command at Fort Lincoln. With him as chief scout is Alfred L. Chapman. Others in his command are Major Reno, Capt. Bates, Lieut. Woodruff and Lieut. Kane.

Marjorie Woodruff, sister to Lieut. Woodruff, is the belle of the post. Every officer is in love with her, but Captain Bates and Chapman are recognized rivals. Marjorie's brother has a decided objection to Chapman's suit, and does not hesitate to acquaint Marjorie with the fact. She, however, possesses a will of her own. Chapman proposes to Marjorie, who tells him that she will give him an answer on the morrow. Chapman leaves her, meets the young lieutenant, and the two are kept from coming to blows only by the intervention of brother officers.

Bates then proposes to Marjorie, and is accepted. Whereupon Marjorie writes a note to Chapman, telling him of the fact, and sends the article to Chapman by a passing trooper. Lieut. Woodruff sees the action, holds up the trooper and forces the latter to give up the note. That afternoon Chapman is sent to observe the movements of Chief Rain-in-the-Face, while Lieut. Woodruff and Kane, accompanied by two troopers, one of whom figured in the note incident, set out to hunt antelope. The little party is ambushed, and the two officers and one trooper are killed. The survivor is the trooper from whom Woodruff took Marjorie's note. The trooper falls in with another band of Indians who fire upon him. He rolls down a steep embankment and under a growth of bush. Later, he crawls from his concealment and heads for the fort.

Custer sends Captain Bates to Fort Rice. En route, Bates and his small escort discover the bodies of the murdered officers. Bates also picks up the note written by Marjorie and dropped by the Indians when they rifled the bodies of their victims. Bates returns to the fort, where he accuses Scout Chapman of having murdered Woodruff, producing the note to prove the accusation. Custer is forced to order the scout arrested. As Chapman is led away, another scout enters with the half-dead trooper, who, seeing the predicament of Chapman, confesses to them that his superior officer had forced him to give up the note. Chapman is freed and the incident closes.

Reynolds, the second scout, informs Custer that Rain-in-the-Face is in possession of Lieut. Woodruff's gold watch. Custer decides to arrest the Chief, and sends Bates, Chapman and Tom Custer to Standing Rock Agency. Here the soldiers, after a struggle, succeed in arresting the Chief, and return with him to Fort Lincoln.

The Chief's followers, enraged at his arrest, immediately bring warfare against the white settlers. Washington hears of this, and Custer receives orders to pacify the redmen. To this end he takes with him the seventh cavalry and starts after the Indians. Chapman is sent ahead, but is unfortunate enough to fall into the hands of the Indians, who submit him to the usual tests for cowardice. After an interval, Chapman escapes his captors and heads back to rejoin his command.

Underestimating the force of the Indians, Custer splits his command, sending Captain Bates and a troop up the Little Big Horn. Custer and his troops go down the river, leaving Reno and his men at a fixed post. The plans of attack call for a simultaneous movement from three sides. Reno, however, is drawn into an ambush and loses nearly half of his command. Bates is cut off, and Custer, unaware of these events, advances upon the Indians. His attack proves a failure, for the Indians are massed thousands strong, and he is compelled to fight a hand to hand conflict.

Scout Chapman, hearing the firing, hastens forward, but he, too, is cut off. Hoping to circle the Indians, Chapman climbs to the top of a small hill. Here he views the terrible spectacle of Custer's massacre, unable either to advance or retreat. Later he is able to leave his position, and picking up the disabled Reno command, tells them of the fate of Custer.

Finding Captain Bates sorely wounded, Scout Chapman picks him up and brings him back to the fort. Marjorie weeps as she thanks the faithful scout for bringing back her accepted suitor while Chapman grins and rides away to live down his own disappointment.

THREE TIMES AND OUT (Jan. 4).—Ned has just married Arline and they love each other and are very happy. At breakfast he receives a letter in the mail from his old chum, Jack, in which the latter says he will arrive in town that day and will make a visit at the office. Arline says she will be glad to meet him. Ned arrives at his office and meets Jack, who has just arrived in town. He leaves his grips at Ned's office and strolls around the town in order to see the sights. On the streets he flirts with Ned's wife, not knowing who she is and she has him arrested, not knowing that he is the friend her husband expects. Jack is thrown in a station house cell and telephones for Ned to bail him out. This is done and they go to Ned's house for dinner. Ned is called back to the office and excuses himself and goes, leaving Jack in the library.

The wife returns and seeing Jack she thinks he has followed her there and gets a policeman and the unfortunate Jack is again dragged to a cell in the same station house. He again telephones for Ned, his friend, to bail him out; the other does so and gives him the key to his office, telling him that he should go there and wait until he can consummate a business deal.

Jack goes to the office and waits. Meanwhile the wife has decided to go to the office and tell her husband all the trouble she had with the awful flirt. She arrives there and seeing Jack she almost faints and the janitor rushes in and wrestles with Jack and they fight until a policeman arrives and drags Jack off to the same police station, where he is thrown into a cell. The desk officer tells him he must have a habit. The husband returns to his office and is again telephoned for and bails Jack out. Outside the station house the husband is roaring with laughter as he asks Jack to come home for supper and to meet his wife. Jack boils over and slamming the husband to the ground he leaves. On the next street a pretty girl tries to flirt with him but he almost collapses and with a wild shriek runs from her and boards a passing trolley and is seen no more.

SHE WAS HIS MOTHER (Three Parts—Jan. 8).—Violet is an unsophisticated young girl. Although a day dreamer and romantic to a degree, the young men of the village, adored by the rustic girls, do not appeal to her. She declares her husband must be a man of affairs, one of might, a man that she can look up to. Such a man comes into her life and loves and rides away. She tries for a long time to find him but in vain. After his departure a child is born to her and she is thrust into the world by her parents. She fights life's hard battle as best she can. Time passes. Violet loves her little boy and sings to him. She plays old time melodies upon her violin while he coos and kicks his tiny feet.

Meanwhile the man prospers. Violet ceases to think of the past—or of the future. She feasts and sings and makes merry where souls are bought, so she may support her growing child. The man seeks her out and tries to buy the boy. She thrusts him away with her garishly decked fingers. That night while she trods the streets and feasts with a breaking heart, the man steals back and takes away the nestling. She returns in the gray of dawn and finds him gone. Like Rachael, she weeps and will not be comforted.

The wheel of time turns and the son, now a young man, looks upon his father as a demigod. The poor wistful little mother is thought to be dead, but the son often thinks of her. He tries to fashion the old time melodies that she played for him. Some times he asks for her, but is told that she is no more. He wonders what happiness might have been his if the quiet little mother had lived. The purse proud father is elected to the governorship of the state.

His son glories in his father's greatness, while the mother wears her heart out in longing for her boy. Father and son leave the political club room while thousands crowd the pavement to see him and cheer him upon his victory. A wretched little huddle of what was once a woman comes nearer. She plays some maudlin memory of a melody upon a cracked violin. She recognizes the man. The son looks at her and instinctively is drawn to his mother.

He is about to embrace her when the father curses her with a vile name. The son's soul leaps to his mouth. Without thinking he casts the father to the curb. The fall fractures the governor-elect's skull.

The son is arrested. At the trial the mother sits with her withered hand clasped in her son's. The jury returns a verdict of "not guilty." The son looks at his mother. She seems to have renewed her girlhood. Her face is placid. Something in her stillness alarms the boy. He embraces her and finds that she is dead.

OLIVE'S LOVE AFFAIR (Jan. 7).—Billy and Bob love Olive, but the dainty Miss prefers Billy. One day Bob comes upon her as she is embroidering Billy's initial on a handkerchief, which she presents to him later. Bob is angered by her open preference for Billy and he shows it. She, undaunted, runs him from her presence with the point of her sewing needle, and a short time later is content to find her true lover, Billy, basking in her smiles. To revenge himself upon her, Bob steals her unguarded doll, and with true villainous intent, casts it into the waters of a nearby cave. Then, in his exultation, he sends her a note by a boy telling her what he has done. The note is intercepted by Billy, however, who dismisses the messenger and sets out to rescue the doll himself. The messenger returns to Bob and tells him everything is all right, and the young villain smilingly awaits results. Meantime Billy, with his constant companion, his dog, arrives at the cave, but in his anxiety slips and falls into it. He finds himself upon a ledge just above the water, in which the doll is floating and, in a quandary, he at last decides to send his dog for help. He throws the handkerchief up out of the cave, and the waiting dog gets it and takes it to Olive. She follows the dog back to the cave, but is unable to help Billy. Olive then sends the dog for a rope which he gets and after some severe pulling and tugging by both the dog and Olive, Billy is pulled from the cave. He has the rescued doll with him which he secured with the aid of those above and the rope, and Olive once again smiles as she hugs her wet treasure to her breast. Bob, smiling in anticipation of his revenge nearby, is seen by the lovers, and Billy sends his dog who chases the young villain away, which leaves the sweethearts happy and contented.

FRONTIER.

CHRISTMAS AT LONESOME GULCH (Two Parts—Jan. 2). About to start out for his daily toil Fred, the miner of Lonesome Gulch, notes something stops him. On the wall his calendar registers December the twenty-fourth and it occurs to him that another day will bring Christmas. Looking back, he recalls scenes of years ago, of his mother and his elder brother, who early choose a career of crime. Twenty miles away the desperado breaks from jail, and with a sheriff's posse at his heels, takes to the hills. Late that afternoon the desperado arrives at Fred's cabin, exhausted, he comes in and a minute after flopping down on the bunk, is asleep. Fred returns, sees the form of the sleeping man and decides not to awaken him. But an idea occurs to him, and this he proceeds to carry out.

Morning comes, and the desperado awakens. He sees Fred sleeping, and for a second he is tempted to kill him, fearing that he may attempt to capture him and turn him over to the posse. But the vision of his mother stops him, and as he lowers his hands he feels something on the table. It is a small package labeled "Merry Christmas, stranger." Fred wakes up, and as the two men stare at each other the realization comes that they are brothers. The posse arrive, but Fred tells them that he has seen nothing of the wanted man. Twilight comes, and the older brother departs. Fred sits down before the open fireplace, contentedly smoking, for he knows that the border line is but a few miles away, yet he had no way of knowing that a chance shot from the sheriff had struck his brother, and that when the sun set that day his dead brother was lying in a wild spot in Lonesome Gulch.

THE GIRL OF THE PINES (Jan. 9).—The girl's father, a prospector, dies in his cabin in the hills, with only his daughter beside him. She, realizing the danger to a lone girl in the world, disguises herself as a boy and starts out to seek her fortune. She meets the foreman of a lumber camp who takes a fancy to the slender boy and gives "him" a job. Almost at once the bully of the camp decides this is a chance to show his supremacy.

When the "boy" stands around helplessly, bully gets an ax and saw and tells him to get to work. The girl cannot refuse safely and with great awkwardness raises the heavy implements and tries to do her share. The rough lumberjack laughs at her efforts and the bully thinks it time to show his authority. He swears at her for not doing enough work. Her poor hands are blistered and her muscles ache but she goes at it again. The bully laughs and, swearing again, knocks the "boy" over.

The men are delighted. A scrap is a rarity under the stern regime of the foreman, but this promises to be increasing. And besides, the licking will do the boy good, toughen him and make him respect those above him. The foreman comes into the scene. At first he would interfere, then his own subdued love of a fight crops out and he sides with the lad.

The bully crouches and starts towards the boy but the thousands of years of femininity are too much for the little girl of the pines. Snatching off her cap she breaks out crying. The lumbermen stare. Then, realizing the truth, they wonder how they could have been deceived for a minute. The bully is ashamed. He pulls his cap off embarrassed, but the girl turns angrily away from him.

Weeks pass. The foreman has a house built for her. She is the queen of the camp and every man shows her the utmost respect. The bully and the foreman love her. The former has been forgiven, but when he speaks his love the girl shakes her head. She loves another, the man who has been her champion from the first.

THE MYSTERY OF THE THRONE ROOM (Two Reel Detective Drama of "My Lady Raffles" Series—Jan 5.).—Lucille, a young widow and protege of an American Duchess, is the guest of honor at one of the Duchess' week-end parties. During the first day of the visit, Lucille recognizes an old acquaintance in the "international spy," known to the Duchess and her friends as "Count Hugo."

While taking tea with the Duchess, Hugo is approached by Prince Frederick, who will fall heir to Queen Yvonne's throne, should she refuse to marry the neighboring Prince Carlos on her twenty-first birthday, which is only ten days away. The Prince tells Hugo of Yvonne's love for one of the young officers in her retinue, and of her expected refusal to carry out the wishes of her people and thereby save her country from falling into the hands of Prince Frederick. During their conversation Lucille sees them point to a limousine, stopping at the gate. The machine contains Prince Carlos' couriers. Hiding behind a tree, Lucille overhears the couriers tell Prince Frederick that Queen Yvonne has not refused Prince Carlos but has asked a week to think it over, promising to signal her acceptance seven days from them, by a gun shot. Lucille later overhears Frederick plot with Hugo to kidnap Yvonne. He knows that, although she is a madcap and in love with the young officer, she will never sacrifice her people and country to the unscrupulous Frederick and that she will give the signal at the given time.

Lucille determines to warn the queen and thwart the plans of Hugo and the Prince. She immediately starts out for the palace. Upon her arrival she watches her chance, and, finding a side entrance open, tiptoes into the palace.

In the meantime, the Prince and Hugo have arranged with Frederick's man to kidnap the Queen and take her to Frederick's shooting lodge, until after the day set for the wedding, by which time Frederick will be on the throne. While Lucille is in the palace, Hugo's men conclude their preparations to kidnap the queen. In the meantime, Hugo's men kidnap the Queen in her garden without any of her people knowing she has even left the palace.

Lucille is discovered in the throne room of the palace by Yvonne's maids and is mistaken for the queen. Lucille tries to explain, but the maid, knowing of their queen's mad-cap ways, think it is another of her pranks, and hurry her to her room. The next day Hugo visits the palace and is dumbfounded at meeting the Queen, as he believes Lucille to be. He sends word to Frederick that his men have failed to get the Queen away.

The day the signal is to be given Lucille sees Hugo trying to hide the pistol with which the signal is to be given. She accidentally discharges the weapon, thus giving the signal. The people waiting anxiously at the palace gates, cheer loudly when they hear the shot which signifies that their Queen will marry Prince Carlos and save them from Prince Frederick. Lucille, hearing the cheers, realizes what she has done and tries frantically to think of some way to escape from the palace and a consequent marriage with a crabbed old Prince, as she pictures Carlos to be.

The day for the wedding arrives and Lucille is dressed in the royal robes of Yvonne and prepared for the ceremony by her ladies-in-waiting. About the time Prince Carlos arrives at Yvonne's palace, Yvonne escapes from the lodge. Carlos is presented to Lucille, who finds him to be a good-looking young man of pleasing personality.

During the time before the ceremony, Lucille and Carlos become quite friendly, and don't seem to mind the coming marriage, much to the despair of Yvonne's sweetheart, who is nearly wild with jealousy. The Queen arrives at the palace and reaches the throne just as the prelate starts the ceremony. Confronting Frederick, she is dumbfounded at the sight of her double on the throne. Lucille explains why she is there and about Frederick's plot against Yvonne. Frederick exits hurriedly, with Hugo, who at last, recognizes Lucille. Carlos turnes to Yvonne as Lucille exits to the window, where she meets Hugo, and laughs at him. After he leaves, she turns and looks sadly toward the Prince Carlos, who at that moment, is kissing Yvonne's hand.

The Prince, seeing Yvonne and her sweetheart exchange glances, realizes their love for one another and pledges their troth, by promising to pay the country's debt himself and thus freeing Yvonne of the necessity of marrying against her will. Placing their hands together, he exits as the ceremony begins. Lucille, in the window, hears someone coming and, turning, finds Prince Hugo standing by her side. She smiles at him as he takes her hand.

CUPID IN A HOSPITAL (Jan. 10).—A pretty nurse makes an impression on Billie. Her flirtation arouses the jealousy of the crippled anarchist, who gets even by bouncing a basin on the head of Billie. The young interne, also in love with the pretty nurse, makes a date to meet her, but Billie, waiting for another sight of his lady fair, forestalls him. The interne's jealousy aroused, he proceeds to punish Billie. Believing him dead, the frightened nurse and interne make off for the hospital.

Found unconscious by a couple of policemen, Billie is restored by a whiff of his beloved gin. He is carried into the hospital, where his head is bandaged and he is prepared for bed. Turning into the ward he is treated by the anarchist. The ungrateful Billie manages to steal the bottle, but is not able to get away with the contents before the arrival of the nurse. Recognizing him, the nurse showers attentions upon him, much to the jealousy of the anarchist, who plants a bomb under the bed of the sleeping Billie.

The anarchist, awaiting the explosion, is horrified to discover the nurse sitting on the bed with Billie. He endeavors to drag her away and the bomb is discovered. Thoroughly alarmed, the entire hospital force endeavor to throw the bomb out. In the confusion the anarchist is thrown on the bed of Billie, and together on Billie's little hospital bed they are blown through the roof, finally landing in the lake.

THROUGH A KNOT HOLE (Jan. 10).—A knot hole in the fence leads to the undoing of the married man, who, glimpsing at the pretty bride next door, proceeds to make himself agreeable.

Not averse to admiration, the bride amuses herself, thereby arousing the jealousy of her husband, who starts out to punish the intruder.

The pretty bride is forgiven, but the making up is marred by the eye at the knot hole. Enraged, the husband slips up to the fence and pokes his finger in the eye, but in an effort to see through the knot hole what damage he has inflicted, he, in turn, gets his eye poked by the intruder. His ire aroused, he gets his gun and starts out for blood. Self-protection necessary, the intruder gets his gun, takes it on the chase, until the wife of the intruder corners him, putting to use her washtub-developed muscle.

HIS LAST PERFORMANCE (Jan. 5).—Old "Doc" Jackson is a hypnotist with a small travelling show. They are showing at a country town, when "Doc's" wife becomes seriously ill. The manager forces "Doc" to go through his performance with his daughter, Mary, who acts as his hypnotic subject. While the act is in progress, Bob, a member of the show, in love with Mary, informs the old man of the death of his wife. The old man is heartbroken and overcome with grief.

The show is stranded and old "Doc" is unsuccessful in his efforts to collect enough of his wages to pay the funeral expenses. There is a spirited discussion in the wagon of the manager, during which an ink bottle is overturned into the drawer containing the money. Henshaw schemes to steal the money and does so.

"Doc" Jackson finally gets an idea. He knows that there is money in the manager's wagon and in one last desperate attempt hypnotizes Mary and forces her to go to the wagon for the purpose of securing the money. He is concentrating his mind upon her action when he suddenly comes in contact with his dead wife and the spell is broken. Mary, now in the wagon, feels the control of her mind lifted, is bewildered at finding herself there.

Bob offers to help the manager liquidate the debts. Henshaw joins them and the three go to the manager's wagon together. Mary is discovered. The money is missing. Henshaw endeavors to throw the guilt upon Mary, when her old father appears. The father claims responsibility for the theft. Bob catches sight of Henshaw's hands and notices they are ink stained. He thereupon declares Henshaw to be the thief. Henshaw is searched; the ink-stained money found.

ON DESERT SANDS (Two Parts—Jan 7).—When the West was young, the government appointed among others, Cameo Clark, a range rider and crack shot, to scout the Middle West and watch the Indians. Cameo lived in a log cabin with his mother, whose love for her only son occupied almost to the exclusion of everything else, her later years. From an Eastern state, John Walton, with his wife and baby of five years, travels by prairie schooner to seek riches in the West. Indian massacres and uprisings occur on his journey.

One evening, while stopping for a night camp, Walton sees Indians riding over the desert in his direction. A flash of Cameo and his pal tells us he is ever on the lookout in the Government service. Walton tries in vain to protect his wife and baby against the onslaught of the Indians. He is shot. The horses attached to the Walton schooner become frightened, and the little mother and her baby seated in the wagon have no time to escape, as the frightened horses start on the run with them.

Cameo sees the pursuit through his field glasses and follows. A shot from an Indian's rifle brings the runaways to a standstill and they fall in their tracks, overturning the schooner, killing the mother and leaving the baby girl inside the over-turned wagon unhurt. The Indians surround the schooner. The chief cuts his way into the wagon top, returning with the child. Cameo, in pursuit of the Indian raiders, draws his gun and watches. The schooner, now in flames, reveals the chief taking the child, when a shot from Cameo's gun fells him. The child is unharmed. Cameo rescues the baby and, taking her in his arms, rides away in the night. His crude camp fire and blankets make a warm bed for the little orphan.

Olaff, the freighter, who has been drinking, lashes his horses as he tries to harness them. The same dawn finds Cameo asleep. The child is awake and wanders about the camp and into the desert. Olaff stops his horses near a water hole and, taking his canteen for water, leaves his wagon, which is covered with a small quantity of hay in the bottom. The little child sees the covered wagon with its bed of straw, climbs in and goes to sleep. Olaff returns and drives away without seeing the baby in the wagon.

Cameo awakens, calls for the child, then rushes, gun in hand, in search of her. Mile after mile he runs over the desert sands, but in vain. He then returns to his mother's cabin to tell her of the child of the desert whom he found but only to lose again.

Olaff, arriving at his cabin, unpacks his load and finds the little intruder. He is enraged and shakes her.

Fifteen years elapse and we find Cameo with his aged mother leaving for the settlement. Olaff tells Juanita to go with him to town, and, half frightened by his cruelty, the girl, now twenty years of age, mounts the wagon and sits beside the drunken and brutal Olaff.

In a barroom Olaff gambles his last dollar away. Then, seeing the child, Juanita, through an open window waiting for him, he wagers her against the winnings of his companions, one of them, a Mexican. Cameo sees Juanita, and, as he enters the barroom hears the wager made—a human life pitted against gold. Cameo watches the Mexican win the girl. Springing into the midst of the men seated at the gambling table, he offers to stake all he wins against the girl. The cards are shuffled and played. Cameo wins. He takes Juanita home to his mother.

During the brief time that passes, Tom Manning, a young man, falls in love with Juanita, who secretly loves Cameo, but has never told him of her love. Tom asks her to be his wife. She will consent if Cameo is willing, but love dominates and at the close of the day Juanita lays her little head upon the shoulder of Cameo and mother beams her approval upon the match.

A MAN'S TEMPTATION (Jan. 7).—Col. Gerard, a retired army officer, practically lives at his club, neglecting his wife, Margaret, who is much younger than he. At a dance given by a friend she meets Louis Lasalle, society fencing master. He is handsome and attentive, she is appreciative. Margaret and many others take fencing lessons as a fad. Louis and Margaret both fall in love with each other but both are too honorable to declare themselves in words.

The Colonel becomes suspicious when he sees Margaret in an automobile with Louis. After a trying hour with Louis, Margaret writes him to go away before they forget themselves and sends the letter by the maid. The colonel's suspicions get the upperhand and he investigates. Sees maid with the letter. Lets her go on with it. He enters house and upbraids Margaret, who pleads innocence. The Colonel, in a rage, starts for the studio to find Louis, but he is not in at the time of his arrival. Upon receipt of Margaret's letter Louis tore it in half, the Colonel finds the lower half in which without the upper reads much harsher. The Colonel's rage is top-notch, he calls loudly and Louis enters.

He tries to explain to the Colonel without effect and is forced to fight the Colonel with rapiers. Margaret at home feels something wrong and calls the studio on the phone. Louis is fighting for his life, but backs to the phone and answers it, reassuring her, at the same time cleverly parrying the Colonel's thrusts. Louis is forced from the phone by the Colonel before he can replace the receiver, and Margaret at the other end of the wire, hears the clashing of the swords and the cry of pain from the Colonel as Louis accidentally wounds him in the left arm. Louis phones for a physician and succeeds, but is nearly stabbed while doing so.

Louis disarms the Colonel with a twist of his weapon and the Colonel is at his mercy. And here is where the man is sorely tempted. He regains control and lowers his sword point at the floor. At this time Margaret and the physician enter and, seeing blood on Louis' sword, on the Colonel's shirt and on the floor, think of murder. Upon examination the physician finds that the Colonel died of apoplexy. Margaret is now free.

THE STAR OF THE SEA (Two Parts—Jan. 10).—Mario Busoni, a young sculptor, is the ward of his uncle, Father Busoni, pastor of the Church of the Holy Name at Fiesole. The boy has shown wonderful skill in his chosen profession, so much so that he is selected to execute a life-sized statue of the Madonna for his uncle's church. This commission fills both uncle and nephew with great joy, and the lad's departure from the studio at Naples to fulfill his commission, is made the occasion of much rejoicing among his fellow-workers.

A discordant note is struck by Janice, a model. This girl passionately loves the young sculptor. She begs and entreats him to remain with her, and he is on the point of yielding to her blandishments when the timely arrival of his uncle puts Janice to flight. Uncle and nephew arrive at the scene of the boy's future labors and the work is commenced. A month later an important letter arrives at the studio for Mario, and Janice undertakes to deliver it to him. She arrives at the church, delivers the letter and attempts to ingratiate herself with Mario. She is again defeated by the watchful uncle, but determines to bide her time.

Meanwhile Mario becomes dissatisfied with the conditions under which he is working, and finally induces his uncle to permit him to have a living model. It is found in the person of a beautiful young fisher girl, the widowed daughter of Pietro Ferrari, a fisherman. Later Mario, heroically rescues the girl's father from the sea. Soon after the girl and her baby boy pose for the young artist. Tomasco, a hulking fisher lout, is in love with Mario's model. He offers marriage, and, being refused, suspects Mario of being his rival. Meeting with Janice, her heart like his, aflame with jealous rage, the two plot the destruction of Mario's masterpiece, the almost completed statue of the Virgin and Child. Mario has proposed and been accepted by the fisher girl and the news of his betrothal determines Janice and her accomplice to put their plot into effect at once.

Arriving at the church, the man carrying a heavy sledge, they are confronted by the finished work—a marvel of beauty of the statue. He throws down the hammer and refuses to perform the bidding of the jealous woman. She laughs at him for his sentiment and, seizing the hammer, swings it aloft. The destruction of the statue is imminent, but Divine intervention is at hand, and the eyes of the beautiful Madonna open. The poised hammer is dropped and both man and woman fall to their knees at the base of the statue, where they sob out their penitence in contrite prayers. The curtains hiding the statue are pulled aside and the bishop and his followers view the marvelous work of the young artist.

Enthralled with admiration, the bishop extends his hand in blessing. The scene changes to a quiet nook near the seashore home of the fisher girl, where we find her and Mario in loving embrace, the patriarchal father holding aloft the baby boy, who is clapping his hands at the incoming rollers of the mighty sea.

JOKER.

TWO OF A KIND (Jan. 4).—Reginald Cooper, the only son of a wealthy western family, is discovered to be suffering from dementia, he is sent, under the care of a trained nurse to an eastern specialist, Doctor Fitzhuggins. The nurse is given a letter to deliver to the doctor in which statement of the patient's case is made.

The doctor's niece, journeying on a visit to her uncle, is on the same train which carries the patient. She has been persecuted by the attentions of Jack Merryweather, a drummer. She finally takes refuge in the same compartment in which the patient and nurse are riding, and from the nurse she learns the condition of the nurse's companion.

At a wayside station the patient effects his escape; the nurse is overwhelmed with dismay. She leaves the train in pursuit of the patient, and in doing so, drops the letter; the niece, picking up the letter, determines she will deliver it to her uncle.

Arrived at her destination the niece finds herself followed by Jack. He accompanied her home. He seeks an introduction to her uncle, presenting himself in his real capacity. He is trying to interest the doctor in his wares when the niece enters the room. She presents the letter to her uncle and points Jack out as the patient. Jack endeavors to explain, the doctor humors him and finally has him placed under restraint.

Meanwhile the nurse has recovered her charge and brings him to the home of the doctor. Leaving him for an instant he takes possession of Jack's bag of samples and on the arrival of the doctor presents his wares. The nurse in vain endeavors to explain. Jack is brought from his ward and sensing danger of an immediate separation from the girl he loves, he lies. He assumes a fit of dementia, the effect of which is to confirm, the doctor has Jack removed and turns to the patient to discover that Jack's assumed fit has thrown the patient into one of his paroxysms. He places the patient under restraint. Jack escapes from his ward and leaves the house.

That evening Jack attends a ball given to welcome home the niece. He is presented by his mother to the niece. She is greatly struck by Jack's resemblance to himself. The young people engage in a mild flirtation and on the breaking up of a dance, Jack obtains the niece's consent to see her home. Arriving at the house, Jack escapes having been discovered, he is immediately seized and is about to be incarcerated in his old quarters, when the niece, finding her heart has been won by him, tells the truth and the story closes with the doctor

Future Releases:

"THE GOOSE GIRL" "THE COUNTRY BOY"

For the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company

WHAT MAKES A FEATURE

1 Every feature must stand the acid test of box office value, the power to draw the money. To do this it must be a picture easy to understand. It must combine human interest with comedy and pathos.

2 Not alone is good acting a prime necessity, but care should be taken in the making of the print. A bad print offends and displeases the theatre patron, thus affecting the exhibitor. Take care of the exhibitor and he will take care of the manufacturer.

3 Personal exploitation of business directors exerts no influence on the box office. The same amount of energy spent on publicity for the feature gives it a distinction that makes it worth featuring.

WHAT THE ALLIANCE PROGRAMME STANDS FOR

1 As near perfection as the human element can make it. An earnest and honest endeavor to make each succeeding release better than those that have gone before. Progress is the foundation of our policy. Ask our patrons.

2 We will not handle any off-colored shoddy. Our features appeal to all classes. They combine entertainment, divertisement and instruction.

3 We offer you regularity, reliability of character of output and respectability of subjects.

A POLITICAL MESS (Jan. 9).—Got M. Kopt and Wan Votz are rival candidates for mayor. Votz represents the big interests, while Kopt is backing up the people's party. Votz goes to a sculptor to have a bust made. Kopt gets wind that his political rival Votz is having the bust made and, not to be outdone, makes an engagement with the sculptor for the next day to sit for a bust himself.

Now Votz is getting the worst of it in the campaign. He knows that if Kopt can be kept from making an important speech the next day, thereby dissapointing the voters, he, Votz, will stand a chance of being elected himself. He knows of Kopt's appointment with the sculptor. Votz hires the sculptor's studio the next day and disguises himself as the artist. When Kopt appears he finds the supposed sculptor and submits to having the life mask made. Votz pours plaster-of-paris over Kopt's face. The plaster hardens like iron. Votz then decamps. Kopt cannot remove the mask. He gropes blindly out the building and along the street, frightening everybody. He has a time convincing his wife of his identity. The time for his speech arrives. The mask cannot be removed. His wife's strategy, however, saves the situation. Kopt is proclaimed as a hero and to the chagrin of Votz, is overwhelmingly elected.

ADVENTURES OF TERENCE O'ROURKE. "A Captain of Villainy" (Two Parts—Jan 4—Episode Five).—Terence O'Rourke, gentleman and adventurer, and his friend, Denny, are in Tangiers, Morocco. They have a patron in Billy Sennet, United States Consul General to Morocco. Capt. Von Wever is a cashiered officer of the German army and is blackmailing the Countess of Seyn-Altberg, sweetheart of O'Rourke's friend, Billy Sennet. The countess' husband was formerly an officer in the German army.

A year before the story opens, Count Seyn-Altberg was accused of cheating at cards and, upon his promise to leave the country, was allowed to go without being publicly exposed and disgraced. He came to Tangiers, took to drinking, sinking lower and lower, until finally he was found by Capt. Von Wever in the slave market and bought by him. Von Wever threatens to bring disgrace upon the family of the countess by exposing to the world the human wreck that was once her husband. He has been exacting money from her from time to time, as the price of silence. O'Rourke meets the countess and they become friends. She finally tells him her story. O'Rourke promises to help her. He goes to the house of Capt. Von Wever and demands to know where Count Seyn-Altberg is hidden. Von Wever refuses to tell, whereupon O'Rourke horsewhips him in righteous indignation.

Finally the cowardly captain begs for mercy and agrees to tell O'Rourke where the Countess' husband is hid. He leads him back to a rear room, a sort of a cellar, where they find the count dead. The countess is now free, and she and Sennet lay plans for a happy culmination of their little romance.

THE COLLINGSBY PEARLS (Two Parts—Jan. 6).—John Collingsby is a very wealthy broker. Having made a small fortune on a deal he buys his wife a wonderful string of pearls. She is exceedingly proud of them and causes an article to be put in the society columns of one of the local papers, describing the jewels.

A sudden reverse comes to Mr. Collingsby and he is in immediate need of a large sum of money to save his business from ruin. In order to raise the money he pledges his wife's pearls unknown to her, and has a duplicate set of imitation pearls made. They substitute for the real ones.

Dowling, a society thief, scrapes acquaintance with Mrs. Collingsby at a tango tea. He plans to steal her pearls. He has a disagreement with one of the gang, who thinks he is wasting too much time courting Mrs. Collingsby. Collingsby also is constantly finding the burglar in his home. A member of the underworld gang, in order to avenge himself on Dowling, steals the pearls, thinking they are the real ones.

As it happens, both he and Darling enter the house at the same time and have a terrific battle in the dark, fighting their way out of the room and down the stairs. The other man finally so injures Dowling that he falls unconscious. The burglar makes away with the jewel casket. The fight awakens Mrs. Collingsby and the servants. She goes to the assistance of Dowling, whom she does not suspect, especially when he explains to her that he was passing the house, saw the burglar and entered to stop the theft.

Mrs. Collingsby sends the servant for a doctor and she is attending the society burglar when her husband returns home from the club. Seeing his wife nursing Dowling he denounces her for her supposed infidelity. She then tells him of the loss of the pearls. Meanwhile the underworld leader has been caught by the police a little distance from the house and brought back. He confronts Dowling and exposes him to the police.

Mrs. Collingsby takes back her pearls with a cry of joy. The men are taken to jail. Mrs. Collingsby opens the jewel casket to find it is empty, the burglars, before being arrested, having taken the pearls and passed them along to a confederate. Collingsby, however, brings out the real pearls and returns them to his wife with a well-deserved warning against making chance acquaintances.

HER DUMMY HUSBAND (Jan. 10).—Tibby McGrath reaches "forty" without a mate. She never loses hope. She lives alone in a little cottage in "Lonesomehurst." She is mortally afraid of burglars. Burglars are reported as being in the town; the Gazette tells about them and the village is full of it. Tibby is advised by Hoskins, the general store man, to buy a shotgun, which she does. She sees a dummy figure in the store, and gets an idea. She buys the dummy, a suit for it, and has it sent home. While Tibby is arranging the dummy, Mrs. Jones, a neighbor, comes into the house to borrow a kettle, and while Tibby is out she sees a man's overcoat, cane, high hat and gloves on a chair. Further investigation reveals a man stretched out in an arm schair behind a screen. Tibby has a man in the house. That night Tibby goes to the Bazaar. In her absence "Weary Willie" drops into town from a freight train and proceeds to "get acquainted." He finds his way into Tibby's house, discovers that the figure is a dummy, undresses it, but before he can make his "getaway" Tibby returns. She sits on the dummy's knee and kisses "Hubby." Soft lips and a hug—the mischief is done. She backs "Weary Willie" into a closet with the gun. She gives him his choice of marrying her or jail. Women who see the constable running to Tibby's house hasten after him and discover all. The dominie comes along and the upshot is that "Weary" decides to settle down with all comforts of a real home. As the picture fades out we see "Weary Willie" and Tibby married.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (Chapter 50—Dec. 28).—Margaret has the pleasure of visiting May Wilson Preston, the most prolific of all the women artists in this country, at her studio. Mrs. Preston confides to her the trying experiences she has with certain art editors, which, fortunately, she is able to see in an amusing light. At the last moment, she is called up by one of the magazines to supply illustrations for a fiction story which they are substituting for the "special" from their war correspondent which hasn't arrived. She goes to the trouble of hiring her models and has the drawings well under way, when "B-r-r-r-rrr!" goes the telephone again. It is the art editor. He is sorry to have to trouble Mrs. Preston so much, but they have decided not to run the fiction story. Instead, can she make an illustration for a poem of great strength—about a fat man? Of course she can—and will. So when the willowy model, when she distinctly has ordered a fat man, arrives, he is stuffed out with sofa cushions, and the artist begins a fresh canvas. Scarcely two hours later, the art editor fairly sobs out over the wire that the poem has been discarded and that another story has been substituted.

"For this," says Mrs. Preston, laughing, "I was to pose two young people in loving attitude on the platform of a Pullman train. She is a divorcee-to-be speeding toward Reno; and he, of course, is to be her second attempt. The best part of the whole mix-up was, that my two models, who happened to bump into each other here, were two lovers who had quarrelled and separated. By the time the drawing was done, they had made up their difficulty—and so, in spite of the art editor, I did a profitable day's work."

THE MESSAGE (Dec. 30).—Carter has inherited a taste for drink. His wife is the only influence which keeps him straight. He accuses her unjustly of meeting another man—really her outcast brother, whom she is ashamed to acknowledge—and they separate. Then Carter becomes a dipsomaniac. Steve, Mrs. Carter's brother, is also a victim of drink. It happens that at the same time the two men are suffering from the effects of a long spree, Steve, on the street, is listening to an evangelist, who hands him a tract. He shoves the paper into his pocket and wanders off in search of alcohol to satisfy his craving. He chances to come by Carter's house just as his brother-in-law is kicking his valet out of the door, for keeping the whiskey bottle away from him. Seeing Carter help himself to the liquor, and unable to stand it, Steve enters the house, snatches the bottle from his hand, and drains down all but a few drops. These last crumbs of comfort he returns to Carter—and the two men, recognizing in each other victims of the same weakness, become sympathetic. Steve pulls the tract out of his pocket—and in his soothed state, the words take hold on his emotions. He shares the message with Carter who is similarly affected. Later, the derelict persuades his sister to return with him to her husband, and is about to slip away without revealing his identity, when Carter insists upon his remaining. He then learns their relationship and how he has misjudged his wife. In making Steve a member of the family he ensures his own salvation and that of his delinquent broher-in-law.

He is jolted out, however, still rolled up in the drugget, and barely escapes being run over by an automobile. Struggling free, the baby gains the sidewalk, where he is met by a company of little boys marching. They command the baby to join their ranks, and when he demurs, the leader, who believes in compulsory military service, spanks him with his gun and constrains him to fall in behind. Meanwhile, the father and mother are wildly seeking their lost child. As the line of tiny soldiers straggles by, they recognize their hopeful bringing up the rear.

THE PIT (Brady—Five Parts).—The scenes of the drama are laid in Chicago during a period of speculation in the wheat pit, and intimate pictures of society life form the prologue of the play. Cressler, a victim of rash speculation in "The Pit," commits suicide just as Curtis Jadwin, a prosperous young broker, wins the hand and heart of Laura Dearborn, a rich and lovely society girl. Their married happiness is menaced by Jadwin's infatuation for wheat speculation, which leads him to neglect his young wife. Corthell, a former lover, appears to her, charms her with music, and almost wins her away from her husband. The latter is temporarily won from his passion for moneymaking, but succumbs to it again and leaves the path open for Corthell to make further onslaughts on Laura's heart.

Jadwin now plans a great wheat corner and starts in by winning back a fortune of which his friends deprived him years before. The market recedes and Jadwin quarrels with his partner, accusing him of trying to sell him out. Jadwin thereupon plunges into the market, but failing in his frantic efforts to corner it, hears the name of his firm "read out" by the secretary. The corner has been prevented; he is ruined.

Quitting the tumult of the Board of Trade, he makes his way home, a beaten man. His wife is on the point of eloping with Corthell, but when she sees her unhappy husband her heart is touched. Dismissing her lover, she turns to Jadwin and promises to help him commence life afresh far from the feverish temptations of speculative business life. He has lost a fortune but has a devoted wife, whose love has returned to him.

THE LAST CHAPTER (Favorite Players).—Gordon, a young war correspondent, after being wounded in the jungles of Africa, is picked up and taken back to England by James Egerton, a wealthy rubber magnate, who has been investigating conditions on his plantation, where there has been a great shortage in the year's yield. On the voyage homeward the correspondent and Egerton's daughter Alice fall in love. In England Gordon finds in Lord Arbuthton a formidable rival for the hand of the girl he loves. At this time an exploring expedition leaves England to find the Lost River, a stream supposed to exist in the interior of Africa.

Gordon views with concern his titled rival's attention to Alice, and at the first opportunity asks her father's consent to their marriage. Egerton answers that he will never allow his daughter to marry a penniless man, but offers his daughter's hand and an interest in the business if he will go to Africa and successfully solve the mystery of the rubber shortage. Gordon leaves, and the farewell between himself and Alice is a promise that, come what may, she will wait for him; and this promise she seals by taking off a locket and chain, which she gives him as a pledge of her love.

He arrives in Africa, and after a series of thrilling adventures discovers that the overseer of the plantation has been selling rubber to coast traders and covering his dishonesty by manufacturing false statements about raids by outlaw bands. A fight follows in which the overseer is killed and the plantation settlement destroyed by fire. Gordon is wounded and barely escapes from a burning hut alive. Outside he discovers a weather-stained map upon the body of a dead native showing that the Lost River has been discovered, but not by the exploring party.

Gordon struggles through the jungle, is found unconscious by the returning explorers, who have given up the search. When they see the map they hail him as Tracy, the discoverer of the Lost River. Here he learns that his rival has circulated reports that he died in the jungle and that Alice is to become the nobleman's bride. Gordon returns to London in disguise and is applauded by the public as a great explorer, and is about to give up Alice forever when Fate steps in.

Lord Arbuthton is killed in an accident. The returned lover hurries to the girl, divulges his identity and reminds her of her pledge. Egerton, true to his promise, makes Gordon a member of the firm, and shortly afterward the bells are ringing for the young peoples wedding.

EVERYONE (Warner's Features).—Everyone had not realized that one pays dearly for excesses. Having used up his vitality in selfish pleasures, Death reminded him, by pointing with a bony finger at the hour-glass which he carried ever with him, that the sands of his life were almost run.

The specter of Death frightened Everyone. One day, as the bony arms reached yearningly toward him, he uttered a despairing plea as he recoiled. "Must I go alone? Cannot I take a friend who is willing to accompany me?" Death had no objection.

So Everyone hastened to the task. He entered the tavern, where Good Fellowship was always to be found, feeling sure that he would discover a volunteer there. "Nay, nay! I must dance and sing. Maybe my comrades will go," was the answer that greeted his request on every hand.

Next to the tavern was the house of Kith and Kin. Everyone pointed toward it to convey his intention that he would there seek a comrade, and Death allowed him to enter. But here, too, disappointment awaited him. Riches, when approached, laughed in the face of Everyone.

Good Deeds, the sister of mercy, listened to his plea. She showed him the record of his life, and the page whereon his acts of kindness were to be noted was blank. She could not accompany him, she explained, for the reason that there was constant need for her on earth. She did Everyone a great service, however, in directing him to her brother, Knowledge.

Knowledge came to Everyone's aid and his strength and authority abashed Death. When his former associates heard that Everyone had escaped from the clutches of Death, they flocked to him in rejoicing. They tempted him with the pleasures he once had so unrestrainedly revelled in. But he rejected them all. With Knowledge to guide him, he saw the folly of intemperate living and the vices that result therefrom. He saw Riches slaying Honesty, Intemperance sapping the vigor of Youth, Greed fastening its fangs on Virtue.

He now recognized his wrongs and hastened to the confessional, where the priest gave him the Knout of Self-Punishment, wherewith he beat himself.

He now fared forth to do good, and the blessings of the benefited rewarded him. Faith, Benevolence, Penitence, Tolerance, Forgiveness and many other good beings now became his comrades instead of Vindictiveness, Hatred, Greed and the like. He entered the vale of Beauty. His thoughts have become lofty, yet are not divorced from the well-being of his fellowman, regardless of station. He has ideals, yet is not intolerant of those without them. Strength, Discretion, the Five Wits are among his constant companions.

And when Death came again, he had not the somber aspect that he seemed invested with on his former visit. Everyone smiled in welcome, and faced him with peace in his soul. "Death, where is thy sting?" asked Everyone, wondrously, strangely happy, as his soul fled to higher spheres.

LOST IN LONDON (Warner's Features).—Little Daisy was the joy of Dr. Westbury and his wife. Therefore, a little accident that had befallen Daisy was the matter of chief concern in their lives at that moment. The Doctor telephoned his regrets to a clinic so that he may attach in criscross fashion two oblong plasters on the left temple of the little patient, who while romping had fallen and cut her forehead on a pebble. The mother abandoned a reception she had planned.

And then, to compensate little Daisy for the ordeal so nobly borne, the parents sent her forth to revel again, cautioning the nurse to guard well against further harm, as they went motoring.

Corporal Jenkins passed the big iron grillwork portals of the Westbury estate, and Nora opened the gates to speak with her lover. Daisy, finding the open gate, set forth to explore the world.

Consternation prevailed when the Westburys returned and the nurse told her story between heartbroken sobs. The police could not trace the baby.

There was good reason for their failure. The child, wandering into Covent Garden Market, had struck up an acquaintance with little Charlie Brooks, who was about her size, and found her to be a capital playfellow. When Charlie recalled the errand his mother had sent him on and started homeward, he took little Daisy by the hand and, as if that were a perfectly legitimate thing to do, led her into the alley of tenements on which fronted the parental roof.

Mrs. Brooks' heart was touched at sight of the little waif, and added her to her family. Later, when she had outgrown rompers, Daisy was set to selling flowers in Piccadilly Circus.

Charlie, who also was assisting in the family upkeep, one day peddled bills for a theater manager, receiving as remuneration a ticket admitting two. His first thought was of Daisy, for whom he had developed a real brotherly affection.

So the two, big-eyed with wonder, had their first glimpse of the inside of a theater that night. But their unwonted good fortune had an evil sequel when, returning late, they faced the irate father, who forbade both the threshold, when Charlie defended Daisy from violence.

Daisy recalled that an artist chap, Anderson by name, had given her his address one day on Piccadilly Circus, pressing her to come to his studio to pose for a painting. So Daisy entered his employ, while Charlie, assured of her being provided for, set out to shift for himself.

Daisy, however, remained only long enough to discover that she had fallen in love with the artist. She, being poor and without education, ceded the field to the wealthy and cultured Olga Westbury, when the latter came into Anderson's graces. Little did she dream that her rival was her sister.

Daisy had convinced Stamford, manager-friend of Anderson's, that she had talent for dancing on one of the former's visits, so when Stamford found her determined not to return to Anderson, he engaged her as a dancer.

Daisy's rise in her profession was fast. One night Anderson saw her from a box, reaping encore after encore. He could not refrain from calling on her, and soon they discovered that they had loved each other right along, and became engaged. But Olga, already angered at Anderson's preference for a dancer, saw her one night at a cafe in company with her brother—and Olga, of course, could not know it was her brother—and anonymously warned Anderson that his intended was faithless. Anderson sought proof, and got the kind that had sufficed Olga. He broke the engagement.

Daisy, returning disconsolate from a futile attempt to see and explain to Anderson, was knocked down by an auto. Dr. Westbury, who treated her, seeing the scar and the medallion she had carried about her neck through all the years, recognized in her the long-lost baby-daughter, now a lassie of seventeen. Mother and younger daughter are 'phoned for, and a tearful reunion followed. Of course, Olga, repentant, immediately telegraphed Anderson, who was in the act of whooping it up in Paris in an effort to forget his disappointment in Daisy, and Anderson took the next steamer home to duly receive from the convalescent Daisy kisses of forgiveness. Foster-brother Charles, now a prosperous business man, was best man, of course, at the wedding that followed.

LITTLE MISS NUISANCE (Warner's Features).—Hearts were trumps with Paul Normond at that little card party in the seaside cottage which he and his friend Felix had taken for a week. Paul had just received a telegram from his employer, the Honorable James Fauret, chief of the Department of Special Revenue, that he and his daughter Florence would motor out to enliven his vacation, and the news made him very happy, inasmuch as Florence was his fiancee.

An auto stopped outside, and Paul ran to the door, thinking it was his employer and daughter.

Instead of Florence and her father, however, Paul was confronted by a vivacious young woman, who introduced herself as Marion Lamont, daughter of the wealthy candy manufacturer. She pointed to a flattened tire which the chauffeur had already turned his attention to and intimated that she would like to tarry with them while repairs were in progress.

Felix was not slow in offering her the hospitality of the cottage, while Paul bit his finger nails in vexation.

Marion did not give Paul the opportunity to convey to Felix his displeasure at his rash step in inviting her into the house, for the reason that Marion found Paul extremely interesting, and immediately began to devote her attention to the reticent young man.

Felix noted this with joy, for was not Marion the much-sought heiress of the Fauret millions? He liked his friend too much to see him mismated, anyway, and secretly resolved to do all he could to arouse in him feelings reciprocal to those exhibited by Marion.

So when the chauffeur had repaired the tire and entered the house to inform Marion to that effect, Felix stealthily slipped behind the car and placed a tack in another tire, with the result that the car almost instantly was brought to another halt for further repairs.

Felix was all smiles inwardly, and the smile expanded into a guffaw when a little bit later they found that it was necessary for the chauffeur to go to the city for repairs. He felt that this further delay would materially aid his plans, and, to encourage Marion in her obvious liking for Paul, he told her that his friend avoided her, although secretly caring for her, because he feared she might interpret his love as fortune-hunting.

Late that night the old bureaucrat and his prudish daughter arrived. Paul received them with an embrassassment which was not lost upon Fauret. The discovery followed almost instantly. Paul's explanations were rejected. Turning about, father and daughter re-entered the car and motored off in wrath. The engagement was off.

Paul cut short his vacation and hurried back to the city to make an attempt at reconciliation, Marion in the meantime having been fetched home by her millionaire daddy, who rode out to the seaside cottage in his luxurious limousine as soon as he heard of the accident to his daughter's machine.

Fauret finally consented to give Paul another chance to prove himself worthy of Florence. Marion, very much piqued by Paul's spurning of her attentions, to see him again uses as a pretext the excuse that she came to apologize for the behavior which scandalized him in the eyes of Fauret and his daughter.

While in the office waiting for Paul to appear, the telephone bell rang. The chief was on the wire and was astounded to hear a feminine voice answer him. He determined to find out.

Paul, entering his office, was thunderstruck to find Marion there and was constrained, in order to get rid of her, to give her a kiss she exacted as a token of full forgiveness.

At this interesting moment the door opened and Fauret, with popping eyes, beheld the two.

Shortly after Paul was notified of his dismissal.

Distracted over the loss of his position and his fiancee, he decided to enlist as a soldier. Marion, hearing of this resolve, immediately became a member of the hospital corps as a nurse.

When, on the evening of departure for the front, Paul suddenly came face to face with the Red Cross nurse and discovered her to be Marion, the fascinating and persistent heiress to many millions, he finally appreciated the fact that Felix's judgment was, after all, the best, and folded her in his arms.

THE WOLF'S PREY (Warner's Features).—Estelle Barclay was a pastmistress of the art of "using" men. She did not draw the line at Morton, in spite of the fact that he was a valuable ally in her various operations concerned with the mulcting of men dazzled by her charms.

But Morton did not suspect what was going on in the inner chambers of that crafty head of hers—until Count Ermond called on her. It was well enough for Estelle to "kid him along" and "get" all she could—he himself shared in the spoils, as a faithful confederate and "steerer." To allow him to visit her in the privacy of her apartment, however, did not suit him at all. Fact is, he liked Estelle far too much for that.

Morton was jealous. Estelle saw it the moment they met after the count's departure. She needed Morton's assistance. He must not know that the count had lost his head to the extent of offering to marry her—nor that she was not such a fool as to overlook such a chance to revel in his wealth.

Morton thought he was dealing a master blow at any lingering affection she might cherish for the titled victim when he told her of the existence of a wife and child. The sudden pallor that overspread her features he counted as proof of this theory. But Estelle paled only because of the obstacle the presence of these two—mother and child—presented in her scheme of things. The one could be eliminated by divorce, but the child—an heir to the Ermond fortune? That would never do.

For she and Morton had planned a master coup. Ermond was to die, mysteriously assassinated, after she had gotten her clutches on his fortune and evidence of sufficiently strong fibre to prove her mistress and heir.

So, after she had allayed the jealous Morton's forebodings, she impressed on him the necessity of the child's removal. Morton found the job not so easy, for the count had not taken his wife to the big embassy ball, a circumstance he had counted on. He did not suspect that the count had gone with Estelle, for Estelle had not told him. It was not a part of Estelle's scheme to do so. For that night the count was to be assassinated according to the original arrangement of which he knew, and Estelle was there, if possible, to save him. She had desire rather to have him live, for he would be useful in introducing her into a mighty promising set, should future exercise of her guile be necessary.

The baby having been given into the hands of a seaman to dispose of, the count having been only slightly wounded and consequently having extended her future oportunity to "play her game" while tenderly nursing him, Estelle was very well satisfied. Only the obnoxious Morton was the one dissonant note in her happiness. So, as soon as he was able to be moved, she went away with the count and married him.

Morton wandered up to the box office and bought a stall at the Circus Renz. It was twelve years since he had seen Estelle. Since that day his predatory record had well made up the difference represented by Estelle's withdrawal from "deeds that are dark and crimes that are rare." He had come to be known as The Wolf.

The Wolf discovered new prey at the circus. As the victim-to-be selected Germaine, the equestrienne. His object was merely sport, so he counted on an easy enlistment of interest. But Germaine sent his card and gift back with a brief note. "Germaine accepts neither gifts nor invitations."

That night, by hoodwinking the driver of Germaine's taxi, he was able to secrete himself in its depths. Germaine did not see him as she entered. When she recovered from the stupor of the anaesthesia later she was in Morton's bedroom.

Gruber, the circus manager, anxious over Germaine's non-appearance at her hotel, whither he and Germaine's intended, a handsome circus rider had gone to celebrate Germaine's engagement to the horseman at a little intimate supper, traced her to Morton's apartments. As he broke down the door and rescued Germaine, Morton recognized him as the sailor whom he had instructed to kill the baby. He was about to gloat over his discovery and make it serve him to free himself from his predicament, when Gruber also recognized him.

Gruber told him who Germaine was. Then he shot him in a duel.

A letter in the dead man's pocket established Germaine's relationship, and when the father was notified, Estelle, who had now grown to love the Count, paid her penalty. The Count joined the daughter, who remained with the circus, where she had found good friends and happiness, and the Countess, turned from the house and left to her fate, in spite of frantic pleadings for forgiveness, became one of the many submerged of whose existence society knows nothing.

THE LITTLE REBEL (Warner's Features).—"Although we must be enemies for awhile," Sally read, "I will come to you as soon as the war is over and ask you the question in my heart."

Sally then turned her attention to Belle and her luggage.

Sally and Belle were daughters of the Southland. Therefore, Jim Holly's reference to "enemies" in the letter, which Belle brought her in coming to spend a few weeks with her, was to be construed as meaning that her beau had joined the army of the North. Sally deplored this, for her father was General Warren of the Confederate Army and she herself was devotedly as a Southerner in her sympathies.

Yet, when shortly after the arrival of Belle her love for Jim Holly was put to a test, her Southern sympathies became a secondary consideration.

Holly, because of his daring, was sent by his commander to penetrate the Confederate lines and secure information as to the next move contemplated by General Warren's division. Blackening face and hands and attiring himself in the dilapidated garments of a plantation hand, he mounted a mule and, in sight of the enemy's lines, goaded the animal into a run.

Holly passed by the outpost with their guffaws ringing in his ears.

Divesting himself of the disguise, Holly found it necessary, in order to gain admittance to the conference of General Warren's staff, to eliminate the sentinel who stood guard at the flaps of the general's tent. A blow on the head, before the man could turn to discover his presence, and the work was done. Dragging the inert form into the brush, Holly appropriated the uniform and cap and in a few minutes had taken a position where every word so valuable to his cause could be overheard with ease.

General Warren summoned the sentry to come before him for instructions.

"I thought the sentry was bearded," one of his staff vouchsafed, as he studied Holly's face.

"So he was," confirmed the general. "What's the meaning of this?"

Holly had reached the open flap of the tent by this time. In a moment he had vanished. He eluded the outposts and made for a house nearby, in hope of shelter. Even as he recognized it as General Warren's mansion and sought to turn away, the sounds of pursuit reached him. There was no time to spare. He swung himself through an open window.

Before him stood Sally.

"Quick, hide me, I am followed!"

And Sally, already hearing the heavy steps of booted men on the veranda, indicated the nearest object offering shelter—the dress shape on which she had draped flowered material for a crinoline. She barely had time to arrange the dress before an aide of General Warren stepped in.

The aide left shortly after. Evidently Sally's statement that she had seen nothing of the fugitive sufficed. But her agitated manner had not escaped the officer, and he returned by another door to see Holly emerging from his cramped hiding-place.

The iron discipline of war imposed one of its sternest mandates on General Warren when he presided at the court martial which condemned Holly, whom he recognized as his daughter's beau, to death for espionage.

While Holly lingered, locked in a room in the Warren mansion, awaiting the day of execution, General Warren was called away to attend a conference of the general staff at the commander-in-chief's headquarters. That gave Sally the chance she had been praying for. She had not forgotten the trap door under the carpet of the room above Holly's; she wondered if her father had.

Need it be said that all turned out well? Of course, Holly was assisted to freedom via the trap door, but what is more, Sally went with him, the military pass and a disguise for Holly being valuable aids in their decampment, and their destination was the nearest minister. The Northern general promoted Holly; the Southern general forgave Sally. To-day they live happily at the old Warren place and of evenings delight in recounting to the young ones the story of the crinoline and the trap door.

RASTUS' RABID RABBIT HUNT (Animated Cartoon, by J. R. Bray—Dec.).—Mrs. Rastus Lazybones, seeing Christmas approaching and the larder empty, compels her shiftless blacker half to bestir himself and go out and shoot something. So Rastus grabs his "ole muzzle loader" and departs prepared to shoot anything that will grace the pot.

Lucy Cottontail, the rabbit, is scared up by old Caesar, the darkie's "houn dawg," and decides that it's her move and move she does with speed. After a merry chase the rabbit seeks refuge in a hole. When Caesar, under the urging of his master, tries to dig her out, she promptly makes use of another entrance to her home and exits with rapidity.

Numerous funny adventures happen to Rastus and his dog, one of them being that he finds his head to be considerably harder than a hornet's nest and in consequence suffers from a swelled head.

Finally, after old Caesar is thoroughly disgusted, Rastus makes a wonderful shot which loads him down with game, insures a warm welcome from his spouse and a magnificent Christmas dinner.

THE THREE OF US (Rolfe—Dec. 14).—Rhy MacChesney and her two brothers, Clem and Sonnie, live with their father and servant, Maggie, in a small boom mining town in Colorado. The boom has passed to the camps further on, leaving their little camp practically deserted. Rhy still has faith in the claim her father worked up to the time he was killed, some five years before, but her brother hates the life of the camp, and wants to sell for what they can get and go back to New York, where he feels he can have a chance to make something of himself.

Their neighbor across the street is Lewis Beresford, whose obvious mission in the camp is one of pleasure, but who is in reality a mining expert, connected with big mining interests. He has ingratiated himself into the affection of the people of this little camp, and shows a great liking for Rhy and her brothers. Steve Towney, the former mine superintendent for "The Three of Us," is in love with Rhy and is jealous of Beresford, as he has been accepted as suitor for Rhy's hand, up to the time of Beresford's coming.

Mr. and Mrs. Bix, Rhy's closest friends in the camp, give a Hallowe'en dinner, which is to be the biggest event of the year. On the day that the dinner is to be given, Steven strikes, by accident, mineral. This assures the success of the mine on which he holds an option, and which adjoins "The Three of Us." Overjoyed, he rushes to Rhy to tell the good news, informing her it will be impossible for him to attend the Bix dinner, as his option expires the next day at noon. Rhy confesses her love for him, and asks him to wait until next morning. She will then go with him. He consents, giving her the option and samples of ore.

Clem overhears the conversation. He is bribed by Beresford to reveal it. The latter thus has an opportunity to make an attempt to gain possession of the mine. He is at the recording office waiting to establish a claim the moment that the option to Towney's mine expires. But Rhy saves the mine and proves her loyalty to Steve by a thrilling ride over the mountains. This is shown in a series of exciting pictures. A great explosion for the breaking of ground for a smelter for the two sucessful mines ends the picture.

SPRINGTIME (Dec. 28).—Madeline De Valette is betrothed to her father's cousin, Raoul De Valette, arrangements having been made when she was but a child. Valette requests his cousin's presence at his home to be presented to his fiancee. Raoul has been carrying on a love affair with L'Acadienne, a beautiful Creole who loves him devotedly. Much against his wishes, he is compelled to leave L'Acadienne. In spite of her pleadings and threats, he sets out for the Valette home. Her jealousy prompts her to follow Raoul and disclose their love affair to his fiancee's father, and thus prevent the marriage. Madeline is in the springtime of her youth. She is fully aware of her coming marriage with Raoul, but the realization of what it means does not occur to her. She has been rehearsed daily to prepare for her first meeting with her fiance. Raoul finally arrives at the Valette home. Although disappointed, she accepts Raoul, as a duty to her father, whose earnest wish is that she shall marry a Val De Valette.

At this time the United States is at war, and there is a call for volunteers. Wolf, a backwoodsman, has been recruiting a company of citizens to help Andrew Jackson to fight the enemy at New Orleans. Gilbert Seele, whose father owns the estate adjoining the Valette's has enlisted, unbeknown to his father, who has opposed his going away.

Gilbert's father, who has purchased most of the Valette property, learning of Valette's poverty, desires to buy the Valette home. In spite of their previous business transactions, Valette and Steele are not on friendly terms. Steele sends Gilbert to Valette to negotiate the sale of Valette's home. While there, Gilbert meets Madeline. He immediately falls in love with her, and she, in her innocence returns it.

Valette is angry at Gilbert for daring to expect love from a lady who was already betrothed. He also refuses to listen to Steele's proposition to buy his home. Gilbert is ordered from the house, enraged at the harsh treatment accorded him. Madeline, who fears that Gilbert is angry at her, runs after him to explain. She is unable to overtake him, but the thought of never seeing him again terrifies her and she continues to follow Gilbert.

Gilbert is to join the recruits at sundown. He secretly leaves home, and Madeline, arriving there, finds him gone, but she does not give up her march. In the meantime, L'Acadienne has arrived, and meeting Raoul, she threatens to expose him. Raoul manages to pursuade her to remain silent by telling her that his marriage with Madeline will not part them. This satisfies her.

Raoul, seeing his opportunity for breaking the betrothal, asserts that Valette could not expect him to marry Madeline now. Valette allows him to depart. He is immediately joined by L'Acadienne and they return to New Orleans. Madeline's condition is serious. Her mind is afflicted by the shock, but her father does not relent, declaring that her condition is her punishment.

Crawley's report is soon found to be false for Gilbert, Wolf and the recruits return. They have been victorious. Crawley, fearing Wolf's and the people's wrath, seeks aid from Father O'Mara, who promptly hands him over to Wolf and the people who are searching for him. Crawley receives a just punishment. Gilbert learns of Madeline's condition, and efforts are made to recover her reason. A plan is decided on, the result of which causes Madeline's recovery. Valette, learning the real facts, offers his sanction to the betrothal of Madeline and Gilbert.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode Seven).—Dore secures a room for Ruth in the same hotel where he is stopping in San Francisco and borrows some clothing for her, pending a trip to the shopping district. In order to take her mind off her experience, Dore takes Ruth on a trip to Cliff House. The trip and accompanying dinner take the greater part of the evening and upon her return Ruth goes down the hall into her room. Dore is inserting the key into the lock of his room down the hall when he hears Ruth scream. Running into her room he sees a figure crawling out on the fire escape. In their absence Wilkerson, by bribes and threats of exposure, has engaged Sam Pell, an ex-second story man and hotel worker, to make a further attempt to recover the deeds of "The Master Key" mine.

Pell, by following Dore and Ruth, has learned their room number. He had about completed his night's work when Ruth and Dore returned and interrupted him. Dore fiercely pursued the second-story worker across the roof of the hotel, cornering him behind the great chimneys. Ruth, following closely after, witnesses the struggle between the two men.

Pell has about overcome Dore when another figure crawls up the fire escape. It is Tom Kane, who has returned to San Francisco to report to Dore the distress among the miners of "The Master Key" workings. Tom immediately turns the tide of battle by drawing a gun on Pell. The slippery second-story man, however, eludes both Dore and Kane. Just as he reaches the edge of the roof, Dore again catches him and throws him so heavily that the criminal falls over the roof to the street below and is killed.

Unnoticed by Dore, Kane or Ruth, Pell had skillfully thrown the deeds down the inner "well" of the hotel. Upon the arrival of hotel employes and the police, Pell's body is searched but no trace of the deeds is obtained. The police recognize Pell as an old criminal, and Dore's story is accepted without question. After a short investigation the police permit Dore and Ruth to leave.

Kane assures Ruth that things are "going alone fine" at the mine but secretly admits to Dore that the men are out of work and that there is extreme suffering among them. Wilkerson's man, Tubbs, has discharged Kane and taken things at the mine into his own hands. Dore at once realizes that something must be done to prevent Wilkerson from ruining the property through his hirelings.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode Eight).—As a matter of form, John Dore is arrested for the death of Pell. Everett goes with him to arrange for his release on bail. Ruth is left in the care of Tom Kane. Kane tells her that the miners are out of work and threatened with starvation. Ruth listens sympathetically as Kane tells her how he opened the cook house to the wives of the miners and supplied them with food. She is pleased to learn that when the engineer interfered he was only saved from being mobbed by Kane, although Kane could not stop the miners from running the engineer out of camp. These events, Kane explains, made him resolve to go to John and Ruth to obtain their assistance in raising funds to help the starving people.

Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell learn of the death of Pell and decide to forge a note, supposedly from Dore, asking Ruth to visit him at the jail. Drake, disguised as a chauffeur, takes the note and after getting Ruth in the cab is to take her to a deserted part of town, where Wilkerson will meet him and thus secure the deeds. Ruth shows the note to Kane. The old miner is suspicious and when she leaves he accompanies her. When the cab stops, Wilkerson appears and threatens Ruth, but Kane defeats their purpose and has Drake arrested for attempted abduction. Wilkerson escapes.

In the meantime, an ashman cleaning in the alley at the rear of the hotel, finds the deeds and takes them home. He advertises his find, and Wilkerson, seeing the "ad," compels the maid to disguise and go for the papers. The ashman is suspicious at first, but after she offers him a sum of money, he forgets his scruples and delivers them to her.

Dore is released on bail and coming to the hotel finds Ruth has gone. The clerk informs him of her departure and shows Dore the note she had received. He is immediately suspicious. While he is deciding on a plan of action, Ruth and Kane come in and tell of their experiences. Everett is nearby reading the papers, when he suddenly shows them the ashman's advertisement. All go to the address mentioned in the advertisement, but find that Wilkerson's emissary has forestalled them. Ruth breaks down and the doctor advises them to take her to the southern part of the state for a change of climate.

Wilkerson, Mrs. Darnell and the maid have all disguised themselves and secured tickets to Los Angeles via boat. They get aboard safely and find that Dore, Ruth and their party are on the same boat. Ruth's party, however, do not recognize Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell on account of their disguises.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

After years of study on theatre chair usage these men backed by the vast facilities and MANUFACTURING ECONOMIES of (REALLY) the largest and most complete theatre chair factory in existence, have now with their combined expert knowledge designed and constructed a complete line of chairs embodying a principle that no other theatre chair on the market has. As a result THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS' worth of machinery will be discarded. More new machinery, dies and patterns, together with a new building addition to our large plants, is necessary for the manufacture of these chairs.

Before purchasing investigate what has caused us to spend a fortune to get these results. Your purchase is sure to be:

Remember that MinA Films are no haphazard catch-as-catch-can films rushed out pellmell to grab off some of the coin loosened up by the present day craze for comedies.

MinA Films represent a serious effort to produce the finest one reel comedies possible.

Work was started on MinA Films months ago, when the great demand for comedies was just commencing. Since that time many producers have entered the field with hurry-up brands of comedies. But the makers of realized that comedies are beyond comparison the most difficult pictures to produce. So they specialized on comedies, and held back MinA Films until months of study and experiment had developed a system of production that guarantees sure fire results.

MinA Films employ special scenario writers, special directors, special camera men, special comedians, specialists in every department. MinA Films are being exploited for the exhibitor through the news columns of nearly seven hundred papers in all parts of the country, thus creating popular interest which is directly connected with your theatre through beautiful one and three sheet posters.

The fact that MinA Films are included in the licensed program should convince you of their sound, reliable quality.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Selig Program for the Year 1915

A HOST OF HIGH CLASS PICTURE PLAY PRODUCTIONS
IN PREPARATION TO MAINTAIN THE SELIG STANDARD

Selig Spectacular Specials

Exhibitors can expect during the year 1915, in addition to the Selig Diamond Specials and the Regular Weekly Program, several gigantic, spectacular Specials, release dates for which will be announced later. Among these big releases for early in the new year will be the following:

"THE CARPET FROM BAGDAD" (5 reels), a spectacular Oriental adventure story made from the popular novel, written by HAROLD MacGRATH, and featuring KATHLYN WILLIAMS, CHARLES CLARY, WHEELER OAKMAN, GUY OLIVER, EUGENIE BESSERER and others.

"THE ROSARY," a great multiple reel picture filmed from the intensely dramatic and soul-stirring drama written by Edward E. Rose, made world-famous by the all-star theatrical company of Rowland & Clifford, featuring KATHLYN WILLIAMS and her supporting company.

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE," filmed from that unequalled and startling drama written by Charles Rann Kennedy, with modern Christianity as its theme, and in which TYRONE POWER, that leading dramatic star, who carried the original stage production to a pinnacle of exalted success, will be featured.

"THE NE'ER DO WELL," a story of adventure in Panama from REX BEACH'S great romantic novel, in which KATHLYN WILLIAMS and her supporting company will be featured.

"A TEXAS STEER" (5 reels), an elaborate picture-play made from that hilariously popular and ever delightful CHARLES HOYT comedy, featuring TYRONE POWER, as "Maverick Brander."

"THE CRISIS," by WINSTON CHURCHILL, one of the famous books of a decade and which tells one of the most thrilling stories of Civil War adventure ever written, will be reproduced in motion pictures in an elaborate and spectacular manner. The release of "THE CRISIS" will inaugurate an epoch in picture-play making.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Selig Program for the Year 1915

Selig Diamond Specials

Exhibitors who have found the three-reel SELIG DIAMOND SPECIALS profitable, will be gratified to learn that the ones to be released during the coming months will prove to be even better.

In the three big Selig Studios there are in work at the present time, a series of SELIG DIAMOND SPECIALS (approximately three reels each), which will be released at frequent intervals. These DIAMOND SPECIALS are being filmed along the same lines that have given distinction to Selig productions. The scenarios for these DIAMOND SPECIALS are based upon the most celebrated novels and stage productions which have become popular during the past few months. They will be released through the Special Feature Department of the General Film Company.

Selig Regular Weekly Program

During the past year, the REGULAR SELIG WEEKLY PROGRAM has consisted of seven releases per week (including the Monday and Thursday release of the HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL).

The SELIG REGULAR WEEKLY PROGRAM for the year 1915, will include multiple reel releases of such a high character and superior quality that actual competition will be practically eliminated.

There has been such a demand for the SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO WILD ANIMAL PICTURES that special efforts are to be made for the release of a greater number on the REGULAR WEEKLY PROGRAM.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial

For the coming year, the twice-a-week service of the HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL will be increased and extended to an even greater condition of efficiency. Additional bold, clever and intrepid camera men have been sent to the scenes of war, so that there are now experienced news picture gatherers with every important division of each of the warring nations in camp, in trenches, on battleships, with aviation and balloon forces, etc.

As heretofore, the HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL will be released for the benefit of exhibitors every MONDAY and every THURSDAY.

The Strange Case of Princess Khan

Written by James Oliver Curwood

An unusually clever and engrossing picture-play dealing with Hindu occultism and mysticism, which is exposed by a clever investigator. He finds a Hindu princess kept in a state of hypnotic trance by a charlatan whom he foils and exposes. The pictures are most realistic, one scene representing the immersion of an automobile with its occupants through a broken bridge into a river. There is fighting; a hot automobile pursuit and sufficient love making. STELLA RAZETO, GUY OLIVER and JACK McDONALD play the leading roles.

To the Editor

We disagree with you when you say that the exhibitor does not believe in house organs, Mr. Editor of the Moving Picture World. Thousands of exhibitors believe in The Universal Weekly (our 40-page house organ), because it has given them some mighty interesting and valuable inside facts on the picture business. One exhibitor said it had shown him how to make a thousand dollars that he would not have made without reading The Universal Weekly.

The Universal's house organ is a great big help to every exhibitor who reads it, whether he uses Universal films or not. It helps him in his advertising. It gives him some corking good pointers on how to run his theatre. It tells him of big changes about to come in the moving picture business. It prints things that you can't very well print, because you are compelled by the very nature of your business to be neutral on certain disputes between different classes of film manufacturers.

If every exhibitor who reads your paper will send us the name and address of his theatre (no matter whether he ever expects to use Universal films or not) we will give him a three months' free trial subscription to The Universal Weekly and we will promise him that he will find interesting AND HELPFUL stuff in it. Let him be the judge whether The Universal Weekly (even though it is a house organ) is fit to be believed! He doesn't risk a penny, except the one cent that it will cost him to buy a postal card, put the name and address of his theatre on it, and send it to the Editor of The Universal Weekly, sixteen hundred Broadway, in New York City.

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY NEWS

A page of vitally important news published by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York, for the interest of all exhibitors

WEEK OF JAN. 9th NEW YORK CITY 1915

The Universal Weekly Prints the Best News Every Week

Thousands of Exhibitors Read It Regularly. Why Don't You?

THE popularity of The Universal Weekly—The Universal Film Mfg. Co.'s big 40-Page House Organ—is growing like wild fire. Exhibitors are learning every day that the real news printed without fear or favor is found every week in the Universal Weekly.

Being swayed neither by politics nor business conditions as other Film Publications are necessarily bound to be, The Universal Weekly tells the whole truth exactly as Exhibitors want to know things and conditions as they really are.

The great "U" Weekly has become the Exhibitors' bible. They all swear by it, not at it. Every page is crammed chock full of snappy news. In every paragraph and in every line there's something of commercial interest to you. Sometimes the Universal Weekly treads on somebody's toes but when it does tread it is for the good of all concerned. From cover to cover the "U" Weekly is the biggest thing in the Moving Picture business today and if you are not getting it, you are missing out on the real happenings of the film world.

By special arrangement we have made a most unusual concession to those who do not receive the "U" Weekly regularly. Note below—then simply make a request as suggested. We will do the rest.

To Exhibitors—

In order that you may become acquainted with The Universal Weekly, we will place your name on our mailing list for 3 months FREE OF CHARGE. Put your name on a postal card with a request and the "U" Weekly will begin to reach you regularly. Remember—3 months free of charge. Write today to The Editor, Universal Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York.

BIG U

THE Big U brand has jumped into immediate and immense popularity. Big U starts out with two companies. At the head of one will be Sydney Ayres, who has recently joined the Universal, and who has always been considered one of the topmost directors and players of western drama on the screen. He will both direct and act in the new brand. His first picture will be "On Desert Sands," which will be released on January 7.

The other company will have at its head one of the most versatile actors in the world of motion pictures—Murdock MacQuarrie. Mr. MacQuarrie has been acting in Nestor dramas for the last two years and has done much to make them famous.

L-KO-3 reel farce comedy—"After her Millions"—Jan. 31st. Most uproarious, side splitting scream getter ever shown on the screen.

You simply can't stop laughing. By far funnier than any comedy yet shown on the Universal's wonderful 1915 program.

"AFTER HER MILLIONS"—another L-KO screen farce shows Billie Ritchie and Pathe Lehrman at their best. It's so screamingly funny it will send audiences into spasms of side-splitting laughter. Certain Censor says: "Never laughed so much in all my life." Were one of the so-called feature producers to put out a 3-reel comedy of this class you would have to pay double the price for it, yet you get it on the regular Universal Program at not one cent extra cost, and many more to come in 1915 as good and even better than this one. More crackerjack pictures are ready for the Universal's Big 1915 Program than even the most sanguine Exhibitor could possibly wish for. Book this 3-reel L-KO immediately.

More wonderful feature productions on next week's Universals, making good our claim to a bigger and better program for 1915 than ever before.

"THE MILLIONAIRE ENGINEER," featuring King Baggot—Jan. 29th, 1915, in one of those genuine high class IMP pictures that surpasses even the top-notch standard set by this great Company. IMP pictures have won the hearts of hundreds of thousands of people all over the country, and "The Millionaire Engineer" is one of the IMP'S best. Book it. Other high class multiple reel features on the Universal's next week's program as follows, and each superior to the usual so-called feature productions, procurable elsewhere—GOLD SEAL—Tuesday, Jan. 26th, 1915—"The Madcap Queen," featuring Frances Ford and Grace Cunard (2-reel drama)—Wonderful production. REX—Jan. 28th, 1915—"The Measure of a Man," featuring Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney. VICTOR—Jan. 25th, 1915, "His Guardian Angel," featuring Mary Fuller and Chas. Ogle (2-reel drama), truly a feature creation. LIFE—2-reel Bison drama—Saturday, Jan. 30th, featuring Cleo Madison and Joe King.

Superfine subjects on the week of Jan. 25th program. Book them.

ESSANAY NOW TOPS LIST OF PHOTOPLAY PRODUCERS

Makers of Famous Indian Brand of Film Dramas and Comedies Lead All Rivals

USE WORLD'S GREAT STARS

Best Known Actors and Actresses Seen; Anderson, Bushman, and Chaplin Lead

Exhibitors in this country and Europe learned this week that the Essanay Company of Chicago, makers of the famous Indian brand plays, now leads the entire world in the production of film dramas and comedies. No other company, it is stated, is now doing a business proportionate with Essanay.

Since the beginning of photoplays in this country Essanay has been striving for the best—and has been getting it, no matter what the cost. "Almost as good" or "pretty fair" have never been good enough for the Indian brand makers. Before a play leaves the plant it must receive the approval of a big staff of critics. In this way it is impossible at the present time for a mediocre production to be released.

One of the reasons for the present top-notch position of Essanay is the method originated by the company of adapting the best and highest class magazine stories to the film. As a result of this policy agreements have been reached with Collier's Weekly, Smart Set, McClure's, Munsey's Magazines, Street & Smith publications and Short Stories. In this way only the best products of the best writers are produced. To the list of world-famous photoplay stars headed by G. M. Anderson, the famous "Broncho Billy," and Francis X. Bushman, the company recently added the name of Charles Chaplin, who is the funniest and highest-priced comedian in the world. Mr. Chaplin is now working on a series of new Essanay comedies.

With the Essanay company leading everything in the photoplay line, exhibitors everywhere are flooding the General Film offices with applications for bookings.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic Releases)

THE BABY'S RIDE (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, Dec. 29.—An interesting story of a lost child told in a new way. Fairly well produced.

VENGEANCE IS MINE (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 3.—A strong story of moral appeal. It might have been better presented, but is nevertheless a good offering. The wronged girl takes vengeance into her own hands, but is at last moved to relent by the biblical injunction that "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; I will repay."

ETHEL GETS THE EVIDENCE (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 3.—No. 14 of the popular "Bill the Office Boy" stories of Paul West, featuring Fay Tincher as Ethel the stenographer. Ethel secures the needed evidence in a divorce case in an amusing way. This is one of the best of the "Bill" pictures.

HIS LESSON (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, Jan. 5.—An interesting story of a ward politician who for a time forgets his sweetheart of the tenements, but at last learns that she alone is faithful.

BRANCH 37 (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Friday, Jan. 8.—A young girl in a branch laundry is attacked by a robber and finds her rescuer and future husband in the person of the mounted policeman of the neighborhood. Not as well produced as it might have been.

THREE BROTHERS (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 10.—A story of Canada in which the love of three brothers for one girl results in the defeat of treachery and the victory of innocence and virtue. A different sort of story well acted and photographed.

Facts and Comments

THE revival of the Prohibition movement as evidenced by the remarkable vote in Congress is causing much comment and discussion in the daily press. Various causes are assigned for this remarkable renewal of an agitation which it had been believed had almost died out. It seems very plain to us that the Prohibition movement is under no small obligation to the motion picture, which has depopularized the saloon and has established an entirely different "poor man's club." Vast numbers of voters who looked askance at Prohibition because it would, in their opinion, deprive them of certain pleasures and comforts to be found in saloons, now have discarded this belief and are either hostile or at least indifferent to the saloon. Thus has the motion picture helped to create a public sentiment which will in the end be far more effective than laws enacted by well-meaning minority reformers. We hold no brief for Prohibition or against it, but we believe that the effect of the motion picture as a mighty public influence ought to receive recognition, or at least proper attention from both the friends and the foes of the movement to make Uncle Sam's entire family total abstainers.

READERS of these columns will remember with what indignation the New York World in all its morning and evening editions inveighed against the motion picture as a promoter of lurid melodrama and filmed dime novels. Probably to teach by example as well as by precept and to discourage the dime novel style of entertainment generally our esteemed namesake and contemporary has arranged what it chastely calls a "movie-scenario-contest." We apologize for printing the first word even in quotation marks. This contest has resulted in wonderful and fearful pictures, accompanied by texts which, as the reader will see, are wholly free from any suggestion of the lurid dime novel. We quote from a recent "movie story" (venia sit verbo), of the Evening World: "As the tallest ghost cries: 'Strike,' Dick's legs are struck from under him. Dick's orders had been to go down into the cellar, and he obeys them. A weird wail rising and falling in tone and volume, sends chills creeping up and down his spine. A pale, blue nebulous light is growing into form, it ascends and spreads and resolves itself into a tall and terrible figure, which advances. Somewhere a clock booms 12. The figure points up. 'It is the appointed hour,' it says in sepuchral tones. Continued tomorrow." We are in Part Three of "The Haunted Cellar." We cannot help congratulating the World on its honest and sincere efforts to keep the motion picture away from the taint of the dime novel. This dignified and uplifting story being printed on the "Home and Comic Page" makes the work of our esteemed contemporary doubly effective and admirable.

THERE is a sharp division of opinion among exhibitors concerning the release of serial stories. There is a majority probably in favor of the serial story, but there seems to be a vigorously dissenting minority. There is little doubt that the early serials proved profitable all around. Nor can it be said that the popularity of the serial picture has been exhausted or even seriously impaired. The great and only danger lies in an overproduction of serials, and this is a very real danger. The main objection to serials has been overcome by making each separate instalment a story which can be understood by the patrons, even if they have seen no other part of the serial. The eagerness of newspapers to promote the popularity of a serial is another factor in its favor.

NOT long ago we had just cause for complaint because motion pictures were almost ignored by the daily press, today we often suffer either from overattention or from the wrong kind of attention. On the other hand, there are notable examples of a sane and dignified treatment of the motion picture. As the motion figures not only as a good source of news, but as a factor in every phase of our civilization, it is clear that the press owes it a great debt, and only fulfills its duty by giving it intelligent notice and ample space.

IN an article printed in the newspaper on which she is employed when not censoring films, Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, the woman member of the Ohio Board of Censors, freely approves of her own and the board's work. She makes the remarkable discovery that "many of the exhibitors and exchange men are still in favor of censorship." Mrs. Miller must have sources of information which are entirely closed or unknown to other mortals.

Old Year Stupidity

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

STRANGE to say, quite a number of professional writers, men and women of cultivation, are among those who seem utterly unable to grasp the full significance of moving pictures. This cannot be ascribed to their lack of intelligence, but rather to habits of thought. They have accepted the established arts, have possibly studied pictured delineations from the glass age to Nell Brinkley and the drama from Aristotle to George Cohan, yet they seem to have no mental grip upon what is developing right under their eyes. Listen to distinguished Ellen Key.

"It is on the picture theaters that time and money are now squandered. Even when the program is good, observation is blunted and obscured by a number of rapidly succeeding impressions. The spectator becomes habituated to fleeting and undigested ideas, to the listless reception and speedy forgetting of matter with which he is crammed full without any personal co-operation, without any expression of his intellectual life; nay, without even retaining any clear image in his memory, much less any ideal or emotion."

To clarify the fifty-word sentence of Ellen Key, we see moving pictures without perceiving much and retain nothing whatever. Such may also be the case with those who read her books. She is obviously talking about a few examples she has chanced to see while bustling around her village, not about the art itself, the art that can sing without lips or throat, that can paint without brush or pigment, that can speak without utterance, that can carry its story from one creative brain to millions of receptive ones without the use of words.

How poor are words! How can I use them to conjure up before your enraptured vision the sun-lit mountain crest, the nymph-haunted woods, the delicate tracery of flowers, the whispering meadows of waving grain, the cascades of rushing shadow and foam, the white crested waves running in from the storm to dash themselves into a million sparkling jewels? Where in the literature of ages, in two thousand years of drama, in all the world's art galleries can our eyes drink in the loveliness of Nature in her sweetest moods as in the art which "blunts and obscures observation by a number of rapidly succeeding impressions"? Oh, Ellen Key!

Ellen makes an unconscious admission by saying that critics may do much for moving pictures, but wanders away from her natural drift to an incomplete understanding of what she is writing about. She continues:

"Those films which give dramatic pictures of human life are artistically justifiable only when the course of their action is really suited to pantomime. But from a literary point of view every film must be unconditionally condemned which trespasses upon the works of great dramatists, those works in which a course of psychological development is revealed."

The other night I sat down in a small, dark exhibition room to watch a five-reel feature whose scenario, to the smallest detail of essential prop and costume change, through two hundred scenes, I had written in five days. A tremendously energetic director had visualized that scenario in fourteen days, including a trip to Florida with an entire company, and both he and I were on edge for the discovery of errors. Suddenly a sharp comment was made by one of the unseen spectators, and it met with a sharp retort. I clashed with the unseen critic, much to my regret when I found he was one of our greatest, if not our greatest stage playwright.

He was right in the detail he had in mind, and we readjusted it satisfactorily together later on, but I took this opportunity to maintain that rules of the older art could not be made to satisfactorily apply to moving pictures. He agreed after the discussion, being a man of rare intellectuality and keen perceptions, but I could not help thinking afterward that those of us who understand moving pictures have very little idea of how generally misunderstood is the art of their production. The stage story does not as a rule, develop by psychological means.

Go to a theater and note how the opening lines are devoted to showing a state of affairs from which the crisis develops, with glimpses of character in descriptive conversation. Subordinates expound on the character of principals before the latter are introduced. I am not criticising that method—it may perfectly suit the medium, but it reminds me very much of the old-fashioned circus, where the band and the actors all herald the approach of a star. That time-honored method may be used in adapting stage plays to screen purposes, but not with any degree of success. The only actors in a really great screen play who are well introduced to the audience are differentiated by self-revelation, by exhibiting their own mental workings, a psychological method pure and simple, Ellen Key and all others to the contrary notwithstanding.

I have a long list of such writers and their comments at my elbow, and the amazing thing about them as a whole is their stupidity, a dullness of perception, an inability to distinguish between an art and its examples. We all know that producers have been flooded with a lot of knock-kneed scripts from amateurs intent upon thrusting their personalities into view, unequipped with knowledge of intricate dramatic structure, uninformed as to methods of treatment, but we all realize that such specimens will go to the dust heap in open competition. The man who makes plays in 1915 will do so through creative imagination coupled with quality and force of constructive imagination.

In the hands of such artists, whatever their department in the composite production, moving pictures will become more than "sensational presentations to supply a wild-cat demand." They can even exhibit a metrical beauty of arrangement, like that of a poem, and provide a spiritual element of thought and passion, opening the minds and hearts of all who behold them, but never by theatrical inanities of method. They convey more delicately, by exquisite suggestion, almost like music, rather than by the artificial and arbitrary methods of theatricalism.

We are leaving Caliban for Ariel. Merely picturing movements of the body and limbs, or grimaces of the face, as interpreting ideas by pantomime, is far from being "the only suitable course of action," for moving pictures. The trend is toward more subtle means of interpretation, toward the infinite variety of idealization, for one of the greatest fascinations in watching a fine screen portrayal is that of mind scanning mind, of soul reading soul.

"These our actors
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air;
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inhabit, shall dissolve
And, like this unsubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made of."

A Little Homily on Prices

By W. Stephen Bush.

A WELL-KNOWN film man with lots of practical experience has come into the arena of price-discussion and has avowed himself as the enthusiastic friend of the ancient unit, i. e., THE NICKEL. He thinks that in essaying the higher flight the motion picture has tried to overleap its natural domain, which, according to our distinguished protagonist, is bounded on the east by a Nickel, on the west by Half a Dime, on the north by Five Cents, and on the south by the Same Small Sum. Pictures de luxe with orchestral music are, according to this authority, a departure from the natural and obvious destiny of the motion picture.

It is curious to note that the question of the price of admission into motion picture theaters has reached the editorial columns of some of the most prominent daily newspapers here in New York as well as in other cities. Less than four years ago the prevailing unit of five cents seemed immovably fixed in most theaters, and any agitation for higher prices would either have received no notice at all in the daily papers or would have been dismissed with a sneer or a cheap witticism.

I mention this only en passant and as one incontestable proof among others that the motion picture is not and cannot be confined within the narrow limits which some seek to assign to it. The espousal of the lowest possible price of admission by a man of practical experience is very significant. It cannot be dismissed lightly or dogmatically. The fact is that an immense lot of nonsense has been written on the price question. The emphatic dissent of a prominent film man will help to clear the atmosphere and the resultant discussion will, we hope, dissipate the banks of fog which have been permitted to enshroud the whole subject.

There is no doubt that the five and ten cent theater is here to stay and that it will continue to be stronger numerically than all of the high-priced houses put together. It is profitable to manufacturers to supply these houses, and there is no conceivable reason to anticipate that it will be otherwise in the future. It is all very well for some producers to toot the horn and emit blasts for higher admission. Unless they supplement these pronunciamentos by better pictures the blasts will simply die away on the circumambient atmosphere and mingle with the winds of the air. The Moving Picture World has always favored concentration on quality and has always held that the picture of quality properly presented will command a far higher price than five cents. This is our unqualified opinion today just as it was seven years ago. Without such pictures of quality, without proper presentation, without first-class houses no progress toward the top is possible and no increase of the price of admission is justifiable.

There are two great and gaping holes in the logic of our nickel champion. He denies the possibility of higher prices and he claims that pictures of the first class can be shown at a nickel with a profit. The facts are against him. Right at this moment there are motion picture theaters in almost every large city presenting de luxe pictures in a de luxe manner and getting de luxe prices. If there is any more conclusive proof than facts which may be verified within an hour the rules of evidence will have to be revolutionized.

The motion picture is capable of infinite variety. From the earliest days of its history mankind has insisted on dividing itself into various classes. Amusements have varied with taste and intelligence. Grand opera does not satisfy every segment of our population. The stage comes nearer to the goal, but does not quite reach it. Of all the forms of amusements known the screen alone is capable of satisfying every grade of intelligence and every variety of taste. Kinematography is the healthiest of trees. It has its roots deep in the soil and its topmost branches high in the air. The five and ten cent theater will, we are inclined to believe, continue to be the foundation of the industry. Numbers are decisive. There can be no doubt whatever that the audiences of the five and ten cent houses far outnumber the audiences of the houses charging more than ten cents.

The great strength of the picture after all is its democracy. Its popularity is derived primarily from the cheapness of the admission. There are, to be sure, no limits to its artistic development and there are no limits to its appeal. It will satisfy the most critical and fastidious as well as the most easy-going and careless audience. Because the foundation is sound and broad its growth toward higher aims is doubly assured.

To say that the best pictures may be profitably exhibited at five cents is a grievous error. Any one who is at all familiar with the cost of the negative of a first-class picture needs but apply a little arithmetic to convince himself. There is a large and, we are happy to say, a growing percentage of the public which is entirely willing to pay the higher price. It would be a serious blow to the industry if we stopped building toward the top. It would hurt the prestige of the picture beyond the possibility of repair in many years. Happily we can do justice to all demands. The danger of a shortage of supply for the five and ten cent houses is very improbable. The danger is all the other way. Even now the men who want to specialize in quality programs have to exercise their utmost ingenuity to keep up a high grade of quality. Weak spots on even the best feature programs are notorious.

One of the local dailies, discussing the situation, says: ".... It is not strictly true that the patrons of motion pictures are largely those who, in the absence of pictures, would seek entertainment in the theater galleries. The moving pictures are liked by everybody when they are good, though they are not always good by any means." Therein lies the kernel of the whole question: Everybody likes the pictures when they are good. As our contemporary points out, the patrons of the motion picture "include persons of all sorts and conditions, many who habitually pay five dollars apiece for seats at the opera." In other words, the field is wide enough to embrace everybody and the question of price regulates itself with the varying quality of the picture.

The greatest mistake, and I might say the only mistake, the exhibitor can make in the fixing of his price of admission, is this: He cannot charge more than five cents when his show is not worth more or when his patrons cannot afford to pay more. He cannot afford to be influenced by generalities or by a sudden hue and cry for the increase of prices. There are thousands of exhibitors who might as well shut up their theaters as charge more than five cents. Among these thousands are some of the best men in the industry. The dangerous man is not he who runs a decent house for a nickel, but the man who gives the public more than it really wants and who charges five cents for a ten or twenty-five cent show simply because he thinks he can blot his competitor out of existence.

STAGED amid the crumbling monuments of ancient Rome and the magnificent piles of the modern capital, "The Eternal City," produced in eight parts by the Famous Players, will rank with the world's best kinematographic accomplishments. This adaptation of Hall Caine's famous book is a dramatic and spectacular triumph. Entering into its making is a combination of factors that is rare. In the first place, it is directed by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, a union of screen and stage authorities. Then there is a story of dramatic power, a human story, a story of the heart. It touches the lives of two children, a boy and a girl, and it follows these two into manhood and womanhood. In its course it comes in contact with the humble and the great, with the working forces of a nation and with the ruling forces; with church dignitaries, surrounded by all the panoply of exalted station and also revealed as men with human ties and animated by the same impulses as sway other men. Then there are the remarkable backgrounds, the sacred and impressive reminders of the glories of other ages and the architectural wonders erected by church and state of a later day.

Scene from "The Eternal City" (Famous Players).

To Pauline Frederick has been given the role of Donna Roma. Miss Frederick shows in strong contrast the two personalities—the butterfly, the favorite of the ruling statesman, and the woman who falls under the spell of a man who loves her. If in the beginning she fail to charm, if we see only the heartless woman, the known sinner against the conventions of society publicly uncovered to the sneers of the world and bent on revenge, all the more surely and effectively do we later feel the influence of the real woman when she finds herself. True it is that this is Miss Frederick's first appearance before the camera, but we have no outward indication of the fact. The superb artist stands out, and at no time more strongly than in the scene in her studio where David sits as a model for one of the apostles as he believes, for Judas Iscariot as she has told Bonelli. David is telling of his childhood, and in the story there enters a child, a little girl, in whom Roma gradually discovers herself. And this is but one of many.

Thomas Holding is David Rossi. Mr. Holding gives a fine, a finished, performance. His interpretation of the well-born man who devotes his life to the less fortunate is virile. There is in it the tenderness that goes with strength, the capacity for action that lies in the dreamer roused. It may be only a coincidence, but it is a noteworthy fact that the man much resembles the child David, which markedly contributes to the illusion. Frank Losee as Baron Bonelli does work that stands out, as do also Fuller Mellish, George Majeroni, John Clulow and J. Albert Hall. There is an unusually long cast, and it is a most competent one.

In the first part we delve deep into the heart of the story. Little David, the victim of an unspeakable padrone, in a snowstorm falls asleep on the doorstep of Dr. Roselli. Under the tattered coat is the squirrel, the only object of affection possessed by the child. The benevolent doctor takes David into the house and brings back the ebbing life. The squirrel is dead, and David weeps. Little Roma puts her hand on the ragamuffin's head and tries to console him. We have heart interest right here, and in abundance. It holds throughout the entire production.

Wonderfully effective are the scenes showing the Pope's jubilee—the great Plaza, the winding religious processions, the crowd listening to David Rossi, and the premier and his mistress on the balcony looking on. Most remarkable of all, however, are the views of the great public meeting in the Coliseum. One feels impelled to inquire if at any time, anywhere, has a dramatic subject been staged under such unique circumstances. The upper tiers of the immense roofless walls are lined with soldiers; down below, many hundreds and seemingly several thousand men are crowded about David Rossi as he tells what should be done to prevent the increase in taxation. It is all so strange as almost to seem uncanny. The dramatic appearance of Roma, determined to save from official assassination the man she had set out to destroy but instead had learned to love, brings us back to the story.

Scene from "The Eternal City" (Famous Players).

We have not space to enumerate the wealth of incident and action. The production has the merit of rising interest; the last third is the best of all. The scenes laid in the home of the Pope are treated with utmost reverence and with sure touch. The killing of Bonelli is devoid of gruesomeness. One rises at the conclusion of the performance feeling that he has seen a motion picture worth while—that he has looked upon something the memory of which will pleasantly remain with him.

In story "The Eternal City" is big. In production—with its historic backgrounds, its panorama of great monuments, shown to advantage in artistic photographic bits as well as in comprehensive whole; in its visualization of a literary work that seems bound to live; in the dramaturgic and histrionic skill displayed by its makers and actors—"The Eternal City" is great.

"CABIRIA" GOES TO LESSER FOR NORTHWEST.

A deal was consummated last week by Sol Lesser, of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, and Harry R. Raver which gives Lesser's office in Seattle the exclusive control of "Cabiria."

This new deal gives Lesser control of the states of California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Nevada and Arizona.

EVER since the announcement of the winners of the Evening Sun-Vitagraph scenario contest there has been pardonable interest in the trade at large to see the screened results of the wide-open competition. True it is that of the thousand-dollar winner among thirty-five hundred contenders for first honors much was expected. The showing of "The Sins of the Mothers" at the Vitagraph Theater in the week of December 27-January 2 would seem to demonstrate the success of the experiment from the viewpoint of the picture public. The story holds throughout its five reels. It is possible or probable that from some there will be a mild criticism to the effect that the production might have been sharpened somewhat by an elimination of one of the several avenues through which coursed the gambling mania of the young wife. Nevertheless, as said before, the picture holds; and holds through legitimate means—straight drama minus the spectacular or melodramatic. To be sure, there are a hotly contested horse race and a thrilling raid on a gambling house, a suicide and an accidental killing, but these are incidental seemingly, stones in the highway over which steadily drives the story of the woman with an irresistible appetite for gaming.

Scene from "The Sins of the Mothers" (Vitagraph).

Scene from "The Sins of the Mothers" (Vitagraph).

Miss Elaine Sterne, the authoress, has chosen for her theme a vice with the evils of which practically everybody has knowledge, either first or second hand. Which means, of course, her story is one in which the interest exists at the beginning—it is ready at hand. She has created a daughter of a suicide speculator and a bridge-playing mother, as girl and as wife unable to overcome the temptation to gamble. Aside from the tribulations flowing from this vice the home life of the young woman is ideal—and an indulgent husband is the big factor in it. Promises are made and broken, and forgiveness is sought and obtained. The contrition of the wife and the patience and leniency of the husband constitute one of the moving elements in the story.

Miss Stewart shows quality throughout her portrayal of the gambling young woman. She possesses unusual power in emotional situations—it is the power of the artist to transfer to other breasts the tumult that surges within her own. From the entrance of this very young player into the story as a girl leaving a convent to her death from a pistol-shot fired in a gambling house raid conducted by her own husband, her work is of uniform strength.

Mr. Williams has a role for which he is splendidly fitted. His playing is marked by fine discrimination; he obtains results by perfectly natural means—which is much more readily said than done. Mrs. Gordon's interpretation of the widow who pursues her bridge-playing propensities to the point of owning a fashionable gambling house reveals the self-control which is commonly attributed to those who are most successful in games of chance. This long-time screen player gives us of her best.

Miss Lee in the part of the temptress—the woman whose code is "Why not take a chance? You'll spend it anyway"—very successfully wins disapproval. It is an unpopular role, and she plays it as a temptress should. To Mary Maurice falls one of the big moments. The beloved veteran actress makes her part of the self-sacrificing servant stand out.

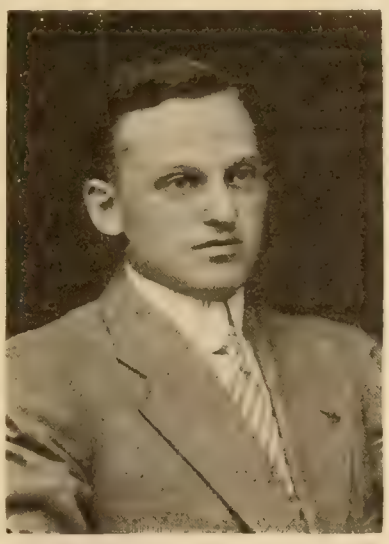
Paul Scardon, as the manager of Mrs. Raymond's gambling house and later the owner, makes a distinct hit in a cast of hits. His is an artistic delineation of the suave Latin and the cold-blooded gambler. Ralph Ince is more than the producer. It is he who so skillfully portrays the speculator suicide at the opening of the story.

The denouement is tragic. The death of the wife is sufficiently distressing without the final symbolic bit where the death's head claims the mother.

"The Sins of the Mothers" is a drama of power. Rare judgment has been displayed in the selection of players. The acting is of unusual quality. The staging and direction match. The costuming is notable.

Bernard Lamont, Daredevil

HE risks his life to put "punches" in the picture. That is the vocation of Bernard Lamont, once a newspaperman, but now a motion picture "daredevil"—for a suitable consideration. Lamont has but recently returned from California, where his favorite method of flirting with death was aviation. He did not state what particular stunts he performed with aeroplanes, but it may be reasonably assumed that he can "loop the loop," fly upside down, and do all of the rest of the fancy capers aviators put in the air these days. At any rate, he's here, not because he's here, but because he would like to make a deal with some enterprising picture producer who wants to put a few "daredevil" punches in his pictures.



Bernard Lamont.

Mr. Lamont has been through a variety of adventurous experiences in his time. Noteworthy among them was his commission by the Hearst newspapers to visit the islands off the west coast of Mexico which are inhabited by tribes of bloodthirsty Indians who live only as long as their hungry enemies will permit. These Indians are said to be cannibals, but Lamont concluded that his style of beauty was not sufficiently attractive to arouse in them a desire to feast off his carcass, so he took a chance, together with a note book and pencil, and went down among them for information. He was not eaten, else this item would never have been printed, and now he's looking for someone to put up the "stunt" that he will be afraid to do.

IN this eighth of "Olive's Opportunities," there is some attempt to construct a veritable play, and Mabel Trunnelle exhibits her charming personality and exquisite costumes in varied moods and shades, but the treatment by Ridgely counts most in the general sum of values. It is such treatment as makes us seriously doubt if we must go to real life for the fulfilment of our desires. Realism may be more convincing, if there is a point to be made, but it sounds no greater heart-depths than romance, and then it is only a fine correspondence of form and spirit to our ideals that is satisfying to what is artistic in human temperament.

Olive has a new mood, one helped along by the customary aphasia accident, and she gives forth an entirely new expression of her nature, one very much more in accord with what would be expected of a girl brought up in a gypsy camp. Whether or not she is a Gyp, she has manifested characteristics that pointed to something else than highly virtuous settlement work. Much to our relief, she ceases to be an angel and becomes a red-blooded human being once more, and all on account of aphasia. Dear old Aphasia! What would we do without you to account for sudden conversions of character?

Olive turns from her former friends when she recovers from the memory-erasing effects of an automobile accident and deliberately seeks the company of the man whose motor car caused her to change her mind. He is a satyric artist, with a penchant for painting idealistic portraits of beautiful women. That is incidentally his occupation. He is really a dangerous man for any lovely girl to meet in the intimate relations of artist and model. He proves it at the first opportunity Olive gives him, after she posed so as to excite all the devil that is in him. After a lively entertainment in his studio, when the guests are gone and the lights turned low, Olive lures the infatuated painter to madness, only to mock him.

It is expected that she will be rescued from her peril by the man who truly loves her, and he does not fail, but the mad and primitive passions aroused in her changed mental condition lead her to stab the artist in defending herself, and then, when she imagines she has killed him, the shock restores her normal state. All these phases of mind and emotion are delightfully exhibited by Miss Trunnelle. Second to her success is that of Bigelow Cooper. His impersonation of the sensuous sensualist is without flaw. But, after all, the story's greatest charm is its delicacy of suggestion and artistic beauty of background. The whole play constitutes a decided improvement on the other seven of the series.

Official Call For Ohio.

President Neff Advises All Exhibitors in State to Attend Columbus Convention.

The Ohio State League of the M. P. E. L. A. will be held in Columbus, Ohio, Tuesday and Wednesday the 9th and 10th of February, 1915. Every exhibitor in the State of Ohio and their friends are invited to attend the convention. The following questions will come up for consideration:

The New Building Code; the State tax on picture shows; the closing of picture shows on Sunday; whether children under the age of 17 shall attend the picture shows unaccompanied by their parents or guardians; whether school children of the State of Ohio shall be denied the privilege of attending the picture shows only one day in the week, Saturday; whether it shall be legal to run motors or not; and the censor question to be discussed from every standpoint and angle.

February the 9th and 10th will be the time, and Columbus the place for every exhibitor in the State of Ohio to express his views, and to vote for or against censorship. There will be other questions before the convention for discussion and settlement, and we sincerely urge the importance of every exhibitor in the State of Orio attending this convention.

The active, progressive exhibitors in our league believe that they have carried the burden about long enough, and that they should have the co-operation of those who are deriving the benefits from their work.

The attendance at Columbus will represent the desire of the exhibitors of Ohio. If exhibitors desire to have their business protected with honest, just laws pertaining to the same they will attend the convention. If they are so indifferent as to stay at home and depend upon the patriotic exhibitors in the state to continue to spend their money, work for nothing for them they will probably find they have made a mistake.

One of the important things which will come before the convention is the election of officers. A full set of state officers is to be elected. Every exhibitor in the state who is interested in the league and legislation that affects his business should be present to cast his ballot for the men whom he believes can successfully represent his interests.

The Columbus convention will be for the purpose of hearing and acting upon all grievances or matters pertaining to the league, or league members.

The executive session will be for business and any exhibitor who feels that he has anything whatsoever to say will be heard. There will be open meetings to hear everybody's grievances and suggestions.

This will be a convention of business and not pleasure. The exhibitors are not only invited to attend, but everybody connected with the motion picture industry will be welcome. There will be a large display of exhibits. Anyone desiring to give an exhibition will please write to M. A. Neff, 1002 Longacre Building, New York, or W. R. Wilson, Columbus, Ohio.

After several conferences it has been unanimously decided by the Executive Committee to change the place of meeting from Cleveland to Columbus for the following reasons:

The legislature will be in session in Columbus on the 9th and 10th; the new governor will be in office; the convention in a body will call upon the governor and legislature.

We shall recommend such legislation as we desire and we shall protest against such legislation that we think detrimental and unfair to our business. It will afford an opportunity for every member of our league present to meet the governor and the legislators.

Columbus is centrally located and easy of access. If the convention should be held in Cleveland in February, there would naturally be a small attendance by reason of the distance to travel and the time of year as it naturally would be very cold on the lake.

We admonish the exhibitors of Ohio to forget their personal grievances, go to the convention, talk it over, and after the majority has decided upon the best plans, ways and means and best interests of the league, for all to stand together and work together for the best interest of all concerned.

"A Small Town Girl"

In Which an Old Idea Is Given a New Impetus, Presented Intelligently by 101 Bison.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"A PICTURE in which types predominate," might be the designation placed on "A Small Town Girl." Its types are well presented, and most of them do exactly what they might be expected to do. The situation on which the picture is based is an old one, but in the development of the story a new application of influences has been used; or it may be that old influences have merely been presented in a different manner. However this may be, the tempting of the young mother—a mother out of wedlock—with the various avenues open to her for self-destruction, by the pessimist and the evil doer, and the effect of the counter influence of the older woman who sought to glorify motherhood because of the loss sustained in the death of a child very dear to her, is something that is not easily forgotten, and presents in the situation something that is food for reflection.

Pauline Bush plays the role of the hotel proprietor's niece, whose love of the romantic is the cause of her being led astray and gives an intelligent delineation of the character. Dick Rosson as the Little Clerk at the hotel is also deserving of considerable credit. Murdock Macquarrie as the "snob" whose city manners and fine clothes fascinated the little country girls scores well even in a thankless part.

There may be a question of psychological causes and effects to decide as regards the presentation of the character of the "snob." Whether or not a man of the type presented in the "snob" would be so quickly and favorably affected by the sight of another man's happy domestic relations, returning to marry the girl whom he had wronged, is a matter for conjecture. The scenes in the cheap boarding house where Pauline lived after her desertion by her faithless lover, and where she gave birth to her child are worthy of mention. At the boarding house table an excellent medley of types has been prepared for the spectator; and the rescue of Pauline and her child from poverty by the Little Clerk whose life-long devotion to her is a pleasant reflection of the story, gives a solution which is no doubt satisfactory to all.

"A Small Town Girl" will be released on Jan. 17th by the Universal Film Co. under the 101 Bison brand.

The picture has had the benefit of efficient direction, the various scenes move smoothly and consistently, and the photography is clear and effective.

FOX ENGAGES WALTER HITCHCOCK.

Walter Hitchcock has been placed under contract by William Fox, head of the Box Office Attractions Company, and assigned to the motion picture company directed by Lloyd B. Carleton.

Mr. Hitchcock is a product of the legitimate, and has created leading roles in support of Olga Nethersole, Otis Skinner, Blanche Bates, Henry Miller, Ethel Barrymore and other stage celebrities. He is a finished and versatile actor.

In "The Girl I Left Behind Me" Mr. Hitchcock will enact one of the principal roles. Rehearsals of the photoplay are now in progress at the Pathe Studios in Jersey City, N. J.

Charles Chaplin

CHARLES CHAPLIN, conceded to be the greatest comedian on the motion picture stage, has resigned from the Keystone Company and is now with the Essanay Company. Mr. Chaplin is believed to be the highest paid comedian in pictures; he received a munificent salary from the Keystone Company—more than had ever been paid for like services. When the Essanay Company succeeded in getting his name to a long contract it had to raise the price to a rather fancy figure.

Mr. Chaplin came to America some years ago on a vaudeville engagement, appearing in English pantomime. Eventually he drifted into motion picture work and quickly rose to the position of a screen star. It is probable that Mr. Chaplin is the first to successfully adapt pantomime to the uses of the motion picture. He is a master of facial expression and an accomplished acrobat; so skillfully does he make use of these accomplishments that the motion picture public has come to recognize him as the peer of the photo play comedians, and many a good laugh he has given with his capers before the camera.

Charles Chaplin.

Mr. Chaplin has already taken up his new work at the Essanay studio at Niles, Cal., and he will soon be seen in Essanay pictures. Although the initial subject has not yet been announced, it is expected to make its appearance soon upon the General Film program, and will be released by all branches.

The enterprise of the Essanay Company in securing the services of Mr. Chaplin, and its determination to present him to the best advantage, should commend the efforts of that company to exhibitors and their patrons generally. This stroke of business is in line with the general advancement noticeable in the plans of the Essanay Company and will be appreciated by the patrons of the Essanay.

FRATERNAL MESSAGE FROM THE WEST.

The following message was received at the Screen Club on Christmas Eve and elicited a prompt and reciprocal acknowledgment from President Kirkwood:

"The Photoplayers' Club of Los Angeles extends to members of the Screen Club heartiest season's greetings and wish each and every member a bright and merry Christmas and a New Year complete in happiness, health and prosperity and devoid of all else. Give our regards to Broadway and come out nineteen fifteen.

MISS RUTH ANN BALDWIN SAILS FOR EUROPE.

Miss Ruth Ann Baldwin, one of the best scenario writers in motion pictures, author with James Dayton of the scenario of "Damon and Pythias" and of many of the Universal's most successful feature films, sailed Wednesday, December 30, on the Adriatic for London, where she is to carry out a diplomatic mission of great importance.

No special release was ever gotten out so fast as "The Ruth Ann Baldwin Special to the Steamer." She did not know until half past nine in the morning that she was to sail on the same day, and thought she would have time to see her family in West Suffield, Conn., where she was born. But Mr. Brandt informed her that she should pack at once for the steamer sailing at one o'clock.

At the last moment the scenario writer nearly had a collapse for they had forgotten her typewriter, and what is a scenario editor to do without a typewriter? But she caught the boat. She will not be back for several months.

ANYONE who has read Harold MacGrath's book can bear testimony to the enthralling power with which it holds the mind, rendering it oblivious to prosaic surroundings and transporting the reader to the realms of imagination conjured up by the author. The spell of the story is hard to break, as I can testify, for it withstood the calls of sleep until four o'clock one morning, when reason dominated the occasion by recalling the fact that there was a getting-up hour on that day.

The filmed story, as told by Selig's talented actors and actresses under the able direction of Colin Campbell is, I think, a close second to the production of "The Spoilers." It has a thrall all its own, with its strong coloring of Egyptian and Oriental life, commingled with which are strange episodes in the lives of Americans—good and bad.

The pictured story cleverly shows how the Sacred Carpet of Bagdad—the Holy Yhiordes—was taken by force, by an American adventurer, from the sacred and well-guarded room in the palace of the Pasha of Bagdad. In the book this feat is not described, but only referred to; and that without diminishing interest. In the filmed story, the showing of this adventurous deed is all important, as it makes a powerful appeal to the spectator; besides, the opening scenes in the first reel convince one strongly of the sacred value of the rug.

These opening scenes show us the hour of prayer in Bagdad, and we learn that the Pasha makes his prayer on it and that none else, save his favorite wife, may use it in like fashion. A fine exterior of the Pasha's palace is shown here; also of the praying multitude of Moslems. The minaret of the mosque adjacent to the palace, showing the priest with his face to the sun, praying far above the crowd of devotees below, gives a fine touch of atmosphere. So does an interior scene of the palace, in which we view the wives of the Pasha in the baths. In connection with these scenes in Bagdad must be mentioned that other scene which shows the walled entrance to the city. This is viewed when Ryanne and Mahomed, with the caravan, enter the city.

Further evidences of Director Campbell's artistic skill in creating the atmosphere of the story are afforded in exterior scenes in the City of Cairo, where we catch kaleidoscopic views of moving life. The scene on the desert, showing Mohamed kneeling on the sand beside his camel and making his devotions while the hungry animal feeds, is a fit subject for a great painting.

The story is well told in the pictures, with a single exception. There is no reason, so far as the pictures reveal, why Mohamed should have kidnapped Fortune when he carried off Ryanne and George P. A. Jones. The book tells us that Mohamed once saw Ryanne and Fortune together in a bazaar, in Cairo. Judging from Ryanne's manner towards her Mohamed inferred that he was in love with her—which was correct—and that he could strike the man who had robbed him of the sacred rug through Fortune. A scene in the pictures showing this incident would give the spectator the reason for Fortune's kidnapping.

The final scene in the fifth part might better have been an interior than an exterior, so as to fit consistently with the preceding announcement—"And when the pale gold of winter dawn filled the sky"—as a bride's costume is not a fitting covering out-of-doors at such a season, in New York City.

The acting of the entire cast is worthy of liberal praise. Charles Clary has fully succeeded in transforming himself into the Oriental Mahomed. In visage, gesture, action and pose his impersonation of this strong character is true. George P. A. Jones and Horace Ryanne have found able counterparts, respectively, in Wheeler Oakman and Guy Oliver. These gentlemen are certainly scrappers of no common mold. Witness the battles royal in the English Bar,

Scene from "The Carpet from Bagdad" (Selig).

Cairo, between Ryanne and Jones on the one side (each at a time) and a crowd of Moslem ruffians under Mahomed's leadership, on the other side. There are some doings, I can assure you! And that other encounter in the sacred room in the Pasha's palace, in Bagdad, where Ryanne risks his life for the Yhiordes, is not a whit behind the other two in realism. The Major Callahan of Frank Clark adds another laurel to his record, and the parts of Wallace and Arthur Wadsworth are cleverly upheld by Fred Huntley and Harry Lonsdale.

Miss Kathlyn Williams is perfectly rejuvenated in the girlish part of Fortune Chedsoye. The book character has evidently been carefully studied by Miss Williams, as she impresses me as being Fortune her very self. Miss Engenie Besserer has made a fine character study of Mrs. Chedsoye, the mother of Fortune.

I omitted, in my reference to scenes of atmosphere, to mention the sand-storm in the desert, as it comes up on the camping caravan, in the twinkling of an eye. I have never before viewed, in any film subject, a scene like this. As we look upon it, we are transported in an instant to the dread wastes of sand that are turned into heaving billows by the furious storm. Camels bury their noses in the sand, while men and women stagger hither and thither, blinded and suffocating, some of them being beaten prone to the billowing earth.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SECURE WILLIAM ELLIOTT.

The Famous Players Film Company has engaged another of the more youthful element of prominent Broadway stars in the person of William Elliott, who is at present making such a notable impression on the New York public in the current success, "Experience," in which he has achieved a splendid personal triumph. The Famous Players have selected H. V. Esmond's celebrated play, "When We Were Twenty-One," Nat Goodwin's former starring vehicle, for Mr. Elliott's first screen impersonation, in which he will portray the role of "the Imp," as young Richard Audaine is known, that irrepressible and light-hearted young man whose tragic love affair so nearly brings ruin to himself and to the guardian who loves him as a son.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch"

California Motion Picture Company's Five-Reel Offering Tells Story of Lovey Mary and the Redoubtable Mrs. Wiggs.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE abundantly melodramatic story of this five-reel picture holds it up well among films likely to be successful with the average audience. The story is pretty well known and has considerable advertising pull. The novel by Alice Hegan Rice and its sequel, "Lovey Mary," which shortly followed it, were one of the distinct literary hits of not long ago, and the books were followed by the play in which Mrs. Anne Crawford Flexner interwove both stories and made a successful stage production. The role of Lovey Mary is taken by Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful California opera star, and the character of Mrs. Wiggs is taken by Blanche Chapman very satisfactorily.

Scene from "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" (California).

One is a bit confused at the very first by the number of characters who pass in and out of the scenes; but all the ambiguity wears down after the first reel, and the story becomes quite clear enough to satisfy the spectator; for the action is logical, and when once Mrs. Wiggs's relation to the strikers in the factory near the cabbage patch is understood there are no important parts of the action left to the imagination. Even in the first part there is nothing obscure for more than a moment to one who is wakefully watching it, and even from the first the situation of all the chief characters is so human and appealing that this more than makes up for any jerkiness of part of the early action.

The Lovey Mary story is melodrama and of the good, old-fashioned kind, that satisfies the heart; but offers little novelty. The Mrs. Wiggs' story adds to the picture a good deal of humanity and all the comic relief, this more especially during the wedding of Mrs. Wiggs' neighbor and the sudden "taking off" of her husband—he is dead, but the "spirit" is in him still and he is too drunk to realize that they are locking him in a freight car bound west. The crape on the "widow's" door at his departure, and his return with a pension make good laughter.

The weak place in the picture is the rather stagey cabbage patch; it is too apparent that the "street" is a built, outside studio, and has in consequence a somewhat artificial and not wholly convincing touch. Mrs. Wiggs is well acted by Blanche Chapman; the "widow," her bridegroom and the neighbors at the wedding are good clowns, and on the other side of the picture most of the serious roles are ably taken. The beauty and intelligence of Beatriz Michelena in the role of Lovey Mary make her very acceptable. Recapitulating, we can safely count this picture a pleasing offering. It is not great; but will, with most audiences, be accepted as a very enjoyable evening's entertainment.

"An Eye for An Eye"

Pathe Freres Presents a Four-Reel Drama with a Rollicking Western Snap.

Reviewed by Margeret I. MacDonald.

WHEN, at the viewing of a multiple reel production previous to the placing of its subtitles, a coherent idea of its story can be arrived at, the natural conclusion is that the picture in its finished condition will be all that could be desired as far as lucidity is concerned.

This being the case, "An Eye for an Eye," the four-reel drama in question made at the Balboa studios, and placed on the market by Pathe Freres, is expected to be an intensely interesting offering. The western flavor, displayed particularly in the first part of the picture, rings true; and the fight where the hero wipes up the villian in proper western style would be hard to beat as a bit of red-blooded realism.

A big play has been made in this production for startling photographic effects, which has met with fine success. Notable among these are the scenes at the stables where the cowboy sits by his campfire, the light of which reflects upon horses and saddles back among the shadows; and, again, the sunset scene at the close of the picture.

The production is based on an old theme, namely, that in which the city swell lures the little country girl from her home. A large portion of the picture is taken up with the search made by the girl's sister, in which she succeeds not only in locating the whereabouts of the unfortunate victim, living in short-lived happiness among the luxuries provided by her illegitimate lover, but in bringing him face to face with his crime, divulging the fact that he has a wife and family, placing said wife and family, as well as her sister in possession of the true facts of the case.

A slight criticism might be made on the wearing of a mask by the victim's sister in her attempts to catch the villain in his own net. Considerable night photography has been employed in the picture with good effect. Attractive sets have been used and splendid deep perspectives in exterior scenes.

Notable Showing of "The Eternal City"

First Presentation of Famous Players Film at the Lyceum Is Impressively Conducted by S. L. Rothapfel.

THE first public showing of the Famous Players eight-part adaptation of Hall Caine's famous story of "The Eternal City" was given at the Lyceum Theatre on the evening of Sunday, December 27. The staging and the special orchestral accompaniment were under the supervision of S. L. Rothapfel of the Strand Theatre. Although Mr. Rothapfel had but few days in which to prepare for the premier, he succeeded materially in enhancing the pleasure of the performance and in increasing the atmosphere of the big Roman production. Two large stage sets had been prepared, one being shown just before the performance, and the second just following the intermission. The first showed the Tiber, with the light shining across the water from buildings on the shore. The second preceded the showing of the stormy scenes in the Coliseum.

Cheering men massed behind the curtain lent verisimilitude to the views of the throngs applauding David Rossi in the jubilee procession and later in the Coliseum. A bell tolled at the indicated times added to the effectiveness. The music, given by a concealed orchestra, was well chosen.

The presentation was attended by many men and women prominent in the film and stage world. Pauline Frederick, who is featured in "The Eternal City," held an impromptu reception in the lobby following the exhibition.

The souvenir program was a feature in itself. It consisted of twenty pages, decorated, and printed in sepia. The size was 12 by 9 inches. On the outside of the front cover was a picture of the Coliseum, with St. Peter's in the background. On the inside was a photograph of Hall Caine. Then, on succeeding pages, were a full-length portrait of Pauline Frederick, thumbnail pictures of the principals in the play and the cast of characters, the story of how the Famous Players came to film the subject, a synopsis of the story, and many reproductions of important scenes.

COMING UNIVERSAL SUBJECTS.

In preparation at the Eastern Imp-Universal studio are three feature photoplays which are original in treatment and subject. Director Stuart Paton is putting on a two-reeler, the title of which is "The Black Pearl." Mary Fuller will star in another two-reeler, "The Ingle-Bacon Compact," by Raymond K. Schrock, of the Eastern scenario staff. Following "The Black Pearl," Director Paton will produce "The Eternal Pursuit," a two-reel comedy drama, the story of which deals with the pursuit of man by woman much after the fashion of George Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman."

"Cameo Kirby"

Multiple Reel Subject Visualizing Booth Tarkington's Story by the Lasky Feature Play Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

"CAMEO KIRBY," a screened replica of the well-known play, fully maintains its native flavor on the film. There is no doubt about the popularity of the film play with a genuine American theme and atmosphere. Audiences cannot get enough of them.

The atmosphere of the play is charming. It brings us back to the heyday of Southern prosperity when the planter ruled the land. Upon the broad back of the Mississippi plied innumerable watercraft; most famous among such craft was the Mississippi steamboat, with its picturesque captain and crew, its gamblers and sporting men and its overweening ambition to surpass the speed of all its rivals. Part of the story takes place on board of one of these famous steamers, which looks as if it had come back from the days of another generation. The oft told expedient of having a "nigger" sit on the safety valve is shown and brings a gust of laughter. It is too bad that in the race dummies or models are used. They are not at all necessary to develop or even to amplify the story and the audience of to-day is apt to scoff at such models, though but a few years ago this trick was the subject of popular marvel.

Dustin Farnum is an ideal Cameo Kirby. The chivalry, the manhood, the gallantry of the old South shine forth convincingly in his delineation of the lovable character of Cameo Kirby. There was not a false move, not a misplaced emotion—the whole rendition is deserving of the highest praise. It was a difficult part to portray, but an extremely grateful one, for when rendered with skill the role of Cameo Kirby is very sure to make a strong appeal to the audience. The ensemble supporting Mr. Farnum was good and aids in making the picture seem life-like.

The story furnished by the master pen of Booth Tarkington is strong and well sustained. It is possible that greater skill in the adaptation might have resulted in a better distribution of light and shade; some scenes might have been accentuated, others might have been subdued, but these apparent shortcomings do not interfere with the success of the feature as a whole.

In the portrayal of the manners and customs of the ante-bellum days, the picture has succeeded thoroughly. Care and accuracy characterize the work and are evident throughout.

"The House of Fear"

Three-Reel Imp Release of Which the Title Clearly Indicates the Main Theme.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ATTAINING the goal which was evidently set, this picture will most surely please lovers of the sensational. It is rife with thrills that are thoroughly legitimate, inasmuch as causes and effects have been given their proper places and relationships. The more especially pleasing points of the production are the rather startling photographic effects which have been secured, and the clever manner in which the members of the cast have handled the roles allotted them. For instance, Hobart Henley as the lawyer, has depicted the character of the hero who rescues the young heiress from the clutches of her unscrupulous Uncle with all the gallantry that could be desired. Frances Nelson as the heiress has given an intelligent rendering of the part. And as an interesting study in types, Howard Crampton as the Uncle, and Allen Hollubar as the butler shine forth with splendid effect.

It also cannot be denied that the atmosphere of the picture stays with one, and that the sets for appropriateness and general effect are most commendable.

Reverting a second time to the matter of types, Allen Hollubar in his makeup as the evil butler, obeying to the letter the dictates of his master, and in so doing making several attempts on the life of the young heiress, whose existence the Uncle hopes to secretly end for the purpose of obtaining the family fortune, deserves great credit.

The story has been cleverly handled by Stuart Paton who has written as well as directed the picture. The flashback system has been employed to a large extent, by which method some moments of intense suspense have been secured. The night photography of which a numbr of fine samples have been presented in this picture, will also attract considerable attention.

January 22 is the date set for the release of this feature.

New Motion Picture Company Formed.

Will Manufacture Films for Advertising Purposes Only—Incorporated for $100,000—To Erect Studio at Waterloo, Ia.

AS the result of a meeting held on December 21, 1914, at the Hotel Russell-Lamson, Waterloo, Ia., a new motion picture producing company was organized with a capital stock of $100,000. The officers of the new concern are Arthur L. Ruyan, president; C. G. Holden, vice-president; H. E. Kiester, secretary and treasurer. Dr. E. T. Alford and H. B. Plumb are named as directors. B. F. Swisher has been retained as attorney for the company. The firm will be known as the Arthur L. Ruyan Company, and the purpose of its organization is to manufacture motion pictures of an advertising nature.

The idea that advertising through the medium of the motion picture with an interesting story carefully and ingeniously interwoven into the subject will be more effective and appreciated by the public rather than by the slide has been uppermost in the mind of Mr. Ruyan for a long time. Local talent will be engaged to enact the parts of the "lover," "hero" and "villain," and a big studio will soon be in course of construction in Waterloo. As to outdoor scenery the company will draw upon the natural resources of the immediate vicinity of Waterloo. It is the intention of the company to make colored pictures as well as the black and white subjects.

The Ruyan Company is now engaged in getting local firms interested as well as companies which carry on a general advertising campaign in its proposition. C. Wilkinson of Ann Arbor, Mich., has been handling this end of the business.

The concern has acquired an interest in a Chicago producing company and also in a newly formed company in Kansas City, but Waterloo will remain the headquarters, and the company formed on December 21 will be the parent company of numerous state subsidiary companies.

"The Leap From the Water Tower"

Helen Takes Hazardous Leap From Tower to Passing Train in Kalem Railroad Story Offering.

By Hanford C. Judson.

A RAILROAD story with plenty of good views of trains, engines puffing smoke, fine wild mountain backgrounds, train yards and the telegraph office in which Helen (Helen Homes) works are clearly set forth in this single reel Kalem picture continuing the Hazards of Helen. Its most noteworthy feature is the daring things that players do to get the story on the screen. Helen Holmes actually jumps from a over-hanging water tower to the foot-run along the top of the cars of a passing freight. The object of the story's heroine in making this decidedly dangerous jump is to notify the engineer how to locate place where the air brakes have been cut off. A discharged engineer, the story's villain, had turned the cock between two of the cars with malicious purpose of having the train run away and destroy its crew, especially the new engineer who had been his fireman and whom he hates. The freight train behaves just as the evil engineer wants; it gets momentum on the steep down-grade and nothing on earth, the air not working, can bring it to a stand still.

But the villain meets with an accident; is hurt and on the point of death. He confesses to a track watchman who takes word to the girl in the nearest telegraph office. She understands the situation at once; knows that the train will pass a certain water tower not very far off. Her horse is ready—she always went to and from work on him—and she reaches the water tower just as the freight is seen approaching. She climbs the ladder and works her way out to the pipe that hangs over the track and as the cars come under, drops to them. After she has told the engineer who she is, also her sweetheart where the break is in the air system, he now can fix it and soon brings the train to a stop.

There is more than one hair raising deed in the picture that is most astonishing. The photography is also very clear.

It is announced that the Life Photo Film Corporation has withdrawn from the Alco Film Corporation. Different reasons for the severance of relations between these companies are given by the parties interested, but the main fact is that Life Photo productions will not be released by Alco.

Theater Manager Plays Santa Claus

Tyler of the Grand at Rochester Makes 1,400 Kiddies Happy on Christmas Day.

THE big heart of George L. Tyler, manager of the Grand Theater, which is situated in Plymouth Avenue North, Rochester, N. Y., fairly effervesced with the spirit of Yuletide, for on Christmas morning he not only entertained 1,400 children with moving pictures at his theater, but distributed shoes, stockings and mittens to the little tots, and also satisfied their palates by giving each a big bag of assorted candies. Many of the little ones wondered why Santa Claus did not pay them a visit at their respective homes instead of asking such a multitude of kiddies to congregate at the Grand.

Knowing that there are a large number of poor children in Rochester whose parents could not afford to properly shoe and clothe their offspring, Manager Tyler inserted an advertisement in one of the daily papers of Rochester to the effect that he would give out on Christmas morning at his theater, the Grand, shoes, stockings and mittens and requested the appearance of all who needed such apparel to be present at the Grand on that day. Something like 1,400 young folk, whose ages ranged from 4 to 12 years, answered the call. As early as 8.30 o'clock the youngsters came and about an hour later the street in front of the theater was alive with struggling tots eager to get into the theater to see the pictures and to get what Santa Claus left them.

A squad of traffic policemen in charge of Sergeant Alfred Killip and Inspector James A. Ryan directed the children to the Central Presbyterian Church, so that none of them would have to wait out in the cold until the theater was opened, where they were entertained by the piano player of the Grand and several young men from the University of Rochester who aided in providing amusement. This performance was under the direction of Dr. William Kirk of United Charities.

All preparations having been completed for the picture show and for the distribution of the presents at the Grand, the children, at 11 o'clock, were marched to the theater. The youngsters were given their choice of shoes, stockings or mittens. The opening number on the program was a "Merry Christmas Santa Claus" picture. Other numbers on the bill were "The Life of Our Saviour," a mammoth seven-part production by Pathe, Edison's two-part historical subject entitled, "The Birth of the Star Spangled Banner," and a comedy picture. More than enough candy had been ordered and the residue was sent to the Rochester, St. Mary's, St. Joseph's and St. Patrick's Orphan Asylums.

Manager George L. Tyler can be seen in accompanying illustration as the first tall man standing on the right-hand side of the policeman.

UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE OF NEW YORK TO RELEASE 105 REELS A WEEK.

Beginning with the program of the week of January 4, the first week of 1915, the Universal Film Exchange of New York will be releasing for the first time in its history 105 reels a week. Since M. H. Hoffman became general manager of the exchange its activity has grown to such an extent that the extra number of reels was absolutely necessary to supply the pressing demand for Universal service in Greater New York. This will enable a number of top-run customers who have been unable to secure the Universal Program to be supplied.

Universal's Employees Celebrate

Second Annual Ball and Yuletide Festival Given by Company Directors a Most Pleasant Occasion.

THE second annual ball and Yuletide festival of the employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, tendered by the Board of Directors, was held at Palm Garden on the evening of Saturday, December 26. There were nearly a thousand present, including all the officers and heads of departments. Everybody danced, and in this statement is included President Carl Laemmle and Secretary-Treasurer Robert H. Cochrane. Then there were "eats," at which all sat down together, and that was some party, too.

Among the Universal men and women and guests present were:

Mr. and Mrs. Laemmle, Mrs. Maurice Fleckles, Mr. and Mrs. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. King Baggot, William Swanson, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Wilson and Mr. Wilson's mother, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Brandt, Mr. and Mrs. David Horsley, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Graham, George Kann, accompanied by his mother and sisters, Hy Mayer, Billy Garwood, Howard Crampton, Mr. and Mrs. George Lessey, Mary Fuller, Violet Mercereau, Claire Mercereau, Paul Gulick, Julius Stern, Mark Dintenfass, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Goetz, Frank Smith, K. W. Linn, Waldo G. Morse, Brinsley Shaw, Lorimer Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Paton, Edwin August, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. McGovern, Hal August, Hobart Henley, Robert Doman, Harry Wolff, Charles Simone, John B. Clymer, Hugh Hoffman, Miss Mabel Condon, Bert Adler, Edward C. White, Mildred Holland, Frank Holland, J. V. Ritchey, John Nicholaus, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Ward, Ernest Shipman, Wen Milligan, Fred Gunning, Mr. and Mrs. Nat G. Rothstein, Maurice H. Hoffman, Claude MacGowan, M. E. Goldstein, Anthony P. Kelly, Johnnie Powers, Arthur Levy, Jack Byrne, Frances M. Nelson, Miss Wall, Muriel Ostriche, Mrs. Lee with little Katherine and Jane, Maurice Pivar, and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Cohen. The censorship board was represented by W. D. McGuire, W. A. Barrett and J. S. Hamilton.

During the evening Joe Brandt announced that he was going to put on a two-reel picture. As a preliminary all lights were lowered. The rays of a spotlight were centered on the stage, bringing to view President Laemmle and King Baggot. The Universal's leading man raised a laugh when he affectionately referred to Mr. Laemmle as "his oldest employe." The company's executive smilingly nodded acquiescence. "I want to say, however," said Mr. Baggot, in more serious mood, "that you who are not working for this man cannot appreciate him as do we who have been with him." Mr. Baggot then called the attention of his employer to a table loaded with a silver dining service, the gift of the heads of departments of the eastern branch of the Universal.

"I am not going to make a speech," said Mr. Laemmle, "but nevertheless I want you all to know how highly I value this token of friendship. I am mighty happy to see you all here, my children. I hope you have the time of your life, and I shall do my part to see that you have it. Again I thank you, every one."

The second reel was the presentation on behalf of the same donors of a handsomely engraved opera watch to Mr. Cochrane. In spite of the long connection of Mr. Cochrane with Mr. Laemmle and the Universal, the occasion nevertheless marked the debut of the company's treasurer in the film limelight. Every one understood just what Mr. Cochrane meant when he said that he would not voice his thanks through the medium of a speech, as he did not think he could in that way do the subject justice, "but," he added, "if you will give me a typewriting machine I'll soon tell you just how I feel about it."

The festive appearance of the diners was heightened by the donning of fancy caps. The menu was assailed just after midnight, and among the items under attack were grapefruit, olives, celery, gherkins, consomme, beef tongue, chicken salad, ham, corned beef, Philadelphia capon, cranberry sauce, potato salad, fancy cakes, ice cream and coffee. President Laemmle called for three chers for the West Coast employes—and he got 'em. Hy Mayer told stories.

Dancing was continued until 5:30. There seemed to be agreement that everybody had a corking good time.

BIOGRAPH SPECIAL STARTS FOR COAST.

The Biograph Special, the twelve-car train which is conveying the producing forces of the Biograph Company from New York City to Los Angeles, got away at 10:15 on the morning of December 30. It is due to arrive at its destination at 2 o'clock on Sunday. Every one of the 132 men, women and children scheduled to start were safely aboard when the train pulled out. As the special has all the privileges of a limited train, and consequently will run on its own time, plans have been made for the taking of scenes en route. One subject will be a transcontinental farce-comedy, the first scene of which was taken in City Hall Park in New York City a day or two before the departure.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Trespassers on Exhibitors' Rights Stung.

THE following news from Corunna and Owosso, Mich., was received at this office last week: To compete with the moving picture shows and draw back to the church those who have been attracted away from it by moving pictures, the Rev. E. J. Cross, pastor of the Baptist church in Corunna, has installed a moving picture machine in his church and pictures were shown for the first time Wednesday evening, December 16. The moving pictures will be used at all evening services hereafter.

Churches in Owosso and Corunna have noticed a big falling off in evening congregations since the nickel theatres became popular. The Rev. Mr. Cross believed that fighting fire with fire was the only way to deal with the situation. He confided his opinion to a former member of the church and it was through the latter that the machine was purchased.

Peter J. Jeup, president of Michigan state branch No. 4, M. P. E. L. of America, was immediately notified by members of the organization in the towns mentioned and at once communicated with Jno. T. Winship, state fire marshal, Lansing, Mich.

About the same time the management of the Hotel Tuller, Detroit, began running pictures in the cafe of the hotel. President Jeup again got busy, with the result that moving picture exhibitions in cafes have been prohibited by the police on request of the mayor. Corporation Counsel Lawson, of Detroit, says that the giving of moving picture entertainments in cafes is a violation of the building code.

On December 24 President Jeup sent the following letter to State Fire Marshal Winship, who had already taken under advisement the Corunna and Owosso matters:

> Your letter received and I thank you very much for the promptness with which you acted. I will state that our local building commissioners took up the matter yesterday, and denied the Hotel Tuller permission to continue running pictures. Our Mayor also sent out notices to all cafe owners informing them they would not be allowed to put in moving pictures.
> Now I don't believe that there is a church in the State so situated and built that it could comply with the State law; so I hope you will take up the matter at once, as prompt action is necessary before this matter spreads too far.

Exhibitors, after a few hard knocks of the foregoing character, will again awaken to the importance of having an organization that is strong enough to protect them in their rights.

Business Conditions in Cincinnati and Throughout Ohio.

F. R. Martin, one of F. O. Nielson's traveling representatives for "The Spoilers," returned to the city from Cincinnati last week to spend the holiday season.

Mr. Martin says that the trade situation in Cincinnati is better than in many other cities of the country at this time. There most of the houses are running under the ten-cent admission policy and are using a higher grade of programs.

The best theatres in the city are divided into two circuits. There is quite a rivalry between these circuits in booking the better productions. Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, on Fifth street, is the head of one circuit, and does most of the bookings for it. This circuit includes the Alhambra, Casino, Park, Nordland Plaza, Arcade, Carrel and others. Mr. Weigel ran "The Spoilers," as did the rest of the houses on his circuit, and broke all records throughout the city, Mr. Martin says. "The Spoilers" ran 30 days altogether in Cincinnati. Most of the theatres which ran the feature for two days played a return date.

Several new feature film companies have established offices in Cincinnati, among them the World Film Corporation, with Clay Brehm as manager; the Edwards-Zeitler Co., the Alliance Program, in charge of Cresson E. Smith, and the Box Office Attraction Co., in charge of Tom Colby.

It is rumored that two of the legitimate houses down town are about to show moving pictures, owing to lack of theatrical bookings.

Mr. Martin has been very successful throughout Ohio with "The Spoilers." The feature has surpassed the records of any other feature production in Cincinnati, he says, both in number of days it ran, and in the business it brought. The unanimous opinion of the great Selig production is that it is one of the greatest motion pictures that has ever been produced.

In some of the smaller towns in the state the prevailing financial depression has affected business in most houses. Several picture theaters have discontinued the big feature productions and have gone back to the regular service, temporarily, claiming that their patrons are short of money, owing to the closing of the factories. "The Spoilers," however, has been booked in some of these very towns, and the results have shown that the people will turn out to see a subject that appeals to them, whether times are hard or not, Mr. Martin asserts.

Tribune's War Pictures Bring Large Sum to Needy Belgium.

A check for $10,000 was handed Dr. Cyrille Vermeren, Belgian consul in Chicago, by the Chicago Tribune, Tuesday, December 22, as the first installment to the Belgian Red Cross committee of its share of the profits resulting from the exhibition and state rights sales of the Tribune's Belgian war pictures. The check was made out to the Belgian envoy at Washington and was forwarded him at once by Dr. Vermeren.

Dr. Vermeren was extremely pleased by the first check for the Belgian Red Cross.

"I should like first of all to acknowledge my appreciation of the great work the pictures are doing," he said. "It seems to me that the war pictures are a two-fold success. We see by this check that the pictures are themselves a financial success. The pictures have been on exhibition only for a few weeks, and already we have for our unfortunate soldiers of Belgium 50,000 francs.

"But the pictures have done more. They have opened up the hearts of those who have seen them toward the poor people who have been driven from their burned homes in that desolated country. I have had several large contributions from persons who have told me that the gift was inspired by the pictures.

"They said that the pictures told the truth, and that the faces of those women and children looking back at their burning cities had caused them to contribute to the Belgian relief. They said the pictures showed to them the real desolation of the country and the pitiable state of affairs in Belgium. The pictures caused them to give generously and gladly.

"I am speaking for myself and for the Belgian people I represent. You will get official acknowledgment and thanks from the Belgian government. And I want to congratulate Mr. Weigle upon the excellent pictures which he has obtained. They tell the truth about the war. That is easy to see. I have seen them with admiration."

"The Crimson Wing" Viewed by Chicago Fashionables.

A private presentation of "The Crimson Wing"—the first given—took place in the Argmore Theatre, Kenmore avenue and Argyle street, Thursday, December 24.

"The Crimson Wing" has been adapted by Essanay from Hobart Chatfield-Taylor's novel of that title and, as announced in these columns some time ago, many fashionable people of Chicago took part in the big exterior scenes, with members of Essanay's star eastern force.

E. H. Calvert, director of the production, managed the party, and at the end of its run ran off about forty feet of film showing Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor as they had appeared in the studio one day, which had been taken without their knowledge.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor and their sons, Mrs. George K. Spoor, Mr. George Ade, Mr. and Mrs. Robert McGann and son, Mr. and Mrs. Orville Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. James Montgomery Thorne, Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Moore, Mrs. W. J. Chalmers, and Messrs. Wallace Rice, E. L. Baker and George Chapman.

Chicago Film Brevities.

"Officer 666," which was released by George Kleine on Christmas day, has started out on its long run with great popularity everywhere. In Chicago picture theatres there is a great demand for it, and crowded houses with long lines of people waiting outside mark its presentation. Communications from outside cities point to similar conditions.

Twelve reels of film were burned in the inspection room of the General Feature Film Co., in the Mallers Bldg., this city, on December 21. It is said that the fire started from crossed electric live wires underneath the inspection bench; but it is more likely that it resulted from an over-heated glass plate (caused by the electric globe beneath), over which the film passes during inspection. Quick action on the part of the employees, with the aid of emergency buckets, checked the fire from spreading beyond the inspection room. The fire department quickly responded to a 4-11 call and immediately closed every film exchange in the building. As there are about fifteen film exchanges operating in the Mallers Bldg., it can be easily seen that much inconvenience was caused by the occurrence.

"Cinderella," with Mary Pickford in the leading role, was the attraction at the Ziegfeld Theatre during the week beginning Saturday, December 26.

Williamson's Submarine Expedition pictures followed "Damon and Pythias" at the Fine Arts Theatre Monday, December 28.

The board of judges appointed by the Chicago Herald to select the photographs of the forty prettiest girls in Chicago from the hundreds sent in to the office of that paper, spent most of Wednesday, December 23, in doing the work. These photographs were reproduced in the Chicago Sunday Herald of December 27, and the first voting coupon appeared in the Monday issue. These forty girls will be shown in groups of ten or more in the "Herald Movies," which is released every Monday. Picture theatre goers will see the candidates in action and will thus be enabled to cast their votes intelligently. Photographs of groups of the girls selected will also appear daily in the Herald, giving an opportunity for voters who will not be able to attend the picture theaters to take part in the contest. The hearty interest taken by picture theater goers in this contest is strong evidence of the popularity of moving pictures in this city. The girl who receives the greatest number of votes will be given a prize of a $200 diamond, and will also be given the opportunity to appear in the character of "Sue" in an Essanay photoplay. The three candidates receiving the next highest number of votes will be awarded valuable prizes.

LASKY'S FIRST YEAR

Resume of Past Performances of a Most Successful Feature Producing Company—Some Promises.

AT the conclusion of the first year of its existence, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has already attained as high an artistic standing as any organization producing picturizations of famous dramatic and literary works. Within the period of twelve months, the Lasky Company has been organized and has grown from unpretentious beginnings to its present place of unquestioned importance in the artistic world.

The crowding of so many events into the brief time of one year is an achievement in itself. That the Lasky Feature Play Company has equalled all other moving picture concerns in the history of this industry for rapidity of organization, speed of achievement and a magnitude of success, cannot seriously be doubted. The seventeen productions which have been released up to date constitute in themselves a most formidable array of film productions. Not because of the number, which is yet comparatively limited, but because of the uniform importance of the subjects, the superior art of the productions and the wide fame of the stars who have appeared in these offerings.

The history of the Lasky Company is the history of a task concentrated in the hands of three young men—Jesse L. Lasky, who is the president of the company and may be said to direct its artistic policies; Samuel Goldfish, who is the treasurer and general manager of the concern, and directs the activities of the company in all its phases, and Cecil B. De Mille, the noted dramatist and stage director, who has given up all his interest in the legitimate stage to become director general for the Lasky productions, and has contributed largely to the success of the organization.

The history of the Lasky Feature Play Company, up to the present time, may be divided into two periods—the period before the organization of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and the subsequent developments. Before the Paramount came into existence and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company became the essential manufacturing organization for that system of releases, the Lasky Company had already manufactured and put upon the market with notable success the following presentations: Dustin Farnum in "The Squaw Man," Edward Abeles in "Brewster's Millions," Edmund Breese in "The Master Mind," Thomas W. Ross in the "Only Son," Max Figman in the "Man on the Box" and Robert Edeson in "The Call of the North."

Productions from the first Paramount release up to the present time include Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian," Max Figman in "What's His Name," Robert Edeson in "Where the Trail Divides," Edward Abeles in "Bobby Burnit" and "Ready Money," Charles Richman in "The Man from Home," Theodore Roberts in the "Circus Man," Bessie Barriscale in "The Rose of the Rancho," H. B. Warner in "The Ghostbreaker," Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby" and the "Girl of the Golden West," with an all-star Lasky-Belasco cast.

Perhaps the most noteworthy achievement of the Lasky Feature Play Company during this first year of its existence has been its affiliation with David Belasco and the consequent productions in picturized form of all Mr. Belasco's most famous dramatic offerings.

"The Rose of the Rancho" and "The Girl of the Golden West" have already been released and the unqualified commendation of the public is a matter of record. Blanche Sweet has already begun work for her Lasky production as the star of the Lasky-Belasco picturization of the "Warrens of Virginia," which is the next film to be presented by Mr. Lasky in association with Mr. Belasco, and which is definitely announced for February 15.

"The Warrens of Virginia" will be followed by the "Woman," which will be enacted by a special star cast, and by the "Governor's Lady." One of the most recent notable additions to the list of dramatic stars who have consented to appear on the screen under the Lasky management is Miss Edith Wynne Matthison, the internationally famous dramatic actress, who is to play the title role in this last named Lasky-Belasco production. Mr. Wallace Eddinger has also signed a Lasky contract.

Plans are now well under way for the making of picturizations of such other Belasco presentations as "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" and the "Darling of the Gods." It is conceded on every hand that by the managerial stroke of this alliance with Mr. Belasco, the nature of whose genius has made his dramatic productions especially picturesque and suited for filming, the Lasky organization scored the greatest tour de force of the season.

In addition to the alliance with Mr. Belasco, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has made several productions in association with the Liebler Company and has produced films founded on novels by the most noted men of letters, such as Harold MacGrath, George Randolph Chester and George Barr McCutcheon.

It is impossible to foretell at the present moment exactly what will be the developments of the next year for the Lasky Company; however it is possible to state definitely that the number of releases now steadily increasing in frequency will continually become greater as the manufacturing facilities become more thoroughly perfected and as the organization reaches the full force of mature development.

One year ago the Lasky Feature Play Company consisted of an idea in the minds of Mr. Lasky and Mr. Goldfish. To-day the more physical assets embody two great studios in California, one of the older type and one magnificent new glass structure, occupying three city blocks; a wonderful ranch about twenty miles from Hollywood, including twenty thousand acres of land with every imaginable variety of scenery; offices in New York, and an immensely valuable association with a most important system of exchanges now existing in America. But even these physical proofs of success are trivial as compared with the artistic reputation which is accruing to the name of Lasky, for that reputation draws into the organization the most celebrated artists, the most expert directors and the most exceptional material of every nature.

It is the ambition of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, not only to extend in breadth, but in heighth of achievement; to make Lasky productions absolutely the best now and at all times.

"THEY SAW IT IN THE WORLD."

This is a true story, solemnly vouched for by all the dramatic personae, and therefore free of the faintest possible suspicion of press agent's guilt, which, as our readers know, is anathema maranatha to us.

Lobel, Sobel and Lamb one day, out on the road they took their way, handling of films with great elation, released by World Film Corporation. Poetical, but true.

Said one exhibitor to Sobel before "S" had tendered his card or told his name, "How dy, Brother Sobel?"

"How dy? But, 'ow jer know me? We've never met before."

"Saw yer picture in the World, sonny. Some paper, that."

This happened in Brooklyn.

Away up in the Bronx (to be precise it was at Sam Trigger's theatre, The Tremont) Lobel found himself addressed as "Mister Lobel" by an utter stranger.

Staggered by the greeting, Lobel elicited the fact that he, also, was recognized by the portrait of himself that we had printed.

And Lamb, likewise, in Connecticut had the same experience, due to the same fundamental cause, viz., that the Moving Picture World is carefully read and studied by every intelligent exhibitor.

Lobel, Sobel and Lamb are the alertest among Lewis J. Selznick's hustling young band of World Film Exchange men.

Doings at Los Angeles

FIRST of all let the Western Army of Photoplayers hereby extend to every reader throughout the country the sunny New Year greetings from Southern California, hoping that when you read this you will have enjoyed the day of all days in the best way possible, and that a week later, that you received the "Fair" year, 1915, with all the happiness that can be, and that the first day of the year showed a bright cycle of another 365 days of prosperity, and everything that can make you happy. And remember you will be received here when you come out to see the exposition.

On the ninth of December the clouds obscured the blue of the world's ceiling and a downpour of rain was bestowed upon the land which lasted until the morning of the tenth, the total fall being close to three inches. This kind of weather is liable to last for a week or so. Only a few film people work, but when some of the new glass studios are completed a rainy day will mean nothing.

The famous Bostock Arena and Jungle animals have been here nearly two weeks and already work is proceeding rapidly on David Horsley's colossal enterprise which embraces a vast semicircle of cages, an arena, performing pit, auditorium and ornamental building and decorated grounds. "The Bostock Animal Film Players" will be comfortably at home by the first of the year and the studio opens soon after. Los Angeles will be on the map for neither of the Panama expositions will have any animals like these. The promoters of both events have repeatedly tried to get the outfit to exhibit, but the picture won out for this city. An innovation is to be offered the public. They will be able to witness the animals while being put through the scenes, something heretofore always done more in secret than in the open. Harry Tudor of the animal show and Charles Fais of the film end of the project were delighted with the location they obtained, and have been working with much speed on the new studio and zoo. Here are a few figures that Mr. Tudor was kind enough to stop his work to give me: over 100 animals, 14 trainers, employees numbering over a hundred, 60 cages in a semicircle a block wide, the whole property leased for a term of years; covering an area of 24,000 square feet and measures about 400 x 600 feet; a large arena 40 feet in diameter; auditorium to seat 2,000 with standing room for another thousand. Mr. Horsley will be here by Christmas to look after the building of the studio, stages and laboratories. The animal players are to be started like human actors, one already famous lion being Marcus Superbus, who will be given a screen personality, and with the attainments of intelligence by training, young Marcus should prove to be a matinee idol of the animal players.

Charles Chaplin closed his engagement with Mack Sennett and has gone up the coast to work for the S. & A. under G. M. Anderson, who came to town and closed a contract with the little comedian. Charles promised to write after leaving the Keystone place, and if he lives up to his promise we ought to have some good news from the north. Mr. Sennett announces that in a short time a great comedian will be put on the screen in some pictures that will make the exhibitors race to get releases. While I was talking to the great comedy director, Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand with their two reel company were putting on a roarer in which a man falls about 25 feet. Roscoe wanted to string a wire for the man to be let down on, but the nervy film thriller wanted to jump and Sennett said NO, even if three feather beds were placed at the bottom. Safety First! While we talked the fellow did it anyway, and was not hurt at all.

Here is a little gem from the jewelled keys of a 20th century author's typewriter. It seems to fit pretty well the moving picture business, the word "can't" being ostracised from decent dictionaries. Actors and directors alike fear nothing, and they do great things even if they fall from telephone poles and catch pneumonia from going into icy water for a shipwrick scene. You'll read it more than twice:

The man who says "can't"
Has a head with a slant,
A shape that is hollow and wrong;
But the fellow who is Wide awake to his biz
Says "Sure," and he hollers it strong.

Several changes have been made among the notables this week. Charles Chaplin seemed to have started the revolution, for shortly after he quit Los Angeles, Irving Cummings came here from Thanhouser, arriving on the 14th and leaving on the 17th for leadership with the American. Marshal Neilan, who directed some of the most funny comedies ever released by Kalem swung over to the Lasky magnet and is being given the title role in "The Country Boy" under the direction of Frederick Thomson who recently came west to do big things for Lasky.

At the Wednesday night dinner Cummings was welcomed and farewelled, for he stayed but a day. Allan Dwan was present with Al Kaufman of the F. P. Mr. Thomson distributed toasts and much good cheer was manifested, even if outside torrents of rain battered the bricks trying to spoil the jolly gathering.

Thomson said when he came to California that he would be here for but one picture. He has done two, and is starting a third. George Melford, a stern believer and lover of California, bet the eastern director that he would stay for more than a single feature. As a result the bet was paid at the dinner.

Cummings got lost while going from the hotel to the club, as it has been fifteen years since he visited this city. He remarked about the city's growth and more about the picture people and their holdings. He said he thought that eventually all the Photoplayers would be here for this is the only place on earth to make pictures.

R. S. Sturgeon is back. Bear Valley entertained the Vitagraphers for five weeks and then the looked for snow came and for three days shooting was excellent, but they got snowed in and had to come back by way of the Mojave desert. The whole company looks like a bunch of Missouri cornfeds, the roses in their cheeks having been brought out without No. 4 and powder.

Oscar Apfel's company of Lasky's players are up in the hills in Bear Valley and they are really snowed in and can in no way get out until some of the big drifts can be cleared. Theo. Roberts and Ed. Abeles are there.

* * *

Paul Willis, the boy who was featured in the Vitagraph picture "Pore Folk's Boy" and "Little Kaintuck" is quite a fancy dancer, being the star at the Charity ball last week in the Alexandria, Los Angeles' most fashionable hotel. The young actor, who is with the Mutual, also danced during charity week at the Morosco theater. He is but thirteen years old and is one of the most nimble footed among the male performers.

Little Mildred Harris is with the Lasky players and is taking the part in "The Warrens of Virginia" that Mary Pickford did on the stage. Since the fairy tale film makers stopped work Miss Harris has been with the de Mille workers.

One of the trainers of the Bostock animals suffered a bruised finger when his hand was caught by an elephant. A local paper made a spread of the story and it was so funny that Harry Tudor, who manages the big jungle, had to laugh. He said elephants are almost like chickens when it comes to teeth, that is, they very seldom bite.

The sick list is being shortened and our nervy players are recovering nicely. Dorothy Gish will be out in a few weeks and back at work, but just the same she had a narrow escape from death. Jack McGowan, the railroad director of Kalem's "Helen" series, is as spry as a lark, even if he lies in a bed encased in a plaster cast. I went to the hospital to see him and he greeted me with much cheerfulness, saying that this was his studio for some time. He will be in bed until about the tenth of January. After that a wheel chair for a time and then slow walking, if walking will be possible. He said, when asked about the injuries "Well, the doctor says I have a fractured pelvic bone, and that the upper part of it is cracked too. The ligaments are torn from my right hip, and the back muscles are also torn. A few shocks and bruises, and lighting on my bare feet, etc., and that's all." The sick man works all of the time when fellow players and his many friends are not visiting him. In his room is a telephone, typewriter, books, and everything for the making of scripts, and McGowan is working all the time, practically directing from his bed. Helen Holmes is taking care of the company with Paul Hurst directing, and the series will not be delayed.

The Lasky company has secured Valeska Surratt who will come west in a short time to play at the local studio in a big dancing feature picture.

Kathlyn Williams and Charles Clary head the Selig players who will go on the fifth of the new year to Panama to stage scenes for "The Ne'er Do Well." Wheeler Oakman will also be there as will Lanier Bartlett, scenarioist, who will do some scripts for the company while in South America.

Miss Bessie De Voie, who was with the Gaiety company at the Morosco theater here, has closed with the Selig company and will play the part of the little Spanish girl in "Ne'er Do Well."

George Seigmann, the well-known heavy for the Mutual, now has a company of his own and is putting over some good stories, his first being "Vengeance Is Mine."

W. H. Clune, as always a first shower of features, has done a good one this time in securing Dr. Leonard S. Sugden's big Arctic pictures of about 17,000 feet of film. Sugden never saw a screen, but read of pictures, sent to London for camera and film and took wonderful pictures. He secured a picture of an ice fall, 300 feet of solid glacier falling into the sea. Clune will release the films.

Sues for $1,800,000 Damages

Greater New York Brings Action Against Licensed Manufacturers Alleging Violation of Anti-Trust Act.

TRIPLE damages of $1,800,000 is sought by the Greater New York Film Rental Company in an action on file in the United States District Court naming more than a score of corporate and individual defendants who are charged with creating a monopoly in the interstate commerce in the film industry in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The film companies named in the suit as defendants include the General Film Company, the Motion Picture Patents Company, the Vitagraph Company of America, Pathe Freres, the Mutascope & Biograph Company, the Biograph Company, the Edison Manufacturing Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., the Lubin Manufacturing Company, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, the Selig Polyscope Company and the Armat Moving Picture Company.

Among the individual defendants named are George Kleine, Gaston Melies, Frank L. Dyer, Harry N. Marvin, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, William Pelzer, Samuel Long, Jacques A. Berst, Alfred E. Smith, William T. Rock, Siegmund Lubin, William N. Selig, George K. Spoor and Percival Waters.

The Greater New York Film Rental Company, which was formed in 1907 to lease films through rental exchanges to exhibitors, alleges the corporation built up an extensive and profitable business in the film industry until its property and good will amounted to $750,000.

Then the defendants began building up the alleged monopoly complained of by entering into so-called license agreements with exhibitors and throttled competition by forcing exhibitors to agree not to present photoplays manufactured by unlicensed manufacturers, the plaintiff alleges. The two groups of alleged competitors, constituting what was known as the Edison and Biograph Groups of Licensees, combined, it is alleged, to destroy competition and obtain a monopoly in motion picture films and exclude all others therefrom.

The Motion Picture Patents Company brought into the alleged combination 95 per cent. of the patent rights in the industry, the complainant charges, and by means of discriminating agreements and exorbitant license rentals the defendants were able to secure a monopoly in the film industry, it is alleged.

As a result of the alleged unlawful combination, the plaintiff asserts its property and good will dwindled in value to practically nothing, as it was compelled to continue business at a loss due to the necessity of extending its operations in opening branches in fields vacated by the defendants.

The so-called Edison license agreement was in reality a cloak and cover to coerce exchanges under which the defendants transacted business unlawfully in the sale and commerce of motion picture films, the plaintiff charges.

Rogers & Rogers, of 160 Broadway, attorneys for the plaintiff, plan to press the case for an early hearing.

The plaintiff's attorneys reserve the right to bring additional suits under the Clayton Act, which went into effect on October 15, 1914. All the defendants have been duly served except Siegmund Lubin and the Lubin Manufacturing Company. George K. Spoor, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, William N. Selig and the Selig Polyscope Company. It was found impossible to make service on the Armat Moving Picture Company. The suit is the largest ever brought under the Sherman Act.

Edison Has a Fiske Play

Gertrude McCoy to Have the Leading Part Once Played by Mrs. Fiske.

THE Edison Company has never gone deeply into "features," meaning, in this connection, subjects of greater than the usual length and put before the public in some special way. Believing firmly that the permanent future of motion pictures lies in the improvement of productions released through the regular service it has put, and is putting, its strength into subjects from one to three reels, all released in regular service through branch offices of the General Film Company.

Many of the subjects issued in this way during the past year have been features in every sense—except that of length, which has been held down to not over 3,000 feet. Authors have been paid high sums and no expense has been spared in production. Among the many brought out may be mentioned "The Impersonator" and "The Man in the Street," by Mary Imlay Taylor; "Sheep's Clothing," by Louis Joseph Vance; "The Colonel of the Red Huzzars," by John Reed Scott; "The Best Man," by Grace L. H. Lutz, and "Young Mrs. Winthrop," by Bronson Howard. Already announced and soon to be released is "The Glory of Clementina," by W. J. Locke, the first time, we believe, that any work of this celebrated author has appeared on the screen.

Of much more than passing interest is the forthcoming adaptation of the well-known play "In Spite of All," by Steele Mackaye. This play was the first great success scored by Mrs. Fiske (then Minnie Maddern). It was played with a notable cast, including Richard Mansfield and Eben Plympton. Through Mrs. Fiske, the Edison Company has secured the film rights and elaborate preparations are being made to commence rehearsals in a few days.

After careful consideration it was decided that the part of the young wife, Alice Glendenning, played by Mrs. Fiske, should be given to Miss Gertrude McCoy of the Edison Stock Company. It is about this character that the whole action of the play revolves. She is a tender, loving young girl, full of witchery and charm, yet when the serpent enters into her husband's life and she is in danger of losing his love she does not meekly give in but she fights for that which belongs to her. Thus the part is one of great variety and will afford the young Edison star ample opportunity for the display of those talents which have endeared her so much to the motion picture public. The many admirers of Miss McCoy will watch for the production of the play with much interest.

M. E. Hoffman Joins Ranks of Benedicts

World Film Man, Married for Ten Weeks, Just Makes Announcement—Now on Vacation.

M. E. HOFFMAN, the well-known film expert, who is at present the untitled right hand man for Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, has caused a great deal of interest among his friends by announcing that he has been married to Miss Lydia Koch since October 14 of this year.

The wedding took place quietly at the home of the bride, 552 West 147th street, New York, and for the past ten weeks not a word regarding their marriage has leaked out. Such wonderful team work has never been brought to the attention of the feminine world. To be married for so long a period, to be seen every day in the World Film Corporation offices, and never by a look or smile give occasion for the slightest thought that they are man and wife certainly entitles Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman to the prize bouquet as secret keepers.

For their honeymoon trip they have started in the direction of Cleveland, where Mr. Hoffman's family resides, and no one knows any more about their plans than that. No forwarding address has been left for Mr. Hoffman in the World Film offices. This is his first vacation in twenty months. His assiduity in making the World Film Corporation a permanent organization has kept him at work so that vacations have been out of the question. Now that everything is in perfect working order, he decided that a few days' rest would not be amiss, but his friends are sure that he will spend the bulk of his time in the World Film Corporation in Cleveland, for "M. E.'s" middle name is "Work," and rest is a stranger to him.

Prior to her becoming Mrs. Hoffman, she was the chief stenographer in the advertising department of the World Film Corporation. When Lewis J. Selznick was associated with the Warner's Features, Inc., Miss Koch was his private secretary.

Among the Picture Theaters

NEW ALAMO THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

M. Switow's Company Opens Another Big Motion Picture House—A Model of Architecture—Capacity 1,100.

THE new Alamo Theater, on Fourth avenue, in Louisville, Ky., has been completed and put in operation, and takes its place as one of the largest and best-equipped houses devoted exclusively to the exploitation of moving pictures in the South. The theater is owned and operated by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, of Louisville, headed by M. Switow, whose rise in the motion picture field in the Ohio Valley has been a prominent feature of the business in that section. Mr. Switow is also president of the Switow Amusement Company, which operates a chain of theaters in Kentucky and Indiana. He had been watching the situation in Louisville, and decided a few months ago that the time was ripe for another first-class house in the Kentucky metropolis. The new company, with $75,000 capital stock, was promptly organized and efforts bent toward producing a house which would embody every idea for the presentation of pictures under proper conditions for the patrons and employes.

A lease was purchased from the John C. Lewis Company, which conducts a large department store, for a building used as an annex to the store. As soon as possible the stock of merchandise was moved but considerable time was lost and building operations were begun a great deal later than had been anticipated. The front of the building was of stone and four stories high. This part of the building was nearly thirty feet wide and was allowed to remain unchanged. The rear of the building, which extended to the alley, was one story high and of brick. Remodeling was very slow, as steel beams and uprights had to be placed in the part of the building left standing asthe walls were removed to make room for the foyer. The interior of the theater building proper and the lobby and basement are constructed as nearly fireproof as possible. Hollo wtile, concrete, steel and terra cotta were liberally used throughout.

The foyer of the theater is unusually handsome, and is constructed of yellow architectural terra cotta, which extends up as high as the second floor. The supporting columns, however, are of red marble which affords a desirable relief from the yellow color scheme. The name of the theater is done in block terra cotta and shows up very distinctly. The walls of the foyer are lined throughout with large mirrors which are placed in terra cotta panels. The ceiling rises in a semi-dome which is decorated not too elaborately.

Between the foyer and the inside lobby is a vestibule eight feet wide, equipped with three sets of double doors on each side of the vestibule, or six double doors in all. These doors and all woodwork throughout the theater are of heavy mahogany, which is mirrored in panels wherever possible. The foyer is 26 feet wide by 28 feet deep. The inner lobby is 26 feet wide and there is a 19-foot space between the vestibule and the first row of seats.

The theater is 165 feet deep by 79 feet wide, but special store-rooms have been constructed on each side of the entrance lobby, which extend back as far as the outer wall of the vestibule. The interior is 122 by 79 feet. From the vestibule the floor extends 24 feet on the level, and from this point to the stage the floor drops 4 feet, which makes the elevation almost perfect.

The seating capacity of the theater is 1,100. These seats are upholstered in leather, and are made by the American Seating Company, of Chicago. Every seat is firmly bolted into the solid concrete floor, and the bolts are fastened in with lead. The concrete floors were divided into sections with 5-foot passage aisles, of which there are four. These aisles are laid in battleship linoleum, which fits into the special concrete forms made for the aisles. The center row of seats extends without a break to the stage. The two side-rows break near the center of the theater and a 5-foot aisle extends from the side aisles to the two center aisles. From the alley a special passageway cuts off 5 feet and 8 inches from each side of the auditorium to a point 56 feet from the alley. These passageways are for emergency exits. Two exits are supplied on each side of the theater, one pair 42 feet from the entrance and the second 56 feet. These four exits and the three front ones make seven, besides one exit on each side of the stage, or a total of nine exits, which is considered ample for any demand.

The walls of the theater are 24 inches thick and of brick, but do not carry the weight of the roof. Steel supports were laid in the solid masonry, and the roof beams are bolted directly to these uprights, a plan which makes the building doubly strong. The concrete floor is supported on massive concrete piers, except under the stage, where for several feet, extending in from the alley the basement is bricked up solid. The height from the floor in front of the stage to the ceiling is 47 feet.

The theater is unusual in its straight lines and lack of any "gingerbread" effects. The ceilings and walls are practically free from ornamentation and are finished in light tan with rose-colored panels. A great many moving picture houses are practically ruined by overdecoration, Mr. Switow decided, and he departed from this method in the present theater.

In leasing the whole building a contract was made to run twenty-five years for $20,000 per year. However, space on the second, third and fourth floors, a part of the basement, and two store-rooms has been sub-leased. This excess room will net the company a total of $13,000 a year, which reduces its rent on the theater to $7,000.

Special attention was given to the heating and ventilating systems throughout the building. F. A. Clegg & Company, Louisville heating and ventilating engineers, installed the Thomas Acme Air Washing and Ventilating system. A ventilator comes through the floor from the basement under each row of seats in the center aisle. The air changes automatically from hot to cold every three minutes. Ventilators in the ceiling draw off the stale air.

The stage is only 12 feet deep, but will never be used for anything except the orchestra or probably a speaker from time to time. A mirroroide screen was placed close to the back wall of the building. An electric fountain was placed in the center of the stage, but it has been found that this fountain interferes with the pictures, and it will be placed inside of the inner lobby shortly. A six-piece Hungarian orchestra, under the direction of Professor Miko, who was formerly with the Majestic Amusement Company, furnishes part of the music, but a large Wurlitzer one-man orchestra is also used between numbers. A large singer's box is placed on each side of the stage. The outer lobby and the interior lobby and vestibule are floored in Flemish tile.

A large white, enamel-faced clock is placed directly over the screen, so that patrons can see it perfectly from any point in the building. The word "Alamo" is worked into the dial of this clock in large red letters which show up strongly, as the clock is internally lighted.

Lighting fixtures of the indirect type, costing $138 each, were ordered for the ceiling lights, but a slip-up occurred and the fixtures failed to arrive in time. Temporary white globes were suspended on long brass chains from the ceiling. Small side-lights were placed down the outer aisles. The back section of the house is equipped with red lights and the front section with green, the shades frosted to give a mellow glow. A large flashing sign, 30x8 feet, has been hung on the building over the entrance. All lights throughout the theater lobbies and even the electric sign are manipulated from the operator's room, where a booth is placed in which there are 32 switches.

Special attention was given to the operating-room, which is placed directly over the vestibule, and extends across the entire vestibule. The room is of concrete and steel throughout, and is reached by an iron stairway from a small room which has doors into the lobby and the theater proper. Two Powers 6a machines are placed in the booth and also a spotlight, made by the Kleine Optical Company, of Chicago, Ill. Three-way switches are placed by each machine, so that one operator may start either of them from the spotlight or from whichever machine he is finishing a run with. A vent is placed over each machine to carry off any smoke or heat which develops. A fifty-five-volt rotary converter has been installed in the booth also. The port-holes are equipped with steel shutters in such a way that one hole closes as the other opens. The operators handle the entire lighting system of the building and also the electric fountain.

Interior View of Alamo Theater, Louisville, Ky.

Two operators and an assistant are employed. The operators have a separate toilet-room and private lockers. A balcony capable of seating 12 persons adjoins the operating-room, used by officers of the company.

Sanitary fountains are placed at the rear of the lobby, and two toilet rooms, one for men and one for women, are placed at the sides of the lobby. No expense was spared in making these rooms handsome. Radiators were placed in the vestibule and directly at the front of the inner lobby, where additional heat is needed because of the continual swinging of the doors.

Instead of a large box-office such as is used in a great many theaters a ticket seller's booth is employed at this theater so as to allow for three openings at the entrance of the house. Electric floor plates were installed in the lobby so that the booth could be placed at various places and connected up for lights. An electric heater will be used in the booth.

Standard prices are charged for admittance, five cents for children and ten cents for adults. Total paid admissions, not including complimentary tickets or passes, amounted to 14,000 during Saturday and Sunday following the opening. The company took a half-page advertisement with the Louisville Evening Post on Friday, and a full-page was taken in the Louisville Times of Saturday. The latter advertisement was of the co-operative type and carried advertisements for practically all of the concerns which had anything to do with building the theater.

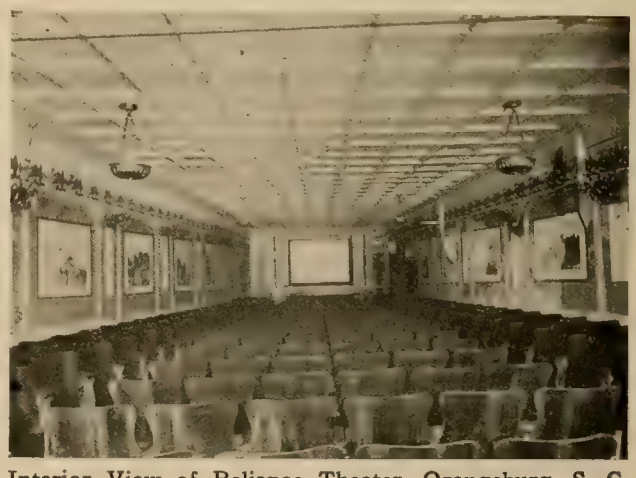
The front of the entire four-story building was painted yellow to match the terra cotta of the building. The company's offices occupy two rooms on the fourth floor of the building. Changes in program will be made daily, excepting on Wednesdays and Thursdays when special mid-week features will be offered. The local newspapers ran a number of articles in connection with the opening, and also published a picture of Mr. Switow.

The rise of M. Switow in the moving picture business of the country has been phenomenal. He is one of the pioneer moving picture men of the Ohio Valley, and was one of the first to see the great future in the business. Nine years ago Mr. Switow operated a small workingmen's restaurant in Shelbyville, Ind. He became interested in the moving picture business and purchased an old machine and placed a screen at the rear of his restaurant. At night the tables were removed and chairs substituted. The pictures were successful, and he started making money. One night Mr. Switow dreamed of a magnificent big house seating hundreds of people in a metropolitan city. He has been working toward this end ever since. He founded the Novelty, Crystal, Highland and Baxter theaters of Louisville, and a large string of theaters in Indiana and Kentucky. A number of these theaters he named the "Dream Theater," or "Switow's Dream," but none of them came up to his vision. Mr. Switow's plan, however, has finally been realized in the new Alamo, and although he worked almost night and day in getting the house started, he is wearing the "smile that won't come off." Outside of the Alamo Theater, which is owned by the Fourth-Avenue Amusement Company, of which Mr. Switow is president, all of the other houses are operated by the Switow Amusement Company, of which he is also president. These houses are located in New Albany, Jeffersonville, Vincennes, Salem, Indianapolis, North Vernon, Corydon, Centerville and French Lick, all in Indiana, and Madisonville, Ky. Two theaters are operated in some of the cities. The Switow Amusement Company is incorporated with $300,000 capital stock.

RELIANCE THEATER, ORANGEBURG, S. C.

ONE of the handsomest and best equipped moving picture and vaudeville theaters situated right in the heart of the business district of Orangeburg, S. C., is the Reliance theater under the management of O. K. Wilson. The Reliance is owned by the Orangeburg Amusement Company of which Jerome B. McMichael is president; O. W. Spahr, vice-president, and George A. Schiffley, Jr., secretary and treasurer. Mr. Wilson, besides managing the Reliance theater, is the bandmaster of the Orangeburg Military Band.

The interior decorations are cream and gold with cream trimmings and indirect basket lights to match. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 354. The stage is a big one and is equipped with all conveniences for the performers and has plenty of beautiful scenery. A great deal of time and attention was devoted to ventilation, one of the most important items in the construction of a theater, with the result that the Reliance has earned the distinction of being one of the most sanitary and comfortable moving picture and vaudeville houses in the South.



Interior View of Reliance Theater, Orangeburg, S. C.

In the operating booth there are two of the latest type of Edison machines. The throw is 112 feet and the projection surface is a mirror screen. The Reliance was one of the first theaters in the South to install a mirror screen. The lobby is commodious and has beautiful architectural decorations. An orchestra of seven pieces is employed at each evening show. The Reliance shows the Paramount program, licensed and Mutual pictures. The admission prices are 5 and 10 cents.

NATIONAL THEATER, PORTLAND, ORE.

New $200,000 Picture House Has Many Features—Seating Capacity 1,500—Under Management of Melvin G. Winstock.

THE National Theater of Portland, Ore., may be considered as one of the marvels of motion picture theater construction. There are innovations in the National which are not found in many other theaters of its kind. Indeed, the people of Portland should be proud of this beautiful and up-to-date structure. The National is situated at the corner of Park, Stark and West Park streets, a section of Portland from which the house can draw not only transient trade but work up a neighborhood trade as well. It is owned by the National Amusement Company of Portland, and is under the management of Melvin G. Winstock. Mr. Winstock was formerly the general manager of the People's Amusement Company of Portland, but has resigned that position to become connected with the National.

The theater was opened on Oct. 29. Every one of its 1,500 seats were occupied during the first show. Judged from the standpoint of equipment the National is probably the most completely furnished house in Portland. The interior decorations are of white ivory, buff and blue. These colors blend perfectly into one another, and the result is a harmonious hue most restful to the eyes. Over the proscenium arch is an allegorical painting representing Peace and Liberty. The ornamentations, curtains and carpets are of soft dull blue, and the chairs are of the same shade. The willow seats in the boxes are of white ivory. The dimensions of the structure are 100 by 100 feet.

One of the predominating features is the big promenade at the back of the balcony, and that this innovation is meeting with big success is exemplified by the large number of people who patronize it. This walk is well furnished with big soft comfortable chairs and davenports. The balcony is also in blue and buff. The women's retiring parlor and the men's smoking room are in the balcony and are provided with every modern convenience. A maid is always in attendance in the women's room.

Another feature of the new theater is its ventilation system. There are three separate ventilation systems in the theater, all of which are in use, constantly keeping the air fresh from the parquette floor to the highest point in the house. An improvement in the building of motion picture theaters was introduced by the owners of the National in the erection of that house, which indicates that they had in mind the comfort of children whose parents do not desire to leave them at home while they sought a little recreation; it is the children's playground in the basement. In this room there may be found toys of many descriptions such as dolls, teddy-bears, choo-choo engines, sand piles with spades and rakes, swings, chutes and hobby horses, and a whole lot of other things that are sure to meet with the desires of the little ones. To see that the tots while away from their parents are well taken care of the management has employed two maids who are in constant attendance and whose duties it is to see that the wants of the little ones are fulfilled. This arrangement is meeting with the approval of all parents who have left their children in this playground while they enjoyed the pictures, or have gone on a shopping tour.

The National has been pronounced by the local public as one of the finest theaters on the coast. It represents an investment in building and equipment of over $200,000. The policy of the theater is pictures with refined singing and musical terms. A seven-piece orchestra plays suitable accompaniments to the pictures. Another novel feature of the National is the story-telling hour between three and four o'clock every Saturday afternoon, which number of that day's program is becoming more and more popular with each repetition.

STRAND THEATER, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Biggest Downtown Picture House in Queen City—Has Impressive Stage Setting—$20,000 Wurlitzer Orchestrion Installed.

THE encroachment of the photoplay theater on the several other varieties of amusement house, legitimate, vaudeville, burlesque, continues; and the Strand theater, operated by the Strand Amusement Company, of Cincinnati, is one of the latest to give evidence of this fact. Up to a very short time ago this theater was known as the Gayety, a popular burlesque house in the Queen City. With a few weeks of remodeling, it has now blossomed forth into new prosperity as the largest downtown moving-picture theater in Cincinnati, seating 1,600 persons.

The change was made with really remarkable speed, only a few weeks separating the date of its closing in one capacity and its opening in another. Fortunately, it happened that before the opening of the current season, during the summer, it had been completely redecorated, so that work in this line was unnecessary. The old lobby was torn out, however, and a new one put in, with a ticket-booth and other features common to photoplay houses. Considerable work was also necessary in connection with the installation of a $20,000 Wurlitzer Style L orchestrion, which furnishes music in the big theater. Also a permanent stage setting of unusual beauty and novelty was installed. A back-drop shows a view of Times Square, New York, with a lighting system which shows the illuminating windows of the tall buildings, and gives a touch of reality to the scene. In front of this is the frame for the screen, which is raised at the end of each show after a velvet curtain has been dropped before it, and reveals the scene behind. The front part of the stage is given over to an Italian garden effect, with tall, graceful columns at each side, arching overhead and forming a most fitting setting for the picture screen.

Perhaps the most significant and important announcement concerning the house, however, is in connection with the pictures which it will run. Opening on Thanksgiving Day with the four-reel Vitagraph war production, "The Tangle," coupled with Pathe's News and a good Ade comedy, the program was admittedly good, but there was some curiosity as to how the management would arrange for a continuous list of consistently good attractions, such as it had announced it would show. This curiosity was entirely satisfied a few days ago, when Manager I. Lipson, who is in charge, stated that beginning on December 20 the Paramount program would be shown there exclusively for the downtown section of the city, with two changes a week. The Paramount pictures have heretofore been run first in Cincinnati at the Lubin, but will now have an even wider appeal, with the somewhat more central location of the Strand and its much larger seating capacity.

Manager Lipson, who has plenty to do, now that he has two big houses, located back to back—the Family, on Vine, and the Strand, on Walnut—in his charge, is sanguine for the future of the newer house. A representative of the Moving Picture World found Manager Lipson absent, but a good afternoon crowd and everything running in really high class manner under the guidance of a number of very courteous, capable and neatly uniformed assistants.

ADDISON THEATER, DETROIT, MICH.

Seats 600 and Cost $20,000 to Erect—Manager Graham Mails Weekly Program to List of Patrons.

ONE of the prettiest and cosiest theaters in Detroit is the new Addison Theater on Woodward, near Watson. The dimensions are 43 feet by 140 feet deep. The walls are brick, with fireproof partition of cement; the floor has a pitch of six feet, with slight curves. There are 600 comfortable seats, the seat and back being upholstered in imitation leather.

C. W. Graham.

The interior is decorated in the popular Adams' style and is most attractive; all the woodwork being in white with handsome mirrors at the exit doors. The foyer and aisles are covered with beautiful carpet which adds to the coziness of the appearance. The lobby has a marble floor and the walls have large mirrors of the finest plate glass. The newest ventilating fans together with the steam heat make this one of the most modern and best equipped theaters in the city. The front of the theater is most attractive in appearance, being of white terra cotta; even the Marquis is in white. Also the electric light fixtures and the doors carry out the Adams' style of decoration. Three sets of large doors form the entrance to this theater. Further comforts for the patrons are provided in rest rooms, nicely furnished for women and men, and a sanitary drinking fountain. There is no detail that has been overlooked by the owner and manager to make this one of the most popular picture theaters.

As to the musical equipment it consists of a four-piece orchestra. The lobby is 16 by 25 feet, in which are special mahogany poster frames for display purposes. In the box office, which sets back from the sidewalk, is an automatic ticket seller. Three shows are given daily; one in the afternoon, and two at night, with extra performances on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. At matinees the one price of ten cents is maintained, and in the evening, the prices are 10 and 15 cents. Exclusive of the orchestra, the theater has six employes. The structure is situated in a semi-residence and business district, although Woodward avenue is fastly gaining as a business section. A weekly program is issued, which contains advertising. These are mailed out to steady patrons as well as those living within a reasonable radius.

Addison Theater, Detroit, Mich.

The theater cost approximately $20,000, exclusive of the property, or furnishings. The building, in addition to having the theater, has two shops, one on each side, and spacious second story from which addition revenue is obtained. The projection room has a Power's 6a machine, and the length of the throw is 100 feet. The screen is a Masterlite; the seats were furnished by Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Company. The architect was C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, a prominent designer of picture theaters, etc. The house was opened late in the summer and has proven a big success.

C. E. Pudrith, a well-known carpenter contractor, owns the theater, and C. W. Graham is the house manager. Mr. Graham has had a great deal of experience in the motion picture business and by reason of that fact is making a great success of the Addison. Mr. Graham aims to give his patrons the very best attractions obtainable.

WE ARE PROUD OF THESE READERS.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD prints this charming photograph from an appreciative reader in the State of Missouri. He writes that he is not an exhibitor, but just an admirer of the motion picture and that this trait runs in the family, as the accompanying illustration plainly shows.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Prices.

IN the good old days when the Academy of Music, Selma, ran the Academian, you may remember there was a lot of talk about whether or not the high-priced features. We contended that they should pay at an advanced price and the answer seemed to be that they didn't. Then the boss made the Academian editor to commit infanticide and that's the last we heahr of it until lately, when comes this letter, following an explanation that the paper was not resumed because they can get publicity more cheaply in the local papers.

> You may remember that I was one of the first and most strenuous advocates of higher admission prices for features. We quarreled a good deal last spring about their loss of patronage, but we hammered right on—thanks to your good advice—and were winning out on the thing this summer when another house was open here. His first announcement was that he would never increase his admission prices even for features for which he must pay extra. He gave 'em a few World's Specials, and they knew what they had always suspected—that we were holding 'em up for fair. Then we began Paramount and are still running it, though the W. S. stuff has ceased. Now the gentleman is regretting his mistake, and we are helping him pay for it. Oh, it's a fine game! Whenever this cotton thing loosens its grasp, we are going up again, however. All of which really has not anything to do with "Advertising for Exhibitors," and if you are bored by it, I beg forgiveness.

There is no use talking. If you can't get more than five or ten cents out of your patrons, there is something wrong with your methods and it is the method and not the fact that is at fault. By all means let us have the five and ten-cent houses, still, but let us have, as well, the twenty-five and fifty-cent and one-dollar houses too. It is true that the initial popularity of the pictures was based on the five and ten-cent admission, but it is also true that the initial *un*popularity of the picture is also based on the adherence to the same price. People became educated to better things and were willing to pay for better things long before many exhibitors discovered that fact.

All of Them.

All of the houses of the Trimount Theater Co. string seem to be going in for programs. The Grand, Rutland, sends in number nine, a nice-looking sheet along the same lines as the others, but carrying just a little too much display advertising in proportion to the reading matter. It is all house advertising, but there should be more reading notices in original text. That is what makes the program pay best. One clip may be useful to other program builders. It runs:

YESTERDAY—That's Gone
Forget It
TO-MORROW—Don't Exist
Don't Worry
TO-DAY—IS HERE
Use It
Visit The GRAND

Another line reads, "Don't think it over, put it over."

Like all the Trimount programs, these advertisements are pointed up by being boxed in, either with two point rule or by two point rule top and left hand and hair line on the bottom and right hand side. It's effective and yet simple. Even in the programs each reel is boxed off by itself, instead of being left a hash of type. It costs a little more, but it is worth more than the additional cost.

Too Late, But.

Guy Francis Donohoe, of Vicksburg, Miss., sends in a Christmas plan too late for this year, but it is in ample time for next year, and it will be just as good then. Last year we gave a lot of post-Christmas stuff with the suggestion that it be used this year. Did you try the scheme? Get an envelope, mark it "Christmas," put stuff in it now and open it next November and put the ideas in swing. Mr. Donohoe proposes it:

> If you are not already in possession of one, make up a list of the representative men of your town and send them a letter reading about as follows:
> "Don't you remember the days when you were a kid?
> "That week before Christmas was always the banner period of your life. How thoughtful you were of Dad's slippers, and Mother never had to ask you even once to fill the wood box and chop the kindling. You were very kind to all dumb animals, and suspiciously polite and respectful to your elders. You were the Model Boy! Why? Because Christmas morning was slowly—oh, so slowly—but surely approaching. And Christmas—if you were good—meant happiness to you and the rest of the gang. That is, if you were lucky. To some of the kids it meant a big lump in the throat and a heartburn that all the possible wealth and fame of future years could never atone for. Christmas didn't bring them anything. And that was the greatest tragedy of their childhood.
> "The old days are past and gone now, but Christmas morning can still bring to you a happiness which, although of a different sort, is none the less real. It is your privilege to make some little children—children with precisely the same feelings, hopes and hearts that you had—supremely happy when the Great Morning rolls around. It's to you, and others like you, that they look for the little gifts that please them so. Perhaps you have children of your own, or, if not, there's the little girl and boy next door or across the street. How about those newsies and messenger boys. Some of them lead mighty pinched and narrow lives, and it is so very easy for you to make their Christmas morning a cherished memory in future years. Children don't forget a kindness, and it's amazing what a lot of happiness you can spread about with a little money.
> "What to give used to be quite a problem. What pleased one child would not suit another, and giving presents to children was largely a hit or miss affair. Today there exists one thing that is universal in its appeal to all children. Moving pictures stimulate their imagination, teach unconsciously the art of concentration, and provide a never ceasing source of amusement and education combined. Can you think of a more appropriate gift than an admission card to the best moving picture theater in town?
> "We are prepared to issue two styles of admission cards, one good for five and the other good for ten admissions. These cards will admit children under fourteen years of age, and cost twenty-five and fifty cents, respectively. Think of the value offered! Five to ten solid hours of clean and innocent entertainment of the best sort at a ridiculously low price. Can you beat it? The cards bear an appropriate Christman greeting, and space is provided for the names of both the recipient and the donor.
>
> "Simply write on the bottom of this letter: 'Send me ——— Children's Admission Cards, good for ——— admissions," and mail to us. The cards will be delivered to you by special messenger immediately. Pick up that pencil and do it now. The gratitude of the children favored will amply repay you."
> These letters can be either printed or multigraphed, preferably the latter. A pen written postscript could be added to letters addressed to some of the richer men, suggesting that they donate quantities of cards to charitable institutions for distribution among the poor.
> The cards could be brought to the attention of the general public by means of slides and other forms of advertising.

A Four House Sheet.

John R. Oldfield, of the Toomey and Demara enterprises, Lawrence, Mass., sends in an eight page weekly, the Spotlight, used to advertise the four houses of the circuit, and asks for suggestions. He says he finds it a good medium and that there are seldom any left after Monday night or Tuesday, at the latest. The method of distribution is to place these in the entrance of each house with a "Take one" sign. A considerable amount of commercial advertising is carried, but not to the detriment of the house, for there is plenty of room in eight 10½ by 14 inch pages. The general scheme is to run cuts of the house people on the first page, an editorial page, about two columns to each house, reading mention of all advertisers and sketches for the cuts of the house people and the stock company players, for only two of the houses are given to pictures, one being stock and the fourth split week vaudeville.

Each house has a small advertisement on the page with its reading matter. It would be an excellent idea to run mention of each house on the other pages, as well. It is supposed that each reader goes over the entire sheet, but it would be well to interest the vaudeville lover in the pictures, tell the picture patron about the stock company and the stock patrons about the other ventures. Have a general running story for each house, but do not confine all mention of that house to a single page. Then, too, it would be well to start off the editorials each week with chat about all four offerings; not a cut and dried "press notice," but a chatty talk about the good things.

But still more important, if the sheet is to yield fullest value, is the need for good matter not directly connected with the current program. A biographical sketch of some stock players is well enough, but a column of notes; short, snappy notes, about all the players, would be much better. So, too, general film chat about productions and players would do the houses more good than more or less perfunctory write-ups of each current subject. Make a gossipy sheet that people will want to read rather than a sheet that people will read. Give them something besides advertising in thirty-two columns. Play up personalities, print little stories about the coming vaudeville people; not only the people on this week's bills but the people who will come next week and the week after. Most of them send in press stuff. Get the interesting stories and run those and instead of asking people to take one, it will be necessary to tie down the office copy.

Get a mailing list. If expense is objected to, offer to send the paper six months (26 issues) for twenty-five cents, and if the right sort of paper is run there will be no trouble in getting a list of the regulars that will be useful for special circularization now and then. As it is there is not a line of general interest nor a line (save for the editorial column and the coming stock productions) that does not apply directly to the current bill. Use underlines, if they can be had and surely some can), and use house talk. Tell of the little things of interest; odd incidents back stage at the stock house, gossip of the vaudevillers, chat about the house staffs. Sound the note of discreet intimacy. The sheet is not bad as it stands, but it can be made so much better. It might even pay to cut out a few of the advertisements to get more space for chat. If you want people to read your advertising, give them a little laginappe.

Advertising Zudora.

Eller Metzger, of the Casino theater, Des Moines, Ia., sends in a photograph of an effective advertisement for Zudora, and writes:

> The crystal does not stand out very strong in the photo, but it is certainly strong as an ad if used with a good make up.
> Psht! Don't let anybody know that I have robbed the poor little goldfish of their home to frame up this ad.
> It delivered the goods at the box office, and had thousands of people talking. Quite a few were bold enough to get up close and take a peek into the crystal to see what he was looking at so hard.

The "Crystal" may not come up at all in the cut, but it is a goldfish globe turned upside down and placed on the top of the tray from which the banner depends. As Zudora has to deal with a crystal gazer, the appropriateness of the idea is apparent. Where a costume cannot be hired, a bath robe, white or nearly so, can be used as the foundation for the costume. Over this throw any gay-colored stuff—even calico—and belt it in at the waist with a bright sash. The turban can be faked from a long strip of cheesecloth, wound loosely around the head once, the rest being twined around this, or a single roll can be used with a thick colored cord—perhaps the cord of the bathrobe, wound around spirally. Where the city ordinances permit, these perambulating advertisements are vastly effective.

Mr. Smithers.

Every now and then Mr. C. T. Smithers—who used to be a regular caller—pops his head up from Aberdeen, S. D., and sends along a new idea. The last is a two-column advertisement, the length of the paper, ostensibly written by "An Interested Patron" and dealing with the Sunday shows. Mr. Smithers prints the letter in twelve point type and then offers brief thanks to the "unknown" writer. It is evident that the Sunday closing people are after the houses and he is fighting back. This being the case, a signed letter, a letter with a signature and an address, would have been much more convincing. As it stands, the suggestion is that Mr. Smithers wrote the letter himself, which takes out most of the punch. Other than that the idea is capital.

Another Strand.

"Strand" promises to become as popular as "Orpheum" as a name for a photoplay theater. The newest is in Pasadena, Cal. The souvenir program for the opening is just to hand. The issue is attractive to the eye, but it is difficult to pick out the advertising from the program. The upper half of the left hand pages and the lower halves of the rights are program and the reverse is given to advertising. As all of the announcements are in display type, the confusion is further confounded. If you study it out, the advertisements are boxed in hair line rule, but you are apt to get discouraged before you arrive at that point. This should be changed in later issues. The program is primarily to advertise film. It is all right to take foreign matter to help defray the cost, but don't take the outside stuff at the expense of your own performance. Keep the trade ads on the left-hand pages and your own on the right. If the advertiser wants to be on the same page with reading matter, cut the page into thirds, use two advertisements and keep the other third for personal mention or mention of matters of interest and you can get just as much for the third-page ads as you can for the halves, if you explain the advantage to the advertiser.

One thing we most distinctly like is an Information Column. It is a pet theory of ours that a program should be fully informative, and Mr. Root goes the whole distance. This can hardly be improved upon:

INFORMATION COLUMN.

The cover combination is deep blue ("royal blue" is the ink label) on bluish green stiff paper. The design is simple, effective and elegant. If our motorcycling projection editor ever sees the program, though, he will let out a roar, for they call it a "picture booth" instead of "projection room." The latter sounds better and 12x12x20 is a real room.

Believes in Reading Matter.

A. S. Hatfield, of the American and Liberty theaters, Salt Lake City, evidently believes in having his programs taken home. With an issue of sixteen pages and cover, he takes only part of one page for the program of the two houses, the houses running two and three days with one program. The rest is given to advertising and reading matter. Much of the reading matter relates to the stories of current films, but they are well written and only a last line reference to the date mark them as advertising. At the same time there is plenty of space given to notes of the players, and other germane material. It is something that will be taken home for leisurely reading, and once there it will stay—which is the real value of the program. One page is given to full information as to locations, prices, hours of performance and brief house rules, including one to the effect that quiet must be maintained during the musical selections. It is a pleasure to get a level-headed program.

A Traveling Feature.

Brother Richardson has passed over a letter from an operator who expects presently to be out of a job and who is thinking of taking out a feature show. He wants to know, and Mr. Richardson stepped from under and let it fall on us.

We do not believe that an operator or anyone else can make money with a traveling feature unless it be something like "Cabiria." With even the small-town houses running big stuff, there is no longer the same chance to break into a town with four or five reels and get away with it that there was a couple of years ago, when a majority of the local houses ran only one reel stuff. It is not a matter of advertising or anything of that sort. It is a matter of going into town and trying to buck the regular houses with something no more important than is offered in the established places. With something vastly more important, it might still be done, but it will take practiced showmanship, even at that, and our correspondent, Elwood Vaul, though he seems to have some good advertising ideas, would probably find it impossible to show a profit on such a venture.

He offers the germ of a good idea in a stick of chewing gum. From his rough sample, we take it that he would have wrappers in red and green in imitation of a chewing gum wrapper and in this five pasteboard slips of "gum," each with an advertisement. It would probably be expensive, but it would pay as a house advertisement.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will full manuscripts or synopses be criticized whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Synopses.

From St. Louis a correspondent writes: "Plot and action seem easy to me, but I cannot do justice to plot in the synopsis." And Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice writes that she ignores the 250 word synopsis (seeing that she is in a position to), but that if she were held to the 250 words, she would take it all to tell about the punch, feeling that if she interested the editor in that, he would try to find out about the rest from the script of action. The trouble with the St. Louis lady seems to be that she writes either too much or too little. She has not yet caught the trick of writing exactly to length and goes to one extreme or the other. Either she lets the story run full or, writing with the fear of excess, she scamps the telling.

The thing to do is to pick out the important points and play these up. Harry loves Jane. This is important and should be put into the synopsis. He proposes to her at the seashore, at the mountains, in a department store, in a hansom cab, on top of an office building and in the storage cellar of a brewing company. These are all points of the story, but they can go under the head of "repeated proposals meet with a negative." The fact that he proposes repeatedly is important. The exact times and places are not in the synopsis. Jane's Aunt Mary may be essential to the story, but it may not be necessary to tell that she has red hair and walks with a slight limp.

Just line up your facts, see which are essential and which are not and form your synopsis out of the essentials making it read as smartly as possible, and even sacrificing some of the minor essentials to style if necessary. The synopsis is not to give the editor a complete resume of the story, but to tell him what it is about, that he may tell at a glance the type of story, and to interest him if he wants that type. If we wrote a story about the eternal triangle, we would try and hide that fact. If we could not hide the fact we would at least try to hold back the bad news until we had shown that there were novel features to the story. We would not start off: "Joe Smith loves Nellie, the wife of Tom Brown, and finds his love returned." Far from it would we do that. We would say: "Baby's little boot has held together hundreds of mismated couples since Sir James Young wrote "Drifted Apart," but this time, flashing baby's boots proves to be the final straw. Nellie does not run away with Joe Smith when Tom Brown shows her the tiny shoes, but she does leave Tom, knowing that he is making a stock appeal. The incident shows her how insincere is the man she married and the last faint flickerings of love turn to disgust at his cheap appeal to pathos. Both Tom and Jim lose out."

That sort of a starter would wake the editor up and he would forgive the triangle for the sake of the new development. That's the way to work the synopsis stunt—but have your plot fit the synopsis.

"Wise Stuff."

There's a lesson in this bit of actual dialogue:

"What sort of stuff does Blank write?"

"Good stories."

"But his technique?"

"Oh! The stuff most of them write. He does three scenes where one would do and one where three should be used—but his ideas are good."

Then the director elaborated the idea. One scene, for instance, was played in the dining room. The husband finished breakfast, kissed his wife and left for the office, she had a row with the hired girl, and her Uncle from the west came. Then a flash to the outside of the house and the husband came from the door, though by this time he should have been in his office. And that night he was jealous of Uncle Bill, not knowing who he was, though the script clearly showed that Bill got there before hubby quitted the house.

A "wise" man would have shown the dining room. The husband leaves. The row with the girl starts. The husband comes from the house. Back to the row. Uncle Bill arrives at the house. He is admitted and comes into the dining room. Hubby is seen in his office. That's about the way it should be. It is the way the careful student would write it, but most writers, not actually raised in the studio, do not think of these things. They are so intent on getting their story down that they let the scenes fall over each other. Here is a lot of action happening in the dining room. It is played there. But hubby should be seen leaving the house. Instead of breaking into the dining room scene, a follow scene is written for action occurring in the period of time occupied by the dining room episode. You would not write:

10—Woods—John runs in—takes aim—fires—Sheriff enters—arrests him—Posse follows sheriff in—they lead John out.

11—Another part of woods—Smith places hand to head—falls dead.

This would give the suggestion that Smith died of heart disease. But the action becomes understandable when written this way:

10—Woods I—Jones enters—aims—shoots.

11—Woods II—Smith claps hand to head—falls—dead.

12—Woods III—Sheriff hears—starts running—others follow.

13—Woods IV—John comes into scene—Stands over Smith—shows satisfaction—Sheriff enters—arrests John—others follow—help Sheriff take John out—watcher remains with body.

Now the scenes track and we know that it was John who killed Smith. It is just as important to write the small stuff carefully, and the painstaking author will be certain that his stuff matches up right.

Censoring.

We are indebted to an Ohio newspaper man for a copy of one of the reports of the State Censors. He writes that while much of the stuff is pure foolishness, he gets good ideas on what not to write from studying these slips, issued every half month.

The rulings are in many cases absurd, but where they are based on common decency they are helpful. It may be questioned, for instance, why a death scene should be cut three feet, but anyone should know better than to come up for "Cut out scene where man lights fire under horse to make him go." The chances are that the scene was tricked and that the horse felt no uncomfortable degree of heat, but the audience does not know this and the suggestion of the scene is revolting. Moreover, it is a revamp of a joke that was current a century ago. "Cut out all gambling scenes," may or may not be necessary, but "Cut out scene where boy makes a mask" for the purpose of disguise that he may perform a hold-up at the pistol's muzzle, is based on common sense. And surely "cut out last scene where man bites girl's leg" is based on decency.

It is perfectly useless to try and write all dramas to pass all the local boards, but an application of the rules of common sense and common decency would stop a lot of cutting and put a lot of censorships out of business.

One great trouble is that too many directors find appeal only in stories with strong visual action, simply because they cannot get over the cleaner and more interesting stories in which the interest is more in the idea the story tells than the vivid action of crime. If the censors could only pass on directors as well as their products, it would help a lot.

Not Enough.

A correspondent tells his troubles and winds up with:

> I don't like to give up, but with forty-two attempts and a matter of four hours a day on an average and more often five, isn't it time to beat it back to the ribbon counter?

Not a bit. It is time to keep on going and in the end collect for the time already spent. By his own account his scripts are beginning to attract the attention of editors, but none have sold as yet, probably because he has not yet caught the trick of doing the right sort of plots. He seems to be of a type of writer who "arrives all in a bunch," as one man expressed it. This latter chap had been working for three years and he had not sold a thing. Then, almost overnight, he found himself and he has been on the up grade ever since. It doesn't make a particle of difference how good your stories are if they are not good camera stories. And it is not that you think they are good but that editors realize that they are good. Keep on working and waiting for that end.

Letters.

Don't write long winded letters. Editors want scripts, not correspondence, and they learn to dread the man or woman who wants to tell all about the past, present and future.

Be businesslike and you'll do business.

Mind Reading.

Accept our positive assurance that directors are not mind readers. They could make more money on the stage than in the studio if they could work that stunt, and so when you write a comedy and say "many funny things happen in this scene," tell what those funny things are. The director is not supposed to know what these funny things that you have in mind are. Tell him, and tell him in such a way he can understand. If you do not know yourself what those funny things are, do not try to sell until you can deliver the goods you offer for sale.

A drama we read this morning had this line: "The thief registers that he knows the old man is blind." That's about what you might expect from a person who uses "registers," for that word is the fall back of the man who does not know how to express himself. But admitting the word, what action can signify that the thief, whom we see now for the first time, knows that the old man is blind? The nearest we could come to getting the idea over was to use a previous scene and a cut in leader, for the action in the scene written was too rapid to permit the introduction of a leader there even if a leader had not been cut in five feet further along.

Don't leave it to the director. It is no part of his work to write your script for you, and he should not be asked to supply the brains you lack. If you write an idea to be shown in action write the action that shows the idea clearly, or else swing it so you can convey the idea in a leader. If you have a comedy idea, tell what the action is, do not merely say a thing is done "in a comical manner."

Little breaks like these are what discourage editors and make them wonder if there is any real use in wading through a mass of scripts in search of the occasional good idea.

Looks.

Suppose you hired a man to build a house and he came around on the job with a pocket full of nails, a jack knife and a stone to use as a hammer. Would you think he was a good carpenter or would you chase him off the lot and hire a man with a kit of tools? Mind you, he might be a good workman unable to buy tools, but you would be justified in supposing that a good workman would have tools to work with.

A surprising number of scripts come into the offices written in all capital letters. There seems to be but two explanations. Either the author is an ass or else he has done the work on a dollar typewriter; one of those toy machines with only capital letters. There are some costing as high as five dollars that do almost good work, though very slowly. Is it any wonder that an editor passes over the script in the supposition that it is the work of a raw novice or he would have a decent machine? In any event he cannot wade through several pages of capitalized stuff. It is too trying on the eyes. There is no break in the monotony, and the eye soon grows wearied. Even the $35 machine betrays itself in the impression, and rouses suspicion if not dislike.

Of course on the face of it an editor is not justified in throwing out a script because it is written on a cheap machine, but in actual practice he knows it is better to lose one good script than to read five hundred poor ones. Make him start with a good impression by turning out a good looking script.

Too Casual.

Too many writers do not search their idea. They get a comedy plot, for instance. One point strikes them as being funny. They write the entire script to that one idea. One of our observation pupils sent in a script this morning. He laboriously injected some comedy business but almost totally neglected the comedy ideas that were little less important than the one that impressed him. Not to steal his idea, lets take the old one of the old maid who gets a pair of trousers and a note "wear these for my sake" instead of the roses that were originally in the package. We'll suppose that the roses get to the man who wants the trousers to wear to a party.

Now if we saw only the humor of the old maid getting the trousers, we would lose completely the greater humor of a man trying to dress himself in five dollars worth of American Beauties. We would simply show where the roses went to, and then go on to tell all about the old maid and what happened. That might be funny, but it would only be half as funny as a story in which the old maid got the trousers and the man got the roses and both got sore. We could flash from the man trying to dress himself in a table cover to the old maid slashing the offending garment. Now the slashing would be far funnier than the mere destruction of property because, having become interested in the owner of the clothes, we would realize that this destruction would put him still further in a hole. The action of cutting up something supposedly valuable would get a laugh, but the idea the action would evolve, if we were also interested in the man, would make the idea more than twice as effective.

And then suppose that we realized that the idea was too old, we could turn it around—in fact we have and are going to try to sell it.

They Know You.

Don't get the idea that you are a non-entity in the studios. At the Ed-Au the other evening we sat next Phil Lang. "So you know a girl out in Blankville," we asked, forgetting for an instant the name. "She sent you a script the other day."

"Miss Dash?" he asked. "Yes. I had to send her script back for office reasons." He went on to talk of others known to both of us. If you do good work or bad work, the editors get to know you and to watch you grow—or shrink—and all the time you feel that you are a drop in the ocean along with other drops, perhaps one or more editors are watching you and waiting for the time when help will do you some good. Don't get discouraged, but keep plodding along, and if you make progress the fact will be noted. You can't prod it along with gushy letters. You can only help by doing better work and working harder, but you can at least feel that you are being watched.

Horrors.

One chatty correspondent cheered a recent morning by telling of the trouble she was in. She belongs to a woman's club with a membership of about four hundred, and the Secretary announced that Miss Blank would help any member who wanted assistance and advice in photoplay work. Can you imagine the result? She wisely stuck to the argument that she was not bound by the promise of a fool secretary, but she had a lot of explaining to do.

Crises.

A correspondent refers to a "natural anti-climax" in the middle of his story, and we explained that an anti-climax was unnatural. The tense situations that rise in the course of a story, the gradual mounting of the interest to a definite point is a crisis and not an anti-climax. Most stories possess one or more crises, because a story should be built up of a succession of crises of increasing strength. Each tense moment, each definite point in the story is a crisis. It is a crisis when Nell gives John back his ring, supposing him to be a thief. It is a crisis when John discovers the thief to be Nell's brother. It is a crisis when he goes to jail to save her the disgrace of her brother's exposure, but it is the climax when it is disclosed that John is wrong and that his rival and not Nell's brother is the thief, and once more he is free. These various points are not anti-climaxes, since they are all leading to the climax; they are the crises.

Can't be Done.

A correspondent suggest that we print each week a manuscript play and a criticism thereon. The suggestion is not practicable. Where we have run scripts it has been necessary to break them over two or three weeks, and a script and a criticism would require an entire department. More than this, we should have to hire a clerk to return the rejections, and we had all we wanted of that with the dog story. We received seventeen kicks and three letters of thanks. The trouble with a criticism is that it is limited to a certain set of faults. It is easier to make a general application of a rule. At the same time we are always glad to work out a really interesting technical question if we may use the material in this department, but only with that proviso.

True Happenings.

It seems to be about time to say something about the "true" story, for several persons lately have complained of the action of editors in throwing out as unreal stories based on actual facts. It is not what is true but what sounds true that the editors want. You may know of a case in which a man fell out of a balloon, caught the lobe of his left ear in the weather vane of the Baptist Church and hung there until rescued, but you could not make several million people believe this unless you sent the man and the blood stained weather vane along with each copy of the film. It is not what is true, but what the audiences will accept as the truth that counts.

Changing It Around.

There's more than one road leading to Rome, just as the proverb has it, and if you can't make it by one road, try another. Lately an author complained that he could not get an idea over because he needed a light in the window—a red light—to get the main theme of his story over. He was really surprised to find that a flag on a window staff would give precisely the same idea and be photographically possible. He had his mind so centered on the red light that he could see no other way to work his scheme. He spent all of his thought on trying to make the red light possible, not in trying to get around it.

Almost any idea can be made practicable if you give it enough thought, but you must look at it from all sides and not merely from one. The trouble is that too few authors realize the flexibility of an idea and are afraid they will break it if they move it around too much.

Advice.

Many persons who ask advice seem to want the pill too heavily sugar coated. They are like the dyspeptic who took pills for his complaint but whose stomach was too weak to digest the covering and so the medicine did him no good.

If you need advice be grateful for it, no matter in what form it may come. And as a general thing, the more forcefully it is stated the deeper down it sinks—and that's just what you want it to do. Lots of correspondents are more grateful to us six months after they get a letter than six minutes after its receipt.

Matching Ends.

If you have half an idea, put it down. Perhaps some time you'll find the other half. This may seem like looking for a barrel to fit a bung, but the practiced writer knows that time and again a half good story saved up will become a completely good story when combined with another seemingly unfinished idea. For that matter an alert editor will sometimes buy two stories from different authors and combine them into a proper whole.

Now, He's Got It.

Recently we wrote a man whose letter bubbled over with complacency that he had not even begun to commence. It hurt his feelings, he confesses, but after that he realized that perhaps asking people for help was not the real way to win success and so he has begun to commence by registering his appreciaiton of the fact that it is the work you do and not the work you try to get someone else to do for you that speeds you to success.

You can hire a man by the month to do nothing but criticise your scripts and still be unable to write a decent story unaided. It is not the work you hire done for you that counts. It's what you learn through your own personal effort and study.

Hardly.

One correspondent wants to know if the use of material by well known fiction writers will not hurt the chances of the "obscure outsider." Not a bit. The aforesaid "O. O." is the kindly chap who is to make good for the stuff that the big man foists on the manufacturer. Like the theatrical business, the little fellow who is good must make good for the big name that is not.

There is not one big fiction writer in a hundred who takes the trouble to study the requirements of photoplay. He is superior to the details of camera technique. He writes the sort of stuff he does into fiction and without his literary style, the picture on the screen is about as flat as the work of any other beginner.

Some few well known authors are making a close study of photoplay writing, but most of them still look upon it as a chance to make a little easy money once or twice. Henry Albert Philips says it took him two years to come to his first sale, though he was already established as an author of fiction, but real authors who are willing to take the time for study are rare and so the man who can write good camera stuff has little or nothing to fear from the top notch fictionist.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Notice: Change of Address.

Personal correspondents of the editor will take note that his personal office has been moved from 150 Nassau street to Room 1434, 22 East 17th street, and govern themselves accordingly.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready, and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study. Canadians should send P. O. M. O., or coin only.

Question No. 66.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

With a semi-reflecting type of screen, is there any special reason why the operating room ought to be located as nearly as possible square with the screen? That is to say, why is this of greater importance with such screens than with non-reflective types? What is the objection to a perfectly smooth surface on a metallic or other semi-reflecting screen?

Roll of Honor.

Question No. 60 looked and really was quite simple to one who had studied the matter in the Handbook or elsewhere. However, notwithstanding this fact there were some astonishing bad guesses sent in.

The Roll of Honor consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. C. Stewart, Waitsburg, Washington; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee; H. W. Steward, Reading, Pennsylvania; Allie Baron, Lodi, California; Byron Stokes, Weatherford, Texas, and Joseph Barton, St. Louis, Missouri.

Reply to Question No. 60.

By Joseph Barton, St. Louis, Mo.

The Question:

Explain, in complete detail, what a fuse is for, and exactly how it operates. What, roughly, is the composition of a fuse? Tell us what size fuse it would require to convey power for a 50 h. p., 110-volt motor, and for a 50 h. p., 500-volt motor. What would be the difference in fuse requirements for a 40-ampere projection arc as between the primary and secondary sides of an economizer; as between the lines and lamp side of a rheostat?

The Answer:

The fuse is a safety device, corresponding to the safety valve in a steam boiler. It is for the purpose of breaking an electric circuit when, for some cause, the current is increased beyond the normal capacity of the wires of the circuit, or the voltage is increased so that the incandescent lamps, or motors are forced beyond, or likely to be forced beyond their capacity, and thus receive injury. In placing fuses the copper circuit is broken, the wire ends equipped with terminals of suitable design and placed the proper distance apart to receive the fuse. Fuses are placed (a) between the source of supply and the main distributing board of the theater; (b) at the beginning of every individual circuit in the theater.

Fuse metal is a compound of metals, the base of which is usually lead, the purposes of the compound being to secure a metal which, while a good electrical conductor, will have a high temperature coefficient (offer greatly added resistance to the current as its temperature increases) and will melt at low temperature. Tin and bismuth are used in conjunction with lead in the making of fuses; also other metals may be and are employed. The fuse operates as follows: When, by reason of a ground, a short circuit, or an increase in the voltage, there is a sudden rush of current, thus endangering the wires and apparatus attached thereto, the excess of current above the capacity of the fuse sets up heat therein much more rapidly than it does in the copper of the wires, due to the high temperature co-efficient of the fuse metal. The melting point of a fuse is low, probably not much in excess of 200 degrees C, and possibly as low as 160 degrees C. The result is that the fuse metal quickly melts, thus breaking the circuit and stopping the flow of current. Moreover, if another fuse be installed without first having relieved the cause of overload, it will also almost instantly melt, and again stop the current flow, so that the fuse acts as an automatic preventative of injury to the wires or apparatus attached to them, as well as automatically compelling the removal of shorts, grounds, etc.

A 50-h. p., 110-volt motor would consume (50 volts × 746 watts) ÷ 110 volts = 339 amperes. It would actually require more than this, but I am, for the sake of convenience, assuming the motor to have 100 per cent. efficiency. We would therefore require 339-ampere fuses, which would be expected to carry 10 per cent. above their capacity. However, the underwriters allow a motor circuit to be fused 25 per cent. above the normal capacity of the motor. As a matter of fact, therefore, on a circuit of this kind, I would consider a 375-ampere fuse as being about the right thing, provided, of course, the wires have a rated 375-ampere carrying capacity, but, regardless of any underwriter's rules, I would not, for a moment, consider fusing above the rated capacity of the wires, and only 25 per cent. above the rated capacity of the motor.

For a 500-volt motor the same thing would obtain, except that the problem would then become (50 × 746) ÷ 500 equal approximately 76 amperes, the amperage capacity of the motor. To this we would add 25 per cent., again, of course, providing the lines were large enough to accommodate that amount of current. The difference in fuse requirement for a 40-ampere projection arc, as between the primary and secondary sides of an economizer would be the difference as between 40 amperes × 35 (a. c. arc voltage) = 1,400 watts, which, divided by the voltage of the line feeding the economizer, would give the amperage taken from the line. Assuming the line voltage to be 110 we would have 1,400 ÷ 110 = almost 13 amperes. Inasmuch as all economizers for motion picture work have a 60-ampere capacity, under the foregoing conditions I would fuse the primary side at 15 amperes, or the secondary side at 70. Of course the 10-ampere leeway on the secondary side is considerable, but, on the other hand, there is nothing about the projection lamp that even 70 amperes would in any way injure, and the lamp leads have a rated capacity of 70 amperes.

As between the line and lamp side of the rheostat there is no difference in fuse capacity. If the line side took 40-0ampere fuses, the same thing would be required if they be placed on the lamp side.

Nothing Doing.

W. J. Holliday, Lincoln, Alabama, writes:

> I want to get in touch with some good, reliable firm, or party who will teach me to operate a moving picture camera, furnish me with a camera, and employ me to work in that line.

Well, Friend Holliday, in the classic language of the east side, "there ain't no such animal." If there was, that fact would no sooner become known that he would be mobbed by applicants. In fact you would probably require a steam shovel to dig them off the top of him. I think there are at least 964,875½ persons, in these United States alone, who would be mighty glad to shake hands with that particular kind of a proposition.

A Queer Proposition.

The editor bumped into something that proved to be one too many for him; moreover it has stumped some of the best men in New York City. Recently Brother M. Barron, Queen theater, Third avenue and 59th street, sent in an S. O. S. call for help. Responding we found the following condition. Friend Barron has a Powers Six machine, lamp and lamphouse; in fact the regular Powers Six equipment; he has also one of the No. 3. Standard machine outfits, which, while somewhat out of date, is in very good condition, and bears evidence that Brother Barron takes care of his machinery. The arc of the Powers Six machine gives no trouble at all; burns as steady as clock work, and so did the one on the Standard until a week or two ago. Both lamps are equipped with ¾ cored bio carbons above and ⅝ cored below.

And now here is the peculiarity. Beginning a week previous to my visit, when the arc was struck it burned steadily and without fault for from fifteen to twenty minutes, but after 15 and usually before 20 minutes it would suddenly shift back to the heel of the lower carbon. If left alone it would come back to its original position in about three minutes, and in a short time would repeat the performance, with resultant very poor and uneven illumination.

The leads to the two machines have been switched, but without result; the rheostats of the two machines have been exchanged, without result; new wires have been installed, without result, and a new lamp has been put in, without result. All connections are tight and everything seems to be in first class condition. Apparently the trouble must be due to one or two things, viz.: a draught which strikes the arc after the lamphouse has become thoroughly heated, or a magnetic blowing effect, but on the other hand, careful examination failed to reveal any apparently possible source of magnetic blow, nor did it make any difference whatever in the action of the arc whether the top of the lamphouse and the door, one or both, be left open.

That is the condition, gentlemen, and it is some condition too. I spent an hour examining the thing, then went down and told the proprietor that the operator absolutely was not to blame, but that there was a condition for which there seemed to be no reasonable cause. If any reader can suggest anything, for heaven's sake let him stand forth and be heard.

Give the Operator Credit.

R. Stappleton, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, orders a bound volume of the Moving Picture World and says:

> We have two Powers Six A projectors, taking current through a Fairbanks Morse motor generator set, with which we get an excellent picture. This, however, is due mostly to our operator, Ralph Hooker, who is a wonder. A part of our religion is: Don't stint on operating room expenses, and we find that this policy brings its reward. I have found the "World" to be a combined Webster's dictionary, atlas and encyclopaedia of the moving picture business.

It is indeed refreshing to find a manager who is actually willing to admit that his operator has something to do with the success of the house, but to find a manager who will go the length Friend Stappleton does is really entirely out of the ordinary. He is perfectly correct in saying that liberality, within reason of course, in the operating room, is rewarded. It certainly does bring its reward in increased excellence on the screen, though that sort of reward does not, of course, appeal to the manager who does not know a real picture from a jumping bunch of poorly-illuminated shadows.

Vanascope Machine.

P. W. McCord, Bremerton, Washington, says:

> Some time ago I received literature regarding a motion picture projector which worked on a new principle. The machine is called the "Vanascope." Have not seen it advertised in the World and would like to have you tell us, through the department, what the proposition is. The literature received says the machine will not be sold, but leased at $5.00 per week. Do you consider the machine as an advance on present types? The projection department is a most excellent idea. No one man has a monopoly on knowledge, and through the department we are all able to profit both by the knowledge and mistakes of others. Am interested in the salary discussion. I wonder if managers ever stop to consider that an operator can very nearly make or break their business through good or bad projection. I recently visited a house where the pipe organist received forty dollars a week, and was worth it too. The operator was worth almost twice that, by comparison, but he received sixteen.

Brother McCord, the "Vanascope" has been dealt with in the department long ago. You may rest assured that when any new projection machine having merit is brought out, this department will tell you what it is, and all about it, but first the inventor or manufacturer must demonstrate to the editor of this department that his machine has genuine merit, and that the Vanascope people have not, as yet, done, and I do not think they will be able to do it either. As to the forty-dollar organist, and the sixteen-dollar operator, the reason for it lies very largely in the fact that the manager has considerable respect for the ability of the musician, whereas he does not seem to have any at all for the ability of the operator, and this, notwithstanding the fact that really high-class projection will "put a picture over" without any music at all, whereas with the best music in the world the picture will be a failure if it be poorly projected. However, in justice to managers, let it be said that they will most likely have an increased respect for the operator and his work when the operator, as a class, has more respect for himself and his work.

Not the Projector.

Chicago, Illinois, writes:

> Enclosed find sample of film damaged the same as the sample submitted to you by Winchester, Ky. Positively no motion picture projector did this damage, as when I got the film it was first run. The sample is from an "American" film, and I also had Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale," first run, which was similarly damaged when received. I would suggest that manufacturers take a good look at their printers, perforators and measuring machines, as it is in one of these the fault unquestionably lies.

Yes, the damage is identical with the Winchester trouble. I will submit the sample to the company who released "The Nightingale," and request a report from them.

From this "Neck of the Woods."

Mearle Hoover, Franklin, Indiana, speaks thusly:

> Not having seen anything from this neck of the woods, I will report on projection in Franklin, which has two M. P. theaters, viz.: the "Scenic" and the "Opera House." The Scenic uses three reels, Universal, has two Powers Six machines and a home-made voltage regulator, designed and made by the electrician of the power company. It is in the nature of a low voltage transformer. This house has a mirror screen; seats 250 people and is managed by O. M. Calvert. The Opera House has a Powers Five and an Edison projector, taking current through a Fort Wayne compensarc; they operate an Airdome in summer. The program consists of three reels, Mutual. The house seats 1,000, seven hundred of whom are on the main floor. The operating room is at the back of the gallery. The house is managed by O. I. Demoree. The stage hands and operators are union men, belonging to Local 571, I. A. T. S. E., which was organized January 13. The local consists of both operators and stage hands, the former being two in number. Any time you are down this way just drop around, make yourself known, and Local 571 will show you a good time. And now let me ask you what it would cost to change a two-pin Edison to a one pin, and what would you have to have to do it with? Kindly explain the matter through the department. The questions are just fine! I have both editions of the Handbook and would not take a hundred dollars for them If I could not get another. Am using two machines on one compensarc and wish to start one machine on the rheostat and thus heat up the carbons while I am finishing the reel on the other machine which is pulling off the compensarc. I then want to switch over to the compensarc. Current is 60 cycle, 110 volt a. c., and I use the 60-ampere notch. I am displaying my ignorance in order to improve my work. Am eager to get all the knowledge there is to be had concerning my business.

My brother you are a wise man. Only the fool fears to expose his lack of knowledge. It is only, as you put it, by "exposing your ignorance" that you will get wise, and none of us are so darned smart that we know it all, therefore you have nothing whatever to be ashamed of in acknowledging the fact that you still have things to learn. So have I, and I expect to keep right on learning until I finally occupy my little six feet of earth.

I will have the Edison Company send you the necessary data on the two-pin matter. You will have to send the machine to the factory, but I would earnestly recommend a new machine instead.

As to the switching over from compensarc to rheostats, why it may be accomplished in a number of ways, one of which is shown in attached diagram. In the diagram two rheostats are used, but the thing may be done with one by attaching the rheostat as per dotted line. You will, of course, have to work two switches each time, and if you make any mistake you will be promptly notified of the fact by the fuses blowing. There are other ways of doing this particular stunt, but this is the one which occurs to me at the moment. My compliments to Local 571. Evidently while small in numbers, it is a progressive body and that is the kind of union I believe in and have admiration for.

Bad Conditions.

John L. Benton, who says he is "not directly connected with the theatrical business, but likes to see things run at least half-way decent," describes conditions in Nashville, Tenn., as follows:

> There are two independent and four licensed houses, all belonging, I believe, to one company, also a Warners' feature house, and besides this something like forty suburban theaters, part catering to white and part to colored. The suburban houses run from 7 p. m. to 10 p. m., and pay their operators an average of $8 a week, also employing a re-wind boy. The downtown houses run from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m., have two operators each working six hours, and pay from $12 to $17 a week. This, I think, is miserable compensation for the work performed. This is largely due, I believe, to no competition between the houses; also to no union, as there are not a sufficient number of real operators in Nashville to get a charter, and I am told that if an operator so much as mentions organization off goes his head. Every kind of device is used for arc control, including grid rheostats, reactances, transformers, compensarcs, mercury arc, rectifiers, motor generator sets, and one Wagner converter. Every projector in Nashville is a Powers, except three; one Edison 1908, one motiograph and one Simplex.
> I am writing this because I know conditions, and those conditions are operating, I think, to injure the results on the screen very seriously, and that I, as one who pays the price to see real pictures, strenuously object to. I am old enough to know that Nashville managers cannot get men with the necessary brains and energy to produce high-class results on the screen at the wage they are paying, and, that being true, I, with the balance of the public who pay money to support this industry, are being injured; hence this letter.

This is an unusual thing. Here is one of the dime-paying public which, as he says, pays the money off which the industry lives, making a kick on bad operating room conditions because those conditions are operating to injure him. He pays his money to see high-class results, and, by heck, he wants them. He has sense enough to know that he wants better results than are likely to be produced by $8-a-week men, nor $12-a-week ones, for that matter. If conditions in Nashville are as set forth, it is bad. Eight dollars a week! Huh! I would suggest that the operators of Nashville form themselves into a charitable organization and donate their services free to the managers who cannot afford to pay more than $8 a week in suburban and $12 in downtown houses. Really it is a shame to take all that money away from them, and thus deprive their families of necessary food and clothing. Now, Mr. Nashville Managers, there is no use in your getting angry at this. You know perfectly well that you are, doing the business and the public a wrong when you place the projection in your houses in the hands of eight and twelve-dollar men. Of course, twelve dollars in Nashville is more than twelve dollars would be in New York City; granted; but, still it is not sufficient to induce the kind of men you ought to have in your operating rooms to take up the work of operating. If you say, in reply, that competition is such that it is all you can pay, why I come back at you with the statement that a business that won't pay decent salaries is not worth running, and the obvious answer is that you have got too many theaters in Nashville. Remember, gentlemen, in talking this way I am talking just as much in your interest as I am in the interest of the operator. I am looking at the matter from the broad viewpoint of the best good of the business, and the best good of the business is not served when projection is placed in the hands of cheap men. I don't know who Mr. Benton is, but judging by his letter he knows what he is talking about, and before this is printed I shall take pains to find out for myself whether conditions as set forth by him are correct, and if they are not then the articles will not be published.

Data Wanted.

E. McKenzie, St. Paul, Minnesota, says:

> Am considering building a theater. Have been trying to get some data on the cost. The projection room and equipment is causing me trouble, and I do not seem to be able to find any up-to-date work covering the question in simple concise form. Your Handbook, which I have, might give me the desired information but I have not time to study it out, as I am a very busy man. The theater will be in the most select residential part of the city and will be devoid of gaudy front, lithographs, etc., but the pictures and projection must be absolutely the best to be had.

In the first place, you will need an operating room placed central with the screen and with as little pitch in the projection as it is practical to secure. You will require two projectors, which will cost well on to three hundred dollars each, including motor drive, and the current control device (rheostat). If the current be 110 volt A. C. you will need a current rectifying device, which can be secured at different prices, a rotary converter ranging from two to three hundred dollars; a mercury arc restifier in the neighborhood of two hundred dollars and a motor generator set all the way from two hundred and thirty to five hundred and sixty dollars, say three hundred and fifty average. If the current be 220 D. C. you will need a d. c. to d. c. motor generator set or economizer, which can be had from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five dollars, say two hundred and fifty dollars for a 40 ampere machine suitable to 220 to 240 volts. If it is desired to install a dissolving stereopticon, one can be had at various prices, but a really good one will cost a little more than a hundred dollars, not including the rheostat or other current control device. The room also will have to be equipped with an enclosed switchboard or a steel cabinet containing the fuses, switches, etc., but prices for this can be quoted by local dealers, nor could I give an approximate cost of wiring the room.

In the operating room should be a wash basin with hot and cold water, if it is available, though, of course, the hot water is in the nature of a luxury; but the wash basin and at least cold water should by all means be there. Prices could be obtained from any local plumber. The room should be of ample size with walls of brick, concrete or hollow tile, with a floor of concrete, faced with cement having the same finish as sidewalks. There must also be ample ventilation, but these things I cannot quote prices on, as that depends upon local conditions.

Find Consolation.

I. V. Roberts, Cottonwood, Kansas, encloses check for $3.00 subscription renewal and says:

> The Moving Picture World is O. K. and I cannot see how any exhibitor can get along without it. We also have a copy of the new Handbook, and when there are projection troubles can always find consolation therein. Am ordering a set of Hawkins' Electric Guide today. When they come I guess we will be fixed up right. Use a Powers Six A and get a very steady picture. Will next order a set of meniscus-bi-convex condensers, because if there is anything floating around that will help projection we want it.

All of which is a great shock to our modesty. Much obleeged, Brother Roberts, for your kind words.

It Rattles.

R. R. Kent, Hartselle, Alabama, rattles his typewriter on the following:

> Am using a Powers 6A machine and am troubled with a loud noise or rattle made by the film. Have studied the Handbook and followed the instructions but it don't seem to help. By closely observing I find the intermittent sprocket does not release the film as quickly as I think it ought to, and I find this is the cause of the noise. What would you suggest? I would not be without either the Moving Picture World or the Handbook.

If what you say is true, it probably means that the teeth on the intermittent sprocket are worn into a hook shape. Using a condenser lens for a magnifying glass, examine them, and if that is the condition then you need a new intermittent sprocket. It is also quite possible that the trouble is caused by the roller on the bottom of the apron being too far ahead (toward the screen) or too far back, probably the former. Using a long punch, with one end set against the hub of the roller first on one side and then on the other, strike a light blow with a hammer and bend the bottom of the apron back somewhat, say 1-16 of an inch, and then try it. If that does not help, try bending it the other way. You won't injure it, so don't be afraid. It is possible that the rollers on the bottom of the apron set too close together, so that the film does not seat properly between them. If this is the case, using your punch, carefully spread the rollers by tapping with a hammer. In one of these things you will discover your difficulty and its remedy.

I Cannot.

Crystal theater, Dodgeville, Wisconsin, asks:

> Can you give any information regarding running a dynamo with an automobile engine, or can you give us the names of any parties who are using such an outfit for road exhibition work? We want to rig up that kind of outfit and make neighboring towns where electricity is not available.

No, just at present I do not know the address of anyone who is using that kind of outfit, although we did have data and published pictures of two or three automobile light plants a good while ago, one being E. G. Kay, then located at Snohomish, Washington. Anyone who can furnish the desired information will kindly communicate either with the Crystal theater or with the editor.

Automobile Power Plant.

W. H. Shepard, Davenport, Washington, says:

> My reason for coming to the front is by reason of a little experience which may be interesting. Once a year we have what is known as a Pioneer Picnic. Early in 1914 I sold out my line of shows in the northern part of the state and, in the course of events, struck Davenport at picnic time and here found a moving picture operator, at that time located at Ephrata, Washington, who had a projection outfit at the picnic. Made myself known to him and was promptly appointed operator for the occasion. He had a light plant arrangement which is the basis of this letter. His automobile had an open fly wheel at the rear end of the engine, the same extending back of the dashboard. On the floor of the bubble he had bolted a 3-k. w., 110-volt generator so it would line up with the fly-wheel. A belt was cut to fit this and forced onto the two pulleys, so that all you had to do was crank up the bubble's engine and the juice was ready to use. Mr. Fowler had a voltmeter on the dashboard of the automobile, and, of course, kept a man there to attend to the engine, for when the arc lamp was switched off it would either let the engine run away or else kill it. The layout ran very nicely and struck me as a pretty good thing. I am getting another outfit ready for the road and expect to fit my auto in the same way.

Many thinks for the contribution, brother. It so happens that it comes in very handy, as another brother has just written, asking for that identical piece of dope.

Brings His Troubles.

Stephen Pollard, Guthrie, Oklahoma, says:

> I see the boys bring their troubles to you, and I am going to do the same. Enclosed you will find a clipping from a moving picture publication. I have a book on physics which says that: "Electricity is generated by cutting lines of force." I have been using a Westinghouse rectifier, but have been troubled with tube breakage. The last tube broke with the ammeter showing 15 amperes, and it only lasted two minutes. Do you think the fault is due to the tube or rectifier?

I shall suggest to the Westinghouse people that they proceed at once to locate your trouble, and remedy it. It is difficult to say from the data at hand just where the trouble lies. However, it may be said, in general, that if, when the mercury is all in the cathode receptacle there are any air bubbles in the same it indicates air in the tube, and that the tube has probably been damaged in shipment; when no air bubbles show, the tube is, or ought to be, all right. Personally, I am inclined to think there may possibly be something wrong with your ammeter. You could test that roughly by your fuses. As to the clipping, it is an article by one, H. S. Andem, setting forth the fact that it is improper to say, "How much 'current' does a dynamo generate?" Mr. Andem then consumes much space in declaring that a dynamo generates pressure, not current. Well, with all due respect to the gentleman in question, we all knew that long ago, but for practical purposes it is perfectly correct to say: "How much current will that dynamo generate?" or "what is the capacity of that generator?" so why waste a lot of words and printer's ink in arguing. As a matter of fact a dynamo generates electric pressure. Mr. Andem says a water pump generates pressure, but does not make or generate water. Correct! Go up head, Brother Andem. Mr. Andem then proceeds to say that a generator does the same thing, viz.: generates pressure and not electricity. Well, I dunno. Technically we may say he is correct, but practically I do not know whether he is or not. As a matter of fact, I do not believe there is body really knows where the current comes from, or whether there is any actual current or not, on that proposition I guess we will have to allow Friend Andem to remain where he is. He may be right, but he would have an awful hard job proving it. Up to a certain point the analogy between water and current holds good, but beyond that "certain point" it does not for the very simple reason that we do know what water is, and we know there really is such a thing as water, we can see and feel it; but we do not know what electric "current" is, nor do we even know there is such a thing. Many eminent electricians hold there is really nothing but voltage, and that nothing at all flows along the wire.

Stretched Film.

H. C. Tomlinson, Erick, Oklahoma, sends in sample of film which has stretched, the same being from copies of Nestor Film. The stretching, in this instance, occurs only in the titles, but the titles show an elongation of almost 1/16 inch in six inches.

This is very bad, indeed, and, as Brother Tomlinson says, the operator is blamed both by audience and manager, for the evil effect on the screen. There is considerable complaint about stretched film lately, and it strikes me it is up to the manufacturers to prevent such careless handling of stock in their drying rooms, since I understand it is due to too rapid drying.

Wants the Book Published.

Touro Glucksmann, New Orleans, Louisiana, writes:

> As there are numerous electrical, mechanical and motion picture instruction books of questions and answers published, for which the authors receive handsome revenue, I fail to see where you are not justly entitled to publish the book in question and receive the same benefit. Therefore, Brother Richardson, the patent on your claim is allowed.

No comment is necessary, except that I've made no claim, except a wish to do what is best for all concerned.

Information Wanted.

John C. Dundon, superintendent of Department of Public Safety, Erie, Pennsylvania, asks for suggestions as follows:

> Have, for some time, been thinking of having an ordinance passed which will compel moving picture machine operators to pass an examination and to take out a license. Any suggestions or information you may be able to give me on this subject will be highly appreciated.

This is by no means the first city which has called upon the department for suggestions along this line. It seems to me that the publication of this matter at some length would be of distinct value, therefore, I am answering Mr. Dundon through the department, and let me say, right here and now, that Mr. Dundon, unlike many city officials, is displaying sound sense in seeking suggestions from recognized authorities in such matters, rather than butting ahead and trying to evolve a law, with the half-baked result found in the law books of altogether too many cities.

In the first place, I would say to Mr. Dundon that the licensing of operators is a commonsense proposition, but that the very common error has been made, by nearly all cities, of requiring an examination which would merely demonstrate to the authorities that the operator was capable of handling electric current, and the concentrated rays of a powerful arc lamp in conjunction with highly inflammable film, with at least a reasonable degree of safety.

That is as far as the average examination goes, and it is a tremendous mistake to stop at that point, because there is another element of danger involved, and that element is daily working injury to the community by reason of the fact that all too many moving picture operators have no comprehensive idea or knowledge of the revolving shutter of their mechanism, and this ignorance may and does cause bad effect on the eyes of the community. I would advise Mr. Dundon to provide, or have provided an ordinance which will (a) provide that operators must pass an examination and receive a license before being allowed to operate moving picture machines in the city of Erie; (b) that this examination be made, and the license issued by the city of Erie, the same to be good for one year, and to either be without charge or only to be charged for at a nominal fee of, say $2.00 or $2.50, because it is wrong in principle, as well as in fact, to compel a man to pay for the privilege of earning his daily bread; (c) providing for a Board of Examiners, at least one of whom ought to be a competent electrician, and, if possible, a practical moving picture operator; (d) providing that the examination shall cover not only the applicant's knowledge of electricity and its action, and of safety appliances, but also of the optical system, in so far as it has to do with flicker on the screen, basing this latter on the proposition that, with adequate knowledge on the part of the operator, it is frequently possible to very largely reduce, and some times entirely eliminate, flicker, and on the further proposition that flicker is highly injurious to the eyesight of the community. Flicker is a thing directly affected by the conditions surrounding each individual case.

I would also suggest to Mr. Dundon that in examining applicants nothing in the nature of catch questions should be asked, but only those calculated to bring out the real knowledge of the applicant, such, for instance, as knowledge of the action of fuses; knowledge of wire capacities, and why a wire is only allowed to carry a certain rated capacity; knowledge of measuring wires, including stranded asbestos wire; knowledge of resistance and how to test for grounds; his knowledge of the Edison three-wire system, and such other practical things with relation to electricity which may occur to the examiner. I would also suggest that the applicant be asked to explain the action of the revolving shutter; what effect speed of the projector has on flicker and why it has that effect. I would ask him, for instance, what the ideal three-wing shutter is; under what conditions that shutter may and may not be used, and such other questions as might occur to me tending to bring out the knowledge of the applicant along these lines.

Board of Examiners.

J. A. Morrison, Meaford, Canada, says:

> In October 31st issue, with regard to Mr. Johnston's criticism of Stillwater, the condition as set forth constitutes one of the arguments for an Examining Board, since an examination would promptly eliminate kid operators. I would like to say, however, that I have visited different sections of the States and from what I have seen there is no doubt but that operators need considerable looking after. The Province of Ontario has, I believe, the best law and the strictest with regard to operating room practice and the management of moving picture theaters. Under our law here nothing like the Stillwater condition could possibly obtain. Every operator must be not less than eighteen years of age, and must pass a competent and proper examination as to his ability. As to the Handbook, it is, in my opinion, of great service to operators. I have both the first and second edition, and if all operators and managers invested in those books and studied them, conditions like those set forth by Johnston would eliminate themselves.

All of which requires but little comment, except to say that a brother in St. Paul informs us that conditions in Stillwater are not as bad as Brother Johnston set them forth. However, even he did not undertake to say that they were by any manner of means ideal. Certainly the examining of operators helps, even though the examination falls below the proper standard. Here in New York City it has undoubtedly, of late, tended to eliminate the incompetents, though the New York examination only deals with the electrical end, hence does not go far enough.

Another High-Class Operating Room.

Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, contributes two excellent photographs of his operating room. Am sorry I cannot use them both, because the second one shows the machine pitch, which is very heavy, also the toilet arrangements. He says:

> This room, you will observe, Brother Richardson, is neither a booth, coop, or dog-house. It is 16 feet wide by 12 front to back; ceiling 11 feet. Our throw is a very hard proposition, there being a 4½-inch drop to the foot; the distance from lens to screen is 42½ feet, with a 14-foot picture. All this came about through no one's fault but the architect, who said he got his information from a lens' manufacturer. I believe we may say our picture is exceptional under the circumstances. The pitch throws the screen out of square with the machine by 5 feet. That is to say, if the screen were set square with the lens the top would be 5 feet back of perpendicular. We have set it 2 feet back of perpendicular, since it would be utterly impossible to get anything like decent results with the screen straight up and down.

We have a 24-inch vent in the ceiling, and on one side is a 4½ x 3 feet window. The room is built on the roof of the theater. It is provided with a marble toilet, wash-basin, a cooler with ice water, toilet paraphernalia, such as soap, comb, brush, looking-glass, towels, etc. On either side is a cabinet or drawer 4 feet long by 18 inches deep, which slides into the wall. The machines are 1914 motor-driven Simplex, supplied by a 40-ampere mercury arc rectifier having a 50-ampere tube and a no-voltage release magnet, so that when you freeze in the carbons the circuit breaker opens the contact and you get the minimum current. The supply is 110-220 three-wire, and the main line is capable of carrying 500 amperes; main fuses 400 amperes, and the main machine circuit fuses 100 amperes. We have two sets of fuses for each machine, so that in case one blows we only have to pull one switch and shove in another to cut in a new set, as Brother Palmer, my side kick, is about to do in the picture, the gink by the rewind being Yours Truly. The film is placed in a magazine on the wall over the bench. On the bench you see two bottles beside the water-cooler. Their contents are harmless, however, as they contain oil. We have a motor rewind as well as one of the hand variety. This is one of the best picture theaters in the country, bar none. It has a thorough ventilating system of four 48-inch fans under the floor which draws cool air up under each seat, and a large one through the gallery floor and ceiling. There are also forty 16-inch wall fans. Of course, I am too modest to mention the projection, but I want to say right now that the boys in Fort Worth don't have to remove their headgear to any one when it comes to high-class work. We can make that boast, and by golly we can make good on it, too. The name is Phillips Egypt theater. Operators Joseph H. M. Smith and H. M. Palmer.

I like to publish pictures of rooms of this kind, because it may help to expand the ideas of Mr. Coop-operating-room manager, and to show him that other, up-to-date managers are giving attention to their operating rooms. That ice cooler, toilet, basin, etc., looks mighty good to Your Humble Servant, as does also the orderly, neat arrangement of tools, and the excellent switchboard. Your projection proposition, however, is awful. Four and a half inches to the foot on a 48-foot throw is something terrific, and the results certainly cannot be what they should be. It is too bad that architects will try to do something they don't know how to do, and thus butcher things up so that the projection in the house they are building is permanently injured. If managers who intend building theaters would, instead of turning matters of this kind over to an architect, who usually knows as much about the requirements of practical projection as a hog knows about heaven, refer matters of this kind to this department or someone else competent to advise intelligently, such fearful blunders would be prevented. It is distinctly to your credit, Brother Smith, that you get any kind of decent results at all on a proposition of that kind.

Buy Larger Carbons.

C. G. Haney, Hampton, Iowa, says:

Am having an awful time with my carbons of late. They burn up so much faster on the outside, sometimes clear up to the carbon arm. Have had good results with all except the last order. Am going to send you a sample of one I have used and explain to you more fully. Hope enough of the boys send in for the second set of questions so that you publish them.

Brother Haney also sent a sample of damaged film. As to the carbons you do not state what amperage you are using, but I would suggest you get ¾ carbons and try that size above, with ⅝ below. Probably the binders of the last lot you got were poor; also very likely you are running right up close to the capacity of your carbons, and with this particular lot you have exceeded it. That is the way it looks to me.

Says I'm Wrong.

J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee, says:

In commenting on my answer to Question 53, you say that, while my reply on the copper rheostat is theoretically correct, it is not correct practically, because the coils would sag and high temperature would cause oxidizing of the copper. Well, brother, you are yourself in error in this, because I used two of these coils for three years, and in all they have been in use seven years. Last month one coil of the rheostat burned out, owing to dampness, water being thrown on it by accident. I understand the other coils are as good as ever. There are about a half dozen of these rheostats in use in suburban shows in this city.

Brother Roberts you are a good fellow all right, and I know you think you are telling me the facts, but I, on the other hand, feel you are full of stewed prunes on this particular proposition. Possibly the coils on the rheostat you mention are composed of some composition which looks like copper, but what in the name of heaven would a man use copper coils in a rheostat for, when it would take an enormous quantity of wire, be very bulky and costly, and, unless so much of it was used that the temperature is kept very low, most emphatically the copper would exidize. There is something twisted here somewhere, Brother Roberts, though I don't mean by that you are anything more than mistaken. If you have that burnt coil or a piece of it send it along. I only asked Question 53 to set the boys thinking and thus strengthen their knowledge on resistance. A copper rheostat is perfectly possible but commercially impractical.

Competent Instructions.

The Charles A. Strelinger Company, Detroit, Michigan, manufacturers of the Brush Electric Lighting Set, have forwarded copies of their instruction book.

I was more than agreeably surprised. As a general proposition instruction books put out by manufacturers are right next door to nothing. The books in question, however, are an exception. The instructions are profusely illustrated and excellent throughout. They could, perhaps, be improved upon somewhat, but, nevertheless, as compared to other similar works I have seen they are very fine indeed. The possible improvement would be in the nature of elaboration. For instance: In dealing with the commutator it says: "Cleaning once a day would suffice in keeping this in good order." Right! But there are no directions given for the cleaning, and, therefore, John Jones, out in Unionville, Mo., who would not be able to recognize a commutator if he met one in front of the county court house in the middle of the afternoon, don't know whether to use kerosene and a rag, soap, water and a scrubbing brush or—what! Ordinarily, under these conditions, John Jones will wind up by doing nothing at all, or exactly the wrong thing. Many of the instructions are, however, quite elaborate and complete.

Congratulations to the Strelinger Company on the general excellence of the work.

A Fundamental Question.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, writes:

Inasmuch as this light propelling matter which has been argued in the department and is brought up again by Friend Williams in December 12th issue, involves fundamental issues, it is, or ought to be of more than passing interest to operators, particularly in view of the fact that the student of the optics of projection will often come into contact with it. I would not, however, have brought the subject up again just now, but for the remarkable coincidence that Mr. Hammond, a noted inventor in this branch of science, has, and is at the present time, demonstrating, through the medium of Selig's Pictorial News and other topical motion pictures, the success of a device similar to that we have had under discussion. He has discovered that it is entirely practicable to use the beam of a million c. p. searchlight to control the steering gear of quite a large boat at some considerable distance from the shore, and, moreover, he does it in a manner similar to the method I suggested it could be done, by mounting black and silver vanes on a vertical shaft erected on one end of the boat. This vane is even exposed to the weather. I must confess that I am presumptuous enough to form ideas of my own, even after reading the work of some of the world's leading men. Most people, after reading Mr. Williams' letter would conclude there was no propelling power in light, but his argument offers no conclusive proof to me. For example: Suppose we place two 16-c. p. globes at a distance from the radiometer; that the energy from the lamps be just sufficient to rotate the same. If we turn one out, then the radiometer would stop revolving, which merely shows that the remaining energy is not sufficient to revolve the wheel. If we advance the remaining lamp to half the distance, then the radiometer would again revolve. When it is remembered that the luminous rays only form a very small proportion of the total in a beam of light, we readily understand why the radiometer ceases to revolve when the alumn cell, which absorbs 90 per cent. of the total energy, is interposed, whereas, with the iodine cell only about 10 per cent. of the entire beam is being absorbed. It is interesting to note that the invisible rays follow exactly the same laws which control luminous rays with regard to dispersion, refraction and reflection. Also under certain conditions, which alter their wave length, invisible rays become luminous. It is only the limit of our own physical senses which determine whether or not a ray is luminous, this being proved by the fact that the reflecting surfaces of the vanes of radiometer continue to act as reflectors even in the dark when they are no longer reflectors to our physical senses, otherwise the thing would not revolve in the dark, because, if all sides of the radiometer were blackened no amount of heat would cause the vanes to revolve. As I before said, a knowledge of the action of light is an extremely desirable thing to have; also it is extremely interesting, and a study which ought to be taken by every up-to-date operator. How many theaters using a. c. maintain an evenly illuminated screen at all times? I think you will be able to find very few. The users of a. c. have to contend with a condition which seldom confronts the users of d. c. I refer to what is known as interference. You have for years been telling us how to set carbons, which is only another way of telling us how to avoid light interference. Even with correctly matched condensers and a large spot it is still possible to have a rainbow effect on the screen; not so distinct as the color around the edges of the spot, but still enough to prevent a clear screen. This is caused by the mingling of the two sources of light—one from the upper and one from the lower crater, dut to an improper set of the carbons. A thorough knowledge of light action would eliminate this, since with such knowledge the operator could make an intelligent change in the position of his carbons. As it is, in all too many cases, he simply makes a change ,and trusts to luck for the result. However, like yourself, I am disinclined to prolong a discussion along these lines at present, for the very simple reason that I do not think the department can spare the space to accommodate it without neglecting issues that are of more vital interest to us just now.

I hesitated admitting this lengthy letter to the department for the very reason that Brother Griffiths sets forth in the last clause. However, Griffiths' articles on lenses have been of great value to us, and there are now some operators who can and will appreciate an article of this kind. Friend Griffiths is absolutely correct when he says that the operator ought to study questions of this sort. Personally, I must admit that I do not believe that light has propelling power. Like Brother Griffiths, I am inclined to form my own opinions. God Almighty gave me brains. Perhaps they are not very good ones, but, such as they are, I formed the habit of using them and relying upon them to a considerable extent. I don't know just what it is that makes that wheel spin, but I would have to have some very conclusive evidence to convince me that it is light, as such, meaning mere luminosity. When I say light has no propelling power I mean light—luminosity, visibility. If you ask me what the invisible rays do, why, that is something else again. I don't know, but I agree with Friend Griffiths, and thoroughly agree with him, too, that operators ought to understand and thoroughly understand light action, meaning, however, luminous light, because I do not understand that the invisible rays have anything to do with, or any effect upon the action of luminous rays.

Carbons Needling.

F. W. George, Wells River, Vermont, sends carbon samples and asks what is the trouble. The samples submitted are ⅝ cored electra carbons, one of which has needled 3 inches and the other 1½ inches. There is no indication of poor contact. In fact, the carbon arm contact seems to have been practically perfect. At the point of the long needle, however, there is a fault in the carbon, in the shape of a spot covering almost the entire point of the carbon. This spot is the color of iron, and is very, very hard. In this particular instance it undoubtedly caused the trouble.

Many Thanks.

The editor desires to express sincere thanks to all those who have sent Christmas remembrances. I was obliged to return two gifts of money. Presents of that kind, although they may be sent with the best of intentions, are not acceptable, but little remembrances such, for instance, as the pecans sent by Brother Blaine Day, Sherman, Texas; Christmas cards and things of that sort make one feel that he is remembered. Again, my friends, thanks—not for the value of the tokens, but for the fact that you remembered me.

OLIVE IS DISMISSED (Edison), Dec. 22.—Fifth of "Olive's Opportunities" Series. Written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and directed by Richard Ridgely, featuring Mabel Trunnelle. Edward Earle, Mabel Dwight, William Post, Bliss Milford and Duncan McRae (in a silly part) with their clever acting bring this picture to a rather reasonable finale, despite its shortcomings as a release.

THE VOLUNTEER BURGLAR (Essanay), Dec. 22.—Adapted from a Munsey Magazine story, telling how a young author became a burglar to assist a strange girl in gaining her ambitions. Richard C. Travers, as "Tommyrot," is the hero, and author, who accidentally assists the girl and obtains a good plot for a story, also the girl, after a series of thrilling incidents, which are quite interesting and entertaining.

THE WINNING WHISKERS (Kalem), Dec. 22.—A burlesque comedy on a weird dime novel which is foolish but is extraordinarily funny and excellently produced by Marin Sais, Lloyd V. Hamilton, Marshal Neilan and Bud Duncan. This comedy is received with great laughter by the audience and is deserving of all it gets.

HIS SUICIDE (Lubin), Dec. 22.—Written by Epes Winthrop Sargent and produced by J. T. Hevener, in which he plays the leading comedy roll, Bill Bogs, ably supported by Mae Hotely and others. On the same reel with "Flossie's Daring Loyalty."

FLOSSIE'S DARING LOYALTY (Lubin), Dec. 22.—A burlesque on a melodrama by Edward Ray Coffin and produced by J. A. Murphy. This is received with many laughs by the spectators and is well played by Mabel Paige in the leading role, supported by a good cast. On the same reel with "His Suicide."

WADE BRENT PAYS (Selig), Dec. 22.—A rather good story concerning a son imbued with reckless habits, to whom a fortune is left by his father, with certain restrictions, in the hand of a guardian. The story is very interestingly worked out by director F. J. Grandon, written by Marie Wing, and all in the cast of principals do excellent work. The photography also deserves mention. A good release.

'TWAS THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS (Edison), Dec. 23.—This caption brings back recollections that are dear even to the old residenters, and Annie Hamilton Donnell has written a heart reaching story which Ashley Miller has beautifully produced, with the old-time actor, Harry Eytinge, well known to thousands, as Santa Claus. It is a peculiar story in which are gathered little individuals from all countries, to pay their respects to Santa Claus in his home toy shop, and fill his stockings which he has hung up to dry, with their most sacred treasures that he has given them on previous Christmas Eves.

THE TIP OF THE DARK CONTINENT, CAPETOWN, SOUTH AFRICA, AND ITS VICINITY (Edison), Dec. 23.—An educational that is beautiful in conception, illustrative of the discovery of diamonds in 1867. Many scenes in Capetown are shown, panoramically, and stretches of the remarkable abundance of flowers. A view is given of the home of Cecil Rhodes, the "Father of South Africa," now residence of the Premier, especially interesting.

THE FABLE OF THE HUSBAND WHO SHOWED UP AND DID HIS DUTY (Essanay), Dec. 23.—A George Ade comedy which gets a little over the brink, although it is well acted by Richard C. Travers, Helen Dunbar and Gerda Holmes.

THE PROFESSOR'S ROMANCE (Vitagraph), Dec. 23.—William Addison Lathrop has written a very funny comedy which Sidney Drew has produced and in which he plays the part of the Professor. The house next door is an attraction, occupied by a widow, with a couple of children (Bobby and Helen Connelly) who makes things lively for the Professor, but everything ends serenely for everyone concerned. This is a most edifying and laughable comedy.

THE SUFFERING OF SUSAN (Biograph), Dec. 24.—An old idea worked out in a new sort of a way, regarding a girl who has a great ambition to become an actress. Her sweetheart cures her of her folly, with the assistance of a leading lady of a stranded professional company. It is quite entertaining to see how Susan succeeds in making herself ridiculous and realizes that a stage career for her is impossible. This contains a good lesson to girls with foolish ambitions. A very good number.

HOW SLIPPERY SLIM GETS SQUARE (Essanay), Dec. 24.—Another contest between Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete for the hand of Sophie Clutts. It certainly gets over for laughs and contains no ridiculous impossibilities, except where Slim was forced to jump home in a gunny sack. It is a finely produced comedy.

A HIGH OLD TIME (Mina), Dec. 24.—A comedy that mixes up white and colored people in a peculiar sort of a way and contains some remarkable stunts, which are not only original but awfully strenuous for the actors. This picture made an excellent hit with the audience, and if the future releases of this new brand are equal in production, they will certainly become very popular. Exhibitors will do well to try them out.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 86 (Selig), Dec. 24.—An interesting series of scenes in different cities of the world, ending with the latest data of war, showing some very thrilling occurrences, the mobilization of troops in the different countries, etc. A fuller description can be found in another department of this publication.

THE KNIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS (Vitagraph), Dec. 24.—Elaine Sterne has written a most beautiful Christmas story which Mr. Tefft Johnson (Daddy Jim), has produced wonderfully. Little Bobbie Connelly is the peculiar bright star of a good cast. The story, while a simple one, is very effective, showing how Sonny Jim proves himself a Knight by assisting others to be happy on Christmas and being rewarded in the end with what he wished for more than anything in the world—a little baby brother, which he judged to be worth, on inspection, about five cents. A beautiful release in every respect.

DOC YAK AND SANTA CLAUS (Selig), Dec. 25.—A Christmas cartoon concerning Doc Yak, which is really one of the best of the series.

THE WAY HOME (Biograph), Dec. 25.—A story that possibly conveys a lesson, though it is not exceedingly pleasant in theme, but, nevertheless, it is well acted and splendidly photographed. While it is a little morbid in places it holds attention and the ending shows self-sacrifice on the part of one character, from whom you would least expect it. A very touching number.

THE REFORMATION OF HAM (Kalem), Dec. 25.—A comedy picture written and produced by Marshal Neilan, in which he mixes up Lloyd V. Hamilton in peculiar straights in the Orient. It is productive of much laughter. Most of the scenes take place on the good ship Phillalloo, anchored off Kulangsu, China. It is a most strenuous comedy of the burlesque order and the audience seemed to take to it very kindly.

THE LURE OF THE GREEN TABLE (Lubin), Dec. 25.—A story of a man afflicted with the gambling mania, which is of a highly melodramatic order, with the scenes laid in the west, amongst rough characters. There is rather a pleasant ending where the young man's sweetheart save him from the lure of gambling. William E. Parsons, Al. Ebrite and Dolly Larkin do some very good work in the leads. Attractive scenes well photographed are the redeeming features of this picture.

SWEENEY'S CHRISTMAS BIRD (Vitagraph), Dec. 25.—Flora Finch, Hughie Mack, William Shea and Kate Price are certainly well cast in this Christmas comedy. They finally get a Christmas feast, but not of the quality they anticipated, which simmers down to pig. It is full of human nature in a comedy way and no doubt many such happenings occur on Christmas Eve in the environments where raffles occur for turkeys or something else. The audience thoroughly enjoyed this Christmas comedy offering.

HIS UNWITTING CONQUEST (Biograph), Dec. 26.—A picture made up of an unusual display of human passions, which is strong in a temperamental consideration but, perhaps, beyond the reasonings of the usual picture play goers. It is finely acted and in all other respects splendidly produced.

THE MAN WHO VANISHED (Edison), Dec. 26.—Made from the Felix Boyd series "Below the Deadline," written by Scott Campbell, in which Robert Conness is being featured as the famous detective. It is all very interesting to the casual observer and the star is supported by Bigelow Cooper, Robert Kegerreis and Yale Boss in the principal roles. It is a strange sort of a story and in places somewhat puzzling, but the end is satisfactory and reasonable.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SHERIFF'S OFFICE (Essanay), Dec. 26.—One of Mr. G. M. Anderson's vigorous western dramas, in which he is again the sheriff of the county, but is asked to resign for various reasons, and Lee Willard is elected to take his place, which he fails to fill satisfactorily. The story is not bad, but the characters are shifted around unreasonably.

THE ESCAPE ON THE LIMITED (Kalem), Seventh of the "Hazards of Helen" Series, featuring Helen Holmes. This sensational series certainly excites, but unreasonable things are creeping into it, that will eventually arrive at a point that will ruin it. Miss Holmes certainly takes some great chances and her acts hold the audience spellbound. J. P. McGowan deserves credit for some fine work in this release. It is of a thrilling and exciting nature.

BRANNIGAN'S BAND (Lubin), Dec. 26.—A comedy of a rough and tumble sort, concerning a band, an organ grinder and a baby, which mix about like oil and water. It fulfills its mission as a laugh producer. E. W. Sargent is the author and J. A. Murphy producer. On the same reel with "A Troublesome Cat."

A TROUBLESOME CAT (Lubin), Dec. 26.—A Vincent Whitman animated cartoon picture which is reasonably funny. On the same reel with "Brannigan's Band."

THE CHAMPION BEAR SLAYER (Selig), Dec. 26.—An amusing sort of a picture, showing how a man, who delighting in telling of his prowess as a bear slayer, got mixed up with some real ones and lost his reputation. The best part of the picture is the introduction of several bears, grading from the cub size to one enormous one. The animals do their parts finely and in places it is productive of much laughter.

MR. DALY'S WEDDING DAY (Edison), Dec. 28.—A comedy release featuring Augustus Phillips, assisted by Bigelow Cooper and Edward

Lawrence. This is a detective story which is quite amusing in construction, concerning "phony" money and contains complications which are not only amusing but edifying. In the ending there is a good little comedy surprise which is thoroughly original. This can be recommended as a good release in all respects.

SWEEDIE COLLECTS FOR CHARITY (Essanay), Dec. 28.—A comedy in which Sweedie cuts a big figure and really surprises herself by opening up Mr. Tightwad's purse and helping out a poor family. It borders on the ridiculous, but is, nevertheless, amusing and entertaining.

PATSY BOLIVAR SERIES, NO. 1, PATSY AT SCHOOL (Lubin), Dec. 28.—Written by Clay M. Greene and produced by Percy Winter. This is quite funny, as Patsy is the goat for everybody. It is a pretentious comedy production, with a large cast, headed by Clarence Jay Elmer as "Patsy Bolivar." It makes a hit with the spectators and will please any audience.

THE PRODUCT (Vitagraph), Dec. 28.—Written by the well-known author Frank Dazey and produced by Robert Gaillord and Maurice Costello, the latter playing the leading part. It is a strong story, the theme of which is the curse of drink and contains a valuable lesson. Many thrilling scenes, including a fire episode, vividly portrayed, are embraced in the action. The entire cast supporting Mr. Costello, do full justice to their parts, and the production in all respects is highly commendable.

THE BLACK SHEEP (Kalem), Dec. 28—A two-part story featuring Marguerite Courtot and Tom Moore, who is also the director. This is a peculiar story filled with interesting incidents. Much human nature pertains involving sympathetic situations. The acting is well done; those deserving mention in support are Robert Ellis, Frances Lincoln, Herbert Conley, Charlotte Courtot and Richard Purdon. A pleasing production.

THE FLOWER OF FAITH (Selig), Dec. 28.—A two-part picture full of the beautiful and varied scenes, featuring Edith Johnson. The story is somewhat trite but is magnificently produced and splendidly acted and photographed. It is only sufficient to say that it will highly entertain and satisfy any audience.

ON THE HEIGHTS (Biograph), Dec. 22.—This two-part picture play has been reviewed at length by George Blaisdell in the Moving Picture World, and can be found on page 1530, issue of Dec. 12, 1914.

BY THE GOVERNOR'S ORDER (Vitagraph), Dec. 22.—A special feature in two parts, written by Joseph Le Brandt and produced by Robert Gaillord and Maurice Costello, who plays the leading part, assisted by an elegant cast. It is a strong story, produced photographically, mechanically and artistically in the Vitagraph's best manner. This is a superior picture.

THE FATAL OPAL (Kalem), Dec. 23.—A two-act modern drama with an all star cast, including Marin Sais, Douglas Gerrarde, William H. West and Paul Hurst, produced by George H. Melford. A melodrama containing many complications hinging on the superstition of an opal, which in this instance was set in a stick pin.

THE SINGLE ACT (Lubin), Dec. 23.—A two-reel picture written by Marc Edmund and produced by Paul M. Powell, which probably is supposed to be a production, and no further comment is necessary, only regarding the acting and photography.

A SOLDIER OF PEACE (Lubin), Dec. 24.—A two-part story written by Emmett Campbell Hall and produced by John Ince. This is a really beautiful picture, covering a period from the Civil War up to the present time, with the cast made up of the following: Earl Metcalfe, Mary Keane, Margaret Dawson, Doris Heywood, Marie W. Sterling, John Ince and Harry Backus. The costuming deserves commendation and the battle scenes are thrilling and effective. A picture that deserves special mention.

ANY WOMAN'S CHOICE (Essanay), Dec. 25.—This two-part picture play has been reviewed at length by James McQuade in the Moving Picture World, and can be found on page 1849, issue of Dec. 26, 1914.

THE PREMATURE COMPROMISE (Edison), Dec. 25.—The second of "Young Lord Stranleigh" Series in two parts, written by Robert Barr. Marc McDermott is making of this character one that is a reminder of Lord Dundreary. There are quite some thrilling incidents in this offering of an adventurous nature. The photography is of the first class sort and taken as a whole the picture meritorious.

AN AFFAIR FOR THE POLICE (Vitagraph), Dec. 26.—A special feature in two parts. A very clever comedy which furnishes a complete surprise at the finale. It is finely played by Leah Baird in the lead, supported by Louise Beaudet, Leo Delaney, Arthur Kline, J. Herbert Frank and Julia Swayne Gordon. It is a splendidly produced picture by William Humphrey. Jane Lennox is the author.

Independent

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 146 (Universal), Dec. 23.—This contains interesting and informing sidelights on the war, American fashions, sports and other interesting features.

SUGAR MAKING IN CUBA (Pathe), Dec.—An interesting bit on the production of sugar, from the gathering of the sugar cane to the finished product ready for the market.

HIS SECOND CHILDHOOD (Keystone), Dec. 26.—Murray appears dealing with the affairs of Birdie Snitz and her family. Much of the action takes place on and in the waters of a lake. This makes a fairly amusing number. The photography is good.

MUTUAL WEEKLY (No. 104), Dec. 24.—In this issue of the Mutual Weekly many scenes from the seat of war are presented, among them the Zeppelin shed that was destroyed by shells. Other interesting items are Aviator Andre, who was wounded by the enemy; the "Camino" sailing via the Panama canal for Rotterdam with food for the starving Belgians; the mile of pennies carnival held by the children of the National Capitol, and also for the Belgian relief fund; the Edison plant at Orange after the conflagration, and other equally interesting scenes.

BOBBY'S MEDAL (Reliance), Dec. 25.—This is a good offering, treating of how a small newsboy reading of the expected arrival of a Prince and Princess from Italy, falls asleep and dreams the most remarkable dream of how he saved them from the black hand gang. Bobby Feuhrer handles the role of the newsboy with intelligence.

HIS SECOND CHILDHOOD (KKeystone), Dec. 26.—Murray appears in this number dressed up as a governess in order to be near his sweetheart. The characterization is good, but the idea has been used so much that it is hard to make it appealing.

THE RECORD BREAKER (Komic), Dec. 27.—A road race in which Eddie Pullen, speed champion, drives a Mercer car at the rate of 102 miles an hour is the base of this film. The story has been drawn on comedy lines. The funny situation of the picture is where the lover and the gambler change the signs on the replenishing tanks, together frustrating the end that each hoped to gain.

HAZING THE HONEYMOONERS (Warner's), Dec. 28.—This picture, made at the Gaumont studio, has fair qualifications for light comedy. The situation although not exactly a natural one has good fun-making qualities. The Honeymooners, recognized by some friends at the hotel where they have come to spend their honeymoon, are made the objects of a joke perpetrated by changing the number on the door of their room. Needless to say, laughable complications occur.

GUZZLE, THE GOLFER (Keystone), Dec. 28.—A very diverting comedy burlesque, with Syd Chaplin and Mack Swain appearing as a pair of golfers. The action throughout is very amusing and the scenes well photographed.

FICKLE ELSIE (Powers), Dec. 28.—With Elsie MacLeod as the heroine and Eddie Redway and Phil Sanford as the rivals, the humor is of an eccentric sort and gets over very well. The effect of the beauty pills and strength pills on the two men is funny. The photography is clear and pleasing.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (Chapter 50), Dec. 28.—Especially interesting is this chapter of "Our Mutual Girl," when Margaret visits May Preston, "the most prolific of all the women artists of this country," at her studio. Some comedy has been worked into the picture through the introduction of a couple of models whose meeting at the studio of Mrs. Preston works itself into a pretty romance.

BABY'S RIDE (Majestic), Dec. 29.—This is a very attractive offering in which a nervous mother, after taking the greatest precautions to guard her child, one day arouses from meditation over the fashioning of a fancy vest for her husband, to find the baby gone. The audience, however, has been let into the secret of the child's disappearance, which has been caused by the little one's stealing out and clambering onto a carpet cleaner's wagon, unknown to the driver. Later she rolls out of the wagon in the folds of a rug, and arrives back home with a band of children playing "army." This picture cannot fail to please. Geo. Beranger has directed it, and Wallace Reid and Miss Blake play the parents

LOVE KNOWS NO LAW (Beauty), Dec. 29.—A well-photographed comedy number in which the cook spills hot water on her foot and is sent to the hospital like the heroine of her story. Later the plot switches off into other situations of less interest. The production holds the attention only fairly well.

THE UNSEEN VENGEANCE (American), Dec. 30.—A film story with a good moral in it for temperamental young married people. The husband, a novelist, becomes enamoured of a Russian gir who gave him the material for a story. In later years they quarrel and he is glad when his wife returns and forgives him. This is well photographed and full of modern interest. The cast is pleasing.

THE MESSAGE (Reliance), Dec. 30.—In this picture there has been made a sincere effort to place a truth before the public, that of the curse of alcohol. The effort, unfortunately, bears the hall-marks of crudeness.

OH, YOU CITY GIRL (Warner's), Jan. 3.—On the same reel with "A Lady in Distress" is a Western comedy, not particularly strong in the legitimate comic quality, but no doubt suited to the masses. A young lady from the city out walking becomes frightened and takes refuge in a shack occupied by several sturdy westerners, who force the young lady to fill the position of cook at the cabin. On the following day, however, they are glad to welcome the unprepossessing specimen that is sent them in answer to an advertisement which they have had inserted in the paper. This, however, not before one of their members has secured the promise of the pretty city girl's heart.

A LADY IN DISTRESS (Warner's), Jan. 3.—Made at the Crystal Studio and released on a split reel under the Superba brand, this picture is evidently intended as a lesson in burlesque on the wisdom of minding one's own business where husbands and wives are concerned. Pearl White plays the feminine lead as the distressed lady who, in spite of the abuses hurled at her by her husband, resents in a forceful manner the proffered aid of interfering outsiders.

THE SIN OF OLGA BRANDT (Rex), Jan. 3.—A two-reel number, featuring Pauline Bush, Wm. Dowlin and Lon Chaney. The girl stenographer consents to live with her employer because of her sick sister. The sister dies and the girl leaves him. Later she marries a young minister. The scene at the moving picture show, where the committee passes upon a similar situation, was to the point and interesting. The minister forgives his wife after her confession, remembering the biblical admonition, "Judge not that ye be not judged." This is very well done for this type of offering. The photography is very good and the cast handles the story well.

THE HERMIT'S SECRET (Eclair), Jan. 3.—Lindsley J. Hall and Marie Reynolds appear in this well photographed story. The girl is injured by a falling tree and he takes her to his hermit's cabin. Her mind remains clouded, but reason is later restored through an accident. A conventional theme with a sympathetic touch in it and pleasing outdoor scenes.

GEMS AND GERMS (L-KO), Jan. 3.—Eccentric comedy of a fairly amusing sort. The dog drinks the professor's liquid containing germs and starts a wild chase. The girl and her bald-headed lover start another and every one winds up in the lake, also the dog. This has amusing moments.

THREE TIMES AND OUT (Imp), Jan. 4.—In which King Baggot plays the part of a flirtatiously inclined man. He flirts with his friend's wife and is jailed three separate times for the offense. In spite of the broad character of its humor, this comedy is handled so well that it proves very interesting. The photography is good and the cast pleasing.

FOR THE GOOD OF THE CAUSE (Nestor), Jan. 5.—A breezy comedy number, in which Eddie's mother-in-law is an ardent suffragist. He makes good with her by wearing a pennant, "Votes for Women," and then takes her to a cabaret. The closing scenes were not as strong as the beginning, but it makes a very fair offering.

TIT FOR TAT (Warner), Jan. 5.—In this picture, which is of the farce comedy order, a young man takes a young lady driving. During the drive he insists that she allow him to kiss her, and because she resents his advances forces her to walk. Another young woman joins forces with the aforesaid, and together they play a joke on the young man, running off with the horse and carriage while he is gathering flowers for them. This is perhaps the most amusing incident in the film.

SAPHO UP-TO-DATE (Warner's), Jan. 6.—This is rather a good eccentric comedy offering released under the Superba brand. An artist looking for a model for Sapho chooses one who is particularly memorable for her avoirdupois. Considerable fun is gotten out of the fact that Sapho's sweetheart objects.

NEVER AGAIN (Warner), Jan. 6.—This film has very little if anything to recommend it. It is intended for farce comedy, but oversteps the line of vulgarity to such an extent that it becomes repulsive. A man impersonates a woman and applies for the position of cook in a private family. At the discovery of the deceit his garments are torn from him and he is pursued through the streets with only a woman's corset and its appendages over his own undergarments.

CUPID IN A HOSPITAL (L-KO), Jan. 6.—A burlesque number with some decidedly laughable spots running through it. Billy Ritchie invades a hospital, where he makes love to one of the nurses and creates a riot among the patients. A bottle and a bomb add to the excitement. A successful comic offering.

BUY-BUY BABY (Warner), Jan. 7.—Dot Farley does good work in this picture, in which comedy approaches the eccentric sort. The situation chosen will have a strong appeal, especially to the female portion of an audience, who will rejoice with the saleslady in a modiste's shop at the turning of the tables on a certain flirting husmand, making him foot the bill for an elaborate wardrobe for his much-neglected wife. The picture is released under the Luna brand.

A MAN'S TEMPTATION (Rex), Jan. 7.—Ben Wilson and Frances Nelson appear in this number. He portrays a French fencing master and kills her husband after a duel challenge, brought about by jealousy. The story is not extremely convincing, though the scenes are interesting.

OLIVE'S LOVE AFFAIR (Sterling), Jan. 7.—A juvenile number, with Olive and Little Billy in it; also a fine big dog. The children really do some exciting work in their rescue over the side of the cliff. The best of these juvenile numbers shown for some time.

UNCLE ABNER'S WILL (Warner), Jan. 9.—This is a farce comedy of the sort suited to the general audience. It is, however, rather childish in conception, and has little to recommend it. A number of idlers and others looking for a good home, seek with temporary success in establishing their claim to the deceased Uncle Abner.

WHEN HIS LORDSHIP PROPOSED (Nestor), Jan. 8.—A comedy number by Al E. Christie. Lee Moran plays the part of a lord who proposes to two girls, both of whom go back on him before the wedding ceremony. This is light and pleasing in treatment and proves quite amusing, though it never becomes extremely laughable.

A POLITICAL MESS (Joker), Jan. 9.—The main idea in this, in which the candidate for Mayor poses as a sculptor and places a cement cast over his rival's face, is very funny. The rival candidate's predicament is indeed a bad one and a chisel has to be employed to get the cast loose. A successful low comedy number.

A GIRL OF THE PINES (Powers), Jan. 9.—A lumber camp story in which Edna Maison appears as a girl dressed in boy's clothes. She is bullied by the foreman because she is not strong enough for heavy work. Joe King appears as the hero and saves her. An interesting situation, but the plot is not very strong.

MARRIED BY INSTALLMENT (Royal), Jan. 9.—This film can safely be classed as something really new. It is farce comedy of a most acceptable sort, handled by an excellent cast, and directed with care. A unique feature of the picture is found in the office of the marriage broker who supplies stationary, wedding costumes, a minister and a cameraman. One of the comic situations of the play, which is well put over occurs when the new hubby discovers that the ten acres upon which he has fondly dreamed are fields of crisp cabbage, turns out instead to be ten small children.

PANAMA CANAL (Universal), Jan.—An exceptional scenic reel, picturing in a clear, entertaining way the important features of the Panama Canal as it stands since completion. This is next to a trip to the scene itself. Views are shown of the steamship "Anchon" passing through on the initial trip, carrying promiment officials and their ladies. The mechanism of the locks and other instructive features are shown. The photography is generall very good.

THE EXPOSURE (Reliance), Dec. 26.—This is an interesting newspaper adventure, told in two reels, and directed by F. A. Kelsey. Irene Hunt plays the role of the young woman who finds her opportunity to make good in uncovering the grafting schemes of the City Councilmen for the benefit of the paper by which she is employed. By means of a dictagraph placed in an adjoining room at a restaurant the conversation of a City Contractor with one of the honest councilors whom he believes to be his friend and to whom he is handing graft money, is recorded. It is at this point of the story that the young woman recognizes her former sweetheart through a hole in the wall, the man who is apparently receiving graft money for his own purposes, but who it afterward divulges, is preparing for the exposure of the graft system on his own account. One of the finest scenes in the film is that in the council chamber where the Councilman faces the Contractor with the charge of graft.

THE RED SCAR OF COURAGE (Eclectic Pathe), Dec.—Laid to a large extent in the war zone of Europe, this picture of two reels elicits considerable interest partly from the fact that here and there are placed scenes of the departure of soldiers for the front, the placing of guns, etc., that have no doubt been snapped up by the Pathe cameraman during the campaign. The story is fairly interesting, showing as it does how a young lover wins the approval of his sweetheart's father through bravely facing the dangers of war, and thereby winning the hand of the girl he loves.

THE OLD FISHERMAN'S STORY (Majestic), Dec. 27.—In this two-reel production an acceptable picture has been manufactured out of a very spare story. The picture would by no means stand out as a masterpiece, and the constantly recurring scenes where the sightseers listen to the old man's recitation of the story of his hunchback son Ned, become somewhat tiresome, but the remainder of the picture has a fair claim to artistic development. Spottiswoode Aitken plays well the rather trying role of the old fisherman reciting his story. Jack Conway gives an excellent interpretation of the role of Ned, and Raoul Walsh as the weaker vessel, Ben, brother of Ned, who leaves his wife and child for a gypsy maid, is all that could be desired. And last, but not least, comes Mary Alden, whose conception of the "Gipsy Devil" is what would be expected of so fine an actress.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Dec. 28.—Seventh episode. This features principally in the first reel a number of views about San Francisco, including a good look at the World's Fair grounds. Tom Kane, portrayed by Charles Manly, arrives from the mine and assists John Dore in rounding up the conspirators. The second reel is full of interesting action, including a thrilling fight on roof tops, in which the deeds are lost. An entertaining instalment.

WHEN A WOMAN WAITS (American), Dec. 28.—In this two-reel offering the work of Winnifred Greenwood in the feminine lead is unusually good. In the making of the picture no tremendously heavy dramatic situations have been permitted. The story is one of pathos, simply and effectively told. The subject is not a happy one, but the manner in which it has been handled is artistic and thoroughly satisfactory. One of the unique points of the production is the presentation of the contents of a letter received by the waiting woman from her sweetheart as a series of animated photographs. During the period of waiting at her own suggestion, that she might mother her motherless sisters and brothers, her lover dies in a distant territory, her father dies, and her sisters and brothers one after another marry and leave her alone.

LUCY'S ELOPEMENT (Thanhouser), Dec. 29.—A two-reel offering dealing with the familiar subject of an elopement. In spite of the fact that this has been done over and over again in almost the same way, this is made very entertaining. Considerable suspense is aroused over the hero's successful attempt to get the girl down the rope and off to the minister before the irate father appears. Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster play the young couple. The photography is good and this production makes good use of stock situations.

THE SECRET OF THE MOUNTAIN (Eclectic Pathe), Dec.—This four-reel offering has been prepared in the European studio of the Pathe Freres, and is decidedly European in its style and method of production. The story is interesting, though not unusual, and treats of the sorrow caused through the gambling habits of a young man, to his father and sweetheart. Discovering that his father, whose faith in him is implicit, has gradually sacrificed all his property to supply him with money during his college term, he goes with a party of friends on an excursion through the mountains to evade the outcome of his perfidy, during which time he takes advantage of an injury which he sustains through a fall over a precipice, to permanently withdraw himself from the zone of his father's financial disaster. Later the old man wandering in the streets is taken in by the sweetheart, and in a moment of repentance the son in search of his father in the old home is directed to where a happy reunion takes place.

GERTIE (Box Office Attraction Co.), Dec.—Another unique offering which will create mirth wherever it is exhibited. In this film George McManus bets Windsor McCay on a trip which they take through the Museum of Natural History, that he cannot, as per McCay's boast, draw a picture of the mammoth Dinosarus and make it live again. McCay wins the bet, and the result of his work as presented by the Box Office Attraction Co. is one of the most entertaining examples of the animated cartoon ever presented.

THE IDLER (Box Office Attraction Co.), Dec.—The photo-play production of C. Hadden Chambers' drama, "The Idler," reflects much credit on Director Lloyd B. Carleton, who directed it. It is a strong drama and lent itself easily to the film, and in its five reels there is not a moment without interest. Apart from the action of the play, which has been handled by a cast of well-known stage stars, namely, Charles Richman, Catherine Countiss, Claire Whitney, Stuart Holmes, Walter Hitchcock and Maud Turner Gordon, special attention should be called to the quality and depth of many of its settings, the richness and good taste of the costuming, and the splendid photographic effects achieved. If any fault can be found with the production sa presented, it is in the lack of explanatory subtitles, a few more of which might help the uninitiated to grasp the full intent of the play. A review of this feature will be found on page — of this issue.

A CAPTAIN OF VILLAINY (Victor), Jan. 4.—Adventure No. 5 of the Terence O'Rourke series. This is excellently staged and artistically handled throughout. In this number Terence comes to the aid of a young wife who is being victimized by a blackmailer. The scenes in Tangiers are full of atmosphere and the plot itself is strong and convincing. George Periolat gives a good presentation of the villainous army officer whom Terence thwarts. A good instalment.

THE LEGEND BEAUTIFUL (American), Jan. 4.—A two-reel story of Mission days, with Wm. Garwood, Ed Coxen, Vivian Rich and Jack Richardson in the cast. The story is allegorical and full of good sentiment. It deals with the lives of two brothers who inherit property after their father's death. The good brother is tricked out of his heritage and becomes a wanderer. The figure of Christ appears to him and leads him back to home and happiness. This feature is handled with a degree of reverence and good taste that make it acceptable. The release is a strong one of its type and is finely photographed.

THE MYSTERY OF THE THRONE ROOM (My Lady Raffles Series, Gold Seal), Jan. 5.—A fine two-reel romantic comedy, written by Grace Cunard. Miss Cunard never appeared to better advantage than in the double role of the queen and the American girl. The latter impersonates the queen, who is being forced to marry against her wishes. The settings are artistic and the story enjoyable. Francis Ford and Harry Schumm have important parts, the former playing the international spy and the latter the part of Capt. Johns, whom the real queen loves. An excellently presented light comedy with romantic snap in it. The photography is excellent.

THE COLLINGSBY PEARLS (Eclair), Jan. 6.—One of the best offerings shown by this company for some time. The pleasing cast includes Francis Herberlein, Lottye Fowler, Frederick Sumner and Irma Earle. The story, which is well-constructed throughout, concerns a valuable string of pearls and some paste substitutes. The crooks quarrel over a girl and the two factions attempt to get the pearls on the same night with disastrous results. A familiar type of plot worked up with a good degree of suspense and well photographed.

THE SCOURGE OF THE DESERT (Broncho), Jan. 6.—A two-reel Western number, with Wm. S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell in the leading roles. Hart plays the part of a bandit whose depredations have struck terror to the hearts of the Western country folk. He later demonstrates that he has a better side. This is forcefully presented and contains many scenes of interest. The story is somewhat conventional in tone, but is given strong, convincing treatment. The photography is good.

THE SCRUB (Domino), Jan. 7.—A fine two-reel football story. The college atmosphere is maintained throughout the entire production and the photography is attractive. This picture shows how the scrub substitute coaches his rival in his studies and the forward pass movement, so that the latter brings the home team to victory. At the banquet table the star player gives proper credit to the scrub, who is presented with a college letter and wins back the love of his best girl. This is one of the best college photoplays we have seen.

ON THE DESERT SANDS (Big U), Jan. 7.—A two-reel offering with Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Mrs. Benson in the cast. The story is based on the familiar theme of the child found on the desert after the parents have been massacred by Indians. She grows up and eventually marries the hero, who first found her as a baby. There is not a great deal of novelty in the opening scenes, though the action and photography are good. The most interesting situation is in the second reel, where the men gamble for possession of the girl.

SHE WAS HIS MOTHER (Imp), Jan. 8.—A sex story told in three reels. This is strongly pictured and even artistically handled in many respects. The story itself suffers from its depressing tone and cannot be called pleasing in spite of its strong presentation. In the first scenes the country girl is deserted by her city lover. She brings her baby to the city and is rescued from drowning by a woman who keeps a fast house. The girl brings up her boy in these surroundings. The young father recognizes her and steals the child. When the boy grows to manhood he learns the truth and kills his father. The final scenes shows his mother testifying in court to save his life, in which she is successful.

A MIDAS OF THE DESERT (Kaybee), Jan. 8.—A strong two-reel offering, in which Walter Edwards gives a good piece of character portrayal. He appears as a man who allows gold to become his god, forgetting his daughter and all else in his desire for more wealth. His desertion of the daughter and death on the desert are convincingly shown. The girl is befriended by the hero and finds happiness. This is excellently photographed and care has been taken with the details and minor action. A good offering.

CUSTER'S LAST SCOUT (Bison), Jan. 9.—An excellent two-reel Western number, produced by Henry McRae. Alfred L. Chapman, the last remaining witness of the Custer massacre, is shown telling the story of the great military tragedy. The entire story adheres fairly well to historical facts. The photography is clear and smooth, the scenic effects picturesque and the view of the massacre itself is convincing. In spirited action, strength of plot and general interest this is an exceptional offering.

THE CRYSTAL GLOBE (Kriterion).—A two-reel Paragon picture featuring Dorothy Davenport and Lee Hill in a love story. The plot is too slight to afford much punch, but the directing and acting are so good that the offering will keep interest awake and is quite sure to please. It is one of those stories that are made convincing rather than are so naturally. The photography is perfect and it should be a good offering.

THE TATTOOED MAN (Kriterion).—A rough farce from the All Comedy Film studio and directed by Alexander Frank. It has the conventional suffragette, the conventional crazy man and the usual rough business—there is some freshness in what it shows. A fair, light, rough offering.

AND PERCY MADE GOOD (Kriterion).—An elopement farce directed by Bert Angeles, recently with Vitagraph, and made in the Santa Barbara studio. The two juveniles are quite acceptable, but Dad will not so surely seem comical to all kinds of spectators. Photography is perfect. Plot is slight. A fair offering.

Feilding to Head Round-the-World Co.

Lubin, in His Record-Breaking Plan, Disregards War—Trip to Extend Three Years.

WITH a company of twenty-one people, Romaine Fielding, Lubin's star producer, will leave Philadelphia on January 4 for Phoenix, Arizona, where the first stop will be made in the world's tour scheduled by the Lubin company for the largest cast ever assembled for such a purpose. It is expected that Mr. Fielding and his people will be away from Philadelphia three years or more. Complete plans have not yet been announced by the Lubin Co., but it is understood that California, the Hawaii Islands and Alaska will be among the many places visited in order to secure the proper settings and atmosphere for some of the features which the author-director has up his sleeve.

Romaine Fielding.

It is the first time in the history of motion pictures that a world's tour has been attempted with such a large and complete company. That the Lubin company has decided to carry out such a program at the present time is indicative of its splendid stability, enterprise and firm confidence in the future prosperity of pictures. Both Siegmund Lubin, head of the Lubin firm, and Ira M. Lowry, general manager, have displayed an enthusiastic, but wise attitude toward the present conditions and future outlook of the film business. The choosing of Mr. Fielding to head such an undertaking is a signal recognition on the company's part of his ability both as a producer and business executive.

Three special cars will carry the company, with properties and two automobiles, out of Philadelphia to the southwestern state. The company will leave on Monday evening and is expected to arrive in Phoenix Friday. There it will remain throughout the winter and, perhaps, part of the summer, to produce plays written and directed by Mr. Fielding and featuring him in the leading roles. From there, the company will move on to California, where there will be produced, among others, pictures laid in and around the Panama Exposition. The Hawaiian Islands and Alaska will follow in the tour which will then continue west.

BIG EDISON NIGHT AT EMPIRE.

Notwithstanding the bitter cold of last Tuesday night, December 22, the residents of the Bronx turned out in vast numbers to behold in real life at the Empire Theatre their screen favorites of the Edison Company. As early as nine o'clock the magnificent theatre was taxed to capacity and the spacious lobby held a throng eager to gain admission. After the showing of the Edison features "The Colonel of the Red Hussars" and "The Best Man," Frank Bannon, the Company's publicity man, introduced from the stage Sally Crute, Miriam Nesbitt, Gertrude McCoy, Duncan McRae, Robert Conness and Marc MacDermott. A grand innovation was tendered to the artists by the admiring fans and the ladies were each presented with a gorgeous bouquet of flowers. The players then retired to the rear of the theatre, where they at once became engaged in affixing their signatures in books, albums and on slip covers in the possession of the fans.

ELAINE IN LOEW AND FOX HOUSES.

Jules Burnstein, who so successfully manages the destinies of Eclectic's New York exchange, is wearing a broad smile these days and opines that it's a fine holiday season. Here's the answer. "Jule" has booked the "Exploits of Elaine" in twenty-one Loew theatres and eleven of the Fox houses. For good measure he has put the Pathe News into the big auditorium of John Wanamaker's for first run twice a week service. You're right, Jule, it is a fine holiday season.

"Cinderella."

Miss Mary Pickford Is Charming in the Famous Players' Four-Part Interpretation of Fairy Story.

IT IS a delightful interpretation the Famous Players has given us of this old friend of childhood. In the title role of "Cinderella," which is shown in four parts, Miss Pickford brings to bear all her native charm. The producer, James Kirkwood, has made wide use of the camera in transferring to the screen the atmosphere of the fairy story, with its sudden transformations and happenings so out of the ordinary in the view of everyday human beings. It is a subject that particularly will please the little ones, as was evidenced at the Strand on Monday afternoon.

As was to be expected, there are many comedy bits—what with the uncomely stepmother and two sisters who heap abuse on poor Cinderella; their terror at the sight of a mouse, their "fussing up" to win the hand of Prince Charming and their dismay when he repels them; or their violent struggles to get a No. 7 foot into a No. 2 shoe. We see Cinderella falling asleep by the bundle of sticks the fairies have picked for her and her discovery by the prince; we are shown, too, the creation of a coach and horses and attendants out of a pumpkin, a cage of mice and a cage of rats. The things that happen about the great clock as Cinderella dreams of her wonderful experiences in the palace will amuse grown-ups as well as convulse the children.

It is a well staged throne room in the palace where Cinderella goes to attend the reception given that the prince may make a selection of a bride. So, too, there are many picturesque exteriors of field and woodland. "Cinderella" is well done. It will make excellent entertainment for any house.

VITAGRAPH THEATER'S NEW BILL.

The successful one-act playlet "What the Moon Saw," written by S. Rankin Drew and the lead in which was taken by Sidney Drew, will be replaced at the Vitagraph Theater on Monday, January 4, by "A Nocturne in A Flat," written by J. Stuart Blackton. The players will be William Humphrey, Rose Tapley and Bobbie Connelly. Ned Finley had been slated to play in the sketch, but his assignment to Texas prevented. The Broadway Star Feature will be "Mother's Roses," a four-part subject written by Ralph Ince.

"What the Moon Saw" has been played for four weeks. It has been popular with picture and theater goers.

MOROSCO PREPARING PLAYS FOR SCREEN.

Oliver Morosco, the prominent theatrical producer, who with John Cort recently entered the motion picture field in association with Bosworth, Inc., is now busily engaged in the preparation of several of his stage successes, which will be presented on the screen.

The Morosco plays will be produced under the name of Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and will be released by Bosworth, Inc., through the Paramount Program. Through this combination many prominent successes of the legitimate stage, together with well-known stars, will be presented in motion pictures. The first release under this plan will probably be "The Judge and the Jury."

"The Birth of Emotion."

Beautiful Two-Part Subject Depicting the Beginning of Human Passions—Produced by the Nash Moving Picture Company.

THE skill of the cameraman and the wealth of Nature have been combined by the Nash Moving Picture Company in a production of unusual beauty under the title of "The Birth of Emotion." It is a two-part subject intended to illuminate the subject by depicting the life of man in primitive times. Skins of animals and the leaves of the trees supply the sartorial requirements of the players and their homes are the caves and leafy bowers.

As to the manner in which the players have illustrated the birth of human passions there may be a difference of opinion among critics. It is no easy matter to handle, especially when one is compelled to get about barefoot over rocky places, but the three players intrusted with that uncomfortable task did quite well with it, the woman getting about with greater ease than the men.

For the settings of this picture one of Nature's beauty spots was chosen and the scenes, in consequence, are charming. Good photography and good light effects add greatly to that natural charm of locality. Altogether it is a picture well worth seeing. It will be released by the Kriterion.

Kessel and Baumann Going West.

New York Motion Picture Corporation Heads Start on Periodical Trip to Coast on January 4.

ON A regular trip to the western studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, Ad Kessel, president, and Charles O. Baumann, vice-president, will leave New York on January 4. It is the intention of the chiefs of the N. Y. M. P. to take up with Messrs. Ince and Sennet, the company's producing managers, the plans now under way for the expansion of the concern's business. It is definitely announced that the company will also produce in the east, utilizing the big Willat studios at Fort Lee, which the company has recently acquired. It is the intention to produce big features with prominent stage stars. The executive offices of the company in the Longacre Building have been doubled in capacity, so that now the corporation occupies nearly one-half of the ninth floor of the Times Square structure.

Robert Edeson, it is announced, is to appear in N. Y. M. P. productions. George Beban is at work on "The Sign of the Rose," his second subject. Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell also have been added to the playing forces. Billie Walsh and Harry D. Ward will accompany Messrs. Kessel and Baumann on their trip west. These two will join the Keystone playing forces. Mr. Walsh is a well-known entertainer. Mr. Ward is known to theatregoers for his Dutch comedy work. It is announced that the weekly releases of the Keystone company will be increased.

RALPH INCE JOINS KESSEL AND BAUMANN.

Announcement is made by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, Kessel & Baumann, managers, that a contract has been signed between that concern and Ralph Ince, by which the latter will begin work at the Fort Lee studios on January 18. It is understood that Mr. Ince's contract is for an indefinite period and that he is to produce one feature each month. It will be remembered that Mr. Ince directed 'A Million Bid" and other Vitagraph features.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"IN THE SHADOWS (Alliance).

"In the Shadows," a five-part production from the novel by John Hymer, will be the first release of the new year on the Alliance Program. The production was directed by Scene from "In the Shadow" (Excelsior).

Harry Handworth, and the favorites of the Excelsior Company, including Gordon De Maine, Wm. A. Williams and Octavia Handworth, appear to better advantage in this than in any previous production.

The production was made at the studio of the Excelsior Company at Lake Placid, and the rugged picturesque Adirondack country provided many beautiful backgrounds for Mr. Hymer's strong story.

FLORENCE REED IN "THE DANCING GIRL" (Famous Players).

Florence Reed, the celebrated emotional actress, whose amazing talents have been seen to advantage in such recent Broadway successes as "The Typhoon" and "The Yellow Ticket," in the latter of which she won a distinct personal triumph, makes her first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players Film Company's realistic and artistic screen adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' world-famous drama, "The Dancing Girl," which will be released on the Paramount Program January 11th.

"The Dancing Girl" might have been written for the camera, so full of action and picturesqueness is every scene, the colorful exteriors of the rocky coast of "The Isle of Endellion" contrasting with the rich interiors of the elegant home of the profligate Duke of Guiseberry, under whose patronage the dancing girl lives for a time; and there is the dramatic comparison of the sober life of the grave Quakers on the lonely island, with the gay life of London society and the bright Bohemia of the singers and artists, with whom the Quaker girl mingles when she becomes the favorite of the Duke. Perhaps the greatest incident of the play is the famous "staircase scene," where Drusilla, at the zenith of her fame, having come to dance before the Duke's own family, declares to her amazed and angry old Quaker father, who comes in search of her, that she wants to be "the topmost rose on the topmost bough and live in the sunshine," and is crushed by the terrible wrath of a father's curse. Tottering for a moment beneath her father's scourging censure, she faints, and falls the length of the grand staircase, and awakens to consciousness, knowing at last the havoc she has made of her life, and the shame she is to her people. The tragedy of this is followed by a splendid scene in which occurs the meeting of penitent Drusilla with the nobleman whom her extravagance has ruined, on the lonely coast of Endellion, where both have come to seek death, and where they decide, instead, to rebuild their shattered lives and to share a newer, purer life.

In the exceptional supporting cast are included such Broadway favorites as Fuller Mellish, Malcolm Williams, Eugene Ormonde, William Russell, William Lloyd and Minna Gale.

"COMRADE KITTY." (Lubin.)

This is a charming little love comedy written by Shannon Fife, the Pennsylvania college boy, who has offered so many dainty stories to the credit of the Lubin studio. It is made up of love, kisses and laughs, and will please the admirers of sweetheart tales. Ned Hicks plays a trick on his father, but he cannot help loving Kitty, the pretty auditor of the shipping department, and though his father plans a rich girl match that Ned cannot see. The boy wins out and "dadda" cannot help giving his blessing. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe play the leading roles, which, of course, is guarantee of an excellent cast.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO. WINS TITLE LITIGATION.

After extensive litigation the courts have dismissed the injunction suit of the Famous Players' Film Co. against the American Film Mfg. Co. to restrain the latter from the use of the title "The Aftermath" and the American Film Mfg. Co. is granted the full and unrestricted use of the title "The Aftermath," their two-reel feature release of August 31, 1914.

"MY LADY HIGH AND MIGHTY" (Victor).

Mary Fuller is featured in "My Lady High and Mighty," a two-reel light comedy drama to be released under the Victor (Universal) brand on January 11. Charles Ogle supports Miss Fuller.

The drama of English country life gives Miss Fuller an opportunity to display her horsemanship which she grasps with excellent effect. As the petted, spoiled daughter of an English earl Miss Fuller exhibits yet another facet of her many-sided versatility.

Some excellent sets are used in the drama. A Georgian bedroom set of mahogany and a baronial hall are especially worthy of commendation. Miss Fuller is an especially bewitching figure in her nightie and riding habit with mannish breeches and carries out her role in a devil-may-care fashion which should further endear her to those with whom she is so great a favorite.

Impressionable misses who are waiting for the coming of their cave-man may be a little horrified at the realistic make-up of Curtis Benton as a hairy-armed primitive brute. Mary Fuller, clothed in wolf and bear skins, however, is just the docile sort of wife most men would prefer.

Lady Mary favors the cave-man type of suitor and Sir Harvey does his best to live up to her ideal. With his gnarled war club he compels her to cook for him, to sweep out his cave with faggots and then commands her to lie down in a corner, like a good cave-wife, and to go to sleep without chattering. The Earl of Dreadwood fails to grasp the situation until Lady Mary has promised to marry her Sir Harvey-cave-man at the first possible moment.

"THE OLD CODE" (Selig).

The two-reel release for Monday, January 11, on the Selig Regular Weekly Program, is a remarkable tale of love and hatred with the scenes portrayed on the northwestern frontier. It was written by James Oliver Curwood, whose Scene from "The Cld Code" (Selig).

scenarios are being featured by The Selig Polyscope Company.

Wm. Stowell and Edwin Wallock, whose work in a number of Selig productions among which stands out distinctly "In Tune With the Wild," take the leading parts in "The Old Code," of Pierre and Langlois, the two woodsmen who are rivals for the hand of pretty Marie, the daughter of an old frontiersman.

Pierre and Marie are lovers, but the girl in a spirit of mischief flirts with Langlois, a rough and brutal fellow, whose attentions she loaths in secret. She enters into a flirtation with him for the purpose of making Pierre jealous and succeeds to her dismay beyond all her expectations. Langlois makes Pierre believe that he is the successful suitor and Pierre, rendered frantic, engages in a fist fight with Langlois.

Another forest maiden, Lola, pretends to be friendly with Marie, but utilizes her intimacy to embroil the two lovers and keep them apart. She is in league with Langlois.

The two rival woodsmen decide to settle their dispute by reviving "the old code" which provides that disputes shall be settled in a hand-to-hand conflict to the death on an island in the river.

While they are engaged in their deadly mimic warfare Marie discovers the conditions and frantically goes to the rescue of her lover, Pierre. She arrives on the island just in time to thwart the brutal revenge of Langlois, who has made a prisoner of Pierre and is putting him to the torture as is his right under the rules of the old code. Marie ends the torture by putting a bullet through the skin of Langlois and rescues her lover.

Then the truth in the matter comes out and Langlois flees the country to escape lynching by the indignant forest people.

Some of the most magnificent scenery ever photographed for the screen has been reproduced in this remarkably effective and intensely dramatic picture-play by the Selig camera men.

"PATSY'S FIRST LOVE." (Lubin.)

This number is replete with misfortune for Patsy, his hopeless love for the schoolmistress drives him to attempted suicide, which, however, is prevented by his sister. Sykesy, as usual, plans humiliating tricks, which always result in Scene from "Patsy's First Love" (Lubin).

Patsy's punishment and vexation. Never before has one been so afflicted. He falls from a tree and breaks his arm, which he has to wear in a sling at Mary's wedding. The wicked Sykesy trips him up in the procession down the aisle, and his father, instead of being sorry for him, sets him to do chores on the farm. Altogether Patsy gets beautifully the worst of it at every turn. The only one who offers any sympathy is Mary, the schoolmistress, and while she is comforting him and allows him to weep over her shoulder, they are discovered by her husband and a new trouble is in order, thru Jack's jealousy. Clarence Elmer, as Patsy, is pitifully great in this chapter, and Edwin De Wolff, as Sykesy, is as wicked as anyone can wish.

ALLIANCE PROGRAMME RECEIVES GRATIFYING RECEPTION IN AUSTRALIA.

After thoroughly opening up the American and Canadian fields to the films on the Alliance Programme, General Manager Andrew J. Cobe announced that he has concluded arrangements with the leading independent film distributors of Australia and New Zealand to handle the Alliance output in the Antipodes.

The first of the Alliance productions has already been shown in Melbourne, Sydney and other cities and was warmly received by Australian audiences.

"THE COLLINGSBY PEARLS" (Eclair).

A strong and intensely gripping society drama is always welcome on any program, and "The Collingsby Pearls," released by Eclair on Wednesday, January 6, is no exception to the rule. The story revolves around a marvellously beautiful rope of pearls, a band of society crooks, and the final reconciliation of a warring husband and wife, drawn apart through the artificialities of so-called high life. The clever plan of the thieves, their exciting capture and the final denouement, which gives the story a most unexpected turn, all go toward making the "Collingsby Pearls" a most attractive and interesting Eclair release. Lottye Fowler, Richard Garrick and Irma Earle are featured in the stellar roles and their work is of the highest calibre. The settings and society atmosphere of the entire production were looked after by a well-known society matron and their accuracy is unquestioned.

Scene from "The Collingsby Pearls" (Eclair).

"DISTILLED SPIRITS" (MinA).

This one-reel MinA film is said to be one of the most advanced examples of trick photography on record. It tells the story of an inebriate and visualizes his delirium, the grotesque horrors of which bring about his complete reformation. Milton Fahrney, against whose name many great successes have been recorded, was the director of "Distilled Spirits," scoring thereby the greatest achievement of his long career.

Scene from "Distilled Spirits" (MinA).

"Distilled Spirits" is a comedy which depends largely upon its situations for humor. An interest larger than the laugh is created by its incredibly skillful mechanics, and in the tenseness of its rapidly developed story. In addition to this, "Distilled Spirits" points a high moral lesson, and with its many elements of appeal should prove one of the most exceptional releases of the day.

"THE GARDEN OF LIES" (All Star).

For the making of "The Garden of Lies" the All Star Feature Corporation, under the direction of Mr. Pratt, journeyed to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Florida, where most of the exteriors were made. The shores of the Gulf of Mexico were made the basis for a number of the magnificent scenic settings, and numerous old castles and mansions dating far back into the Spanish period were secured, and many of the interiors were made therein. In addition to Jane Cowl, the cast contains Violet Horner and other prominent All Star Stock players.

Scene from "The Garden of Lies" (All Star).

The scenario in "The Garden of Lies" was written by Louis Reeves Harrison. "The Garden of Lies" is a five-part production, released by the Alco Film Corporation January 4th.

ARBUCKLE IN NEXT BOSWORTH RELEASE.

Maclyn Arbuckle, one of the most prominent portrayers of typical American characters on the legitimate stage, will make his initial appearance on the screen under the Bosworth banner in "It's No Laughing Matter."

Written and directed by Lois Weber, "It's No Laughing Matter" presents the jovial Arbuckle in a role for which he is specially adapted, as Hi Judd, poet, postmaster and philosopher of a little country village. The story is simple, yet strong in the unfolding of its half humorous and half romantically dramatic plot.

Supporting the star is an exceptional cast including such artists as Adele Farrington, Myrtle Stedman, Herbert Standing and Charles Marriott. Miss Weber has spared no effort to make this one of the most picturesque and true to life photoplays ever produced and as a delightful comedy drama it has no precedent. "It's No Laughing Matter" is the next Bosworth offering on the Paramount program and will be released January 14.

BERT LEVY IN WORLD FILMS.

Commencing on January 4, 1915, the World Film Corporation will make a weekly presentation of "Bertlevyettes," in one reel, showing Mr. Bert Levy himself and his work. Mr. Levy has been before the world for many years as a stage entertainer, and the man and his work are familiar to millions. Now, by the aid of the World Film's colossal organization in the United States and Canada, he and it will be offered to the eyes of many more millions of people. As illustrator, cartoonist, lecturer, writer, Mr. Levy is facile princeps: he entertains royalty and plutocracy, rich and poor; he is equally popular in the palace and vaudeville houses.

In the World Film pictures, Mr. Levy is first of all personally introduced and he is not seen again, though his pencil is seen deftly creating his masterly sketches on the screen. They originate, grow and are completed under his masterly touch. At the start you are set guessing. As line and outline accrete, however, you get an idea of what is coming. Your interest expands. You are startled and excited; finally the picture of a familiar face flashes before you, and there is your likeness of a famous person on the screen. It is a very popular screen offering.

The first of the series is "Great Americans, Past and Present"—Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Lee, McKinley, Woodrow Wilson, and others. The second of the series will be "Famous Men of Today"; the third, "Famous Rulers of the World"; the fourth, "New York and Its People."

ALICE JOYCE'S PICTURE BLOCKS STREET.

Upon more than one occasion the police have been required to keep the crowd a'moving in the vicinity of a drug store on the southeast corner of Broadway and Forty-third street, New York City, where this exquisite oil painting of Miss Alice Joyce is on exhibition. The portrait shows the famous Kalem beauty and heroine of the Alice Joyce Series, wearing a million dollars' worth of gems and a three-thousand-dollar "Lucille" gown. It was painted by M. Kassel. The picture is enclosed in a shadow box and a four and one-half inch wide burnished Roman gold frame. The latter was made by Menger & Ring.

MinA COMIC SERIAL.

CONSISTENT with its well defined policy of springing a big surprise or two every week, the manufacturers of MinA Films now announce a fifteen-reel comic serial. It is to be known as "The Girl of His Dreams," and will feature Harry La Pearl, the famous circus clown.

The new MinA serial will be presented in weekly single-reel instalments, each reel telling a complete story, with a strong connecting thread running through the whole set.

The idea is novel in that it burlesques the big sensational serials that have been running jointly in the motion picture theaters and the newspapers throughout the country for the last year.

Arrangements have been made to syndicate "The Girl of His Dreams" as a weekly magazine section story—through one of the most powerful magazine syndicates in America. Each newspaper instalment will appear simultaneously with the release of the corresponding episode of the picture in each city, and the link between this vast advertising and the exhibitor will be furnished by a system of one and three-sheet posters that will "make people think the circus has come to town."

The serial was directed by Fred Loomis, and in addition to Harry La Pearl, the familiar faces of Elaine Ivans, the Little Nell of motion pictures; Jennie Nelson, the crack broncho rider, well known for her portrayals of western types, and fifteen prominent clowns picked from various circuses will be seen.

"The Girl of His Dreams" will be a regular MinA release on the General Film Program.

"THE CAMPBELLS ARE COMING"—A FEATURE.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are making their five-reel feature, "The Campbells Are Coming," a splendid, spectacular affair. Last week the siege of Delhi was staged and visitors from all over the state came to see the realistic fighting. Ford takes the part of an Indian potentate and Grace Cunard that of an appealing little Scotch lass. Los Angeles visitors watched the battle scenes from the grand stand which was erected for Damon and Pythias.

BIOPHONE SECURES PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

On December 24, 1914, the Hon. Chas. M. Hough, of the United States District Court, ordered a preliminary injunction restraining the Renfax Film Co., Inc., from marking its records in any manner infringing letters Patent No. 761,846 of the United States issued June, 1904.

Regarding the above, DeWitt Fox, of the Renfax Film Company, states that the injunction does not affect the company's business in any way whatsoever, merely necessitating a slight change in marking of the records.

Victory for Park Theatre

Boston Theater Can Show Moving Pictures—City Officials Claimed It Must Conform With New Law; But Judge Fox Dismisses Bill—Mayor Will Take Case to Supreme Judicial Court.

By E. H. McCloskey, Special Correspon dent of Moving Picture World.

THE bill which the City of Boston had filed against the Park theater, seeking to restrain the latter from giving moving picture shows in the theater until it complied with the law requiring that buildings erected or altered for such shows shall be of first-class construction, was dismissed by Judge Fox of the equity session of the Suffolk County Superior Court after he had heard the arguments of both sides of the case.

At this hearing, which lasted for two days, Attorney David Stoneman, a director of the company, testified that alterations of the theater were two-thirds completed last August, when the new law went into effect requiring motion picture houses to be henceforth of first-class construction. The alterations, he said, cost $75,000, and consisted of making new exits, installing one concrete balcony instead of two wooden ones, putting up a machine booth and plastering the theater's interior.

Building Commissioner O'Hearn, who started the trouble, testified that on Aug. 17, last, the company applied for an alteration permit, but made no mention that the building was to be altered for the purpose of use for moving pictures. This application was granted Aug. 25. On Nov. 23, according to him, the alterations were approved and it was eight days later before he knew that pictures were to be exhibited.

John H. Mahoney, supervisor of construction for the city, testified that the theater now had a permanent booth for a moving picture machine and a screen for the pictures. The license for the theater to conduct theatrical performances was granted on Dec. 7.

After Judge Fox had listened to all the evidence, he issued the following decision:

"This case turns on the construction and application of Section 4, Chapter 782, Acts of 1914, which says: 'Every building hereafter erected as a theater and every building hereafter altered to be occupied as a theater, shall be a first-class building. Every building hereafter erected for, altered to or converted to use as a moving picture house shall be a first-class buiding.'

"The act was approved by the Governor on July 7 and went into effect ninety days after. After its passage, the Park theater entered on extensive alterations, getting the necessary permits from the city authorities, and had completed two-thirds of the work when the act went into effect.

"The only structural change which made the theater better adapted for the production of moving pictures than it had been before was the construction of a permanent booth for housing the cinematograph and accessories. Before this change, the theater, in common with other theaters in Boston, had occasionally produced moving pictures, installing temporary booths for this purpose.

"The building as it now stands is as well adapted for ordinary dramatic purposes as it was before. It is better adapted for the production of moving pictures only in this respect, that the temporary booths formerly used upon occasion have now been replaced by a permanent booth. Since the opening of the theater after the renovation, it has been used exclusively for moving picture entertainments, with instrumental and vocal accompaniments and interludes. The theater admittedly is not of first-class construction.

"It is clearly not the purpose of the statute to discriminate against moving picture houses as compared with theaters, but to bring both into the same class. I can see no reason indicated by the statute, and no reason has been suggested why a theater used as a theater before the passage of the act should not devote itself hereafter exclusively to exhibitions of moving pictures.

"The clear purpose of the statute is not to save existing investments in theaters and moving picture houses, but to provide that hereafter that buildings shall not be erected for or turned into theaters or moving picture houses unless they be of first-class construction.

"The word 'theater' has been defined by our statute. The phrase 'moving picture house' has not been defined and is used for the first time in the act in question. According to the definition given by an architect, a moving picture house as distinguished from a theater is known as a building which does not contain a stage and this seems to be a reasonable distinction.

"Whether we go by this distinction or by the definition of the statute, the Park theater is as truly a theater now as it was before alterations were made."

This case is regarded as a most important one. When Mayor Curley was informed of the decision he said that the matter involved the safety of the public. He stated that it was his duty to take the case to the Supreme Judicial Court for a final construction of the statute passed last July, and which went into effect in October. He said that the theater was doing a moving picture business in a second-class building, while the statute, which went into effect before the license for the theater was applied for and granted, calls for a building of the first-class. The mayor further stated that if the Supreme Judicial Court should place the same interpretation upon the act as did Judge Fox, it would be his duty to endeavor to secure the enactment of a different law.

Building Commissioner O'Hearn also discussed the case after the hearing. He said that the Park theater was clearly doing a moving picture business in a second-class building. "If this is going to prevail in a modern city, why I don't know what we are coming to," he said. He claims that he has had no controversy with the theater management, but had given them everything they had asked for; namely, a license to operate the Park theater as a theater, nothing being said about the moving picture business. He said that the building to conform to the law as he interpreted it should have a fireproof floor and ceiling.

This decision for the moving picture management in Boston is a most remarkable victory, as it appears that the building department of the city tried to discriminate when they filed their suit against the Park theater.

After the decision had been announced, the management of the theater applied for a license to give Sunday night performances. This permit was immediately granted by Mayor Curley.

EXHIBITORS' EXPRESS NEW PITTSBURGH WRINKLE

Idea for Quick and Cheap Handling of Films Between Exchanges and Shows Is Being Tried in Smoky City.

By Pittsburgh News Service.

AN exhibitors' express company has been organized in Pittsburgh by E. F. Drum and William Little to carry films to and from between exchange men and exhibitors. The reels are carried by automobile trucks which can be timed to fill the peculiar needs of the motion picture trade and insure a prompt schedule delivery at both ends. This does away with the boy toter, who is apt to be youthful and often a worry and a nuisance. The exchange gets rid of the talkative crowd waiting to be waited on and can attend to the collecting of the films in the office and the dispatching in a more business-like way and with less annoyance.

The company is already at work, although as yet only the eastern part of the city is being served. It more than probably will prove a big success and as soon as trade warrants it the truck service will be given to a much larger section of Pittsburgh and its suburbs.

Louisville Prosperous

Increment in the Seating Capacity of Picture Shows in Louisville, Kentucky, During the Past Twelve Months Encouraging—Year Marked by Prosperity.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE increasing popularity of moving pictures is demonstrated by the fact that between 4,000 and 4,500 more seats are available in the downtown districts than were to be had during the corresponding season of last year. During the past few months the new Alamo theater has opened with a capacity of 1,100 seats. The old B. F. Keith theater, which is now used as a motion picture house, has a capacity of 1,500. The Masonic theater, which was maintained as a legitimate house last season, is not operating steadily as a moving picture house, but has a capacity of about 1,500 and is in operation over half the time. The Star theater opened in the early fall with a capacity of about 300 seats and the Walnut theater, which has a capacity of about 1,500, has reduced its prices to five cents. No theaters have closed in the downtown district with the exception of the Hopkins theater, which was destroyed by fire some months ago. This theater had a capacity of about 1,500, but was slightly out of the theater district, except for the Market street patrons. A large number of suburban houses have sprung up also. Among the handsomest of these is the new Cherokee theater and the Parkland theater. The Empire theater at Shelby and Market streets has added 100 seats. The East Broadway theater is being rebuilt and will have a great many more seats. When the number of houses which are now running both downtown and in the suburbs are taken into consideration it is easily seen that the movies' growth has been very rapid and is destined to increase. It also proves the superiority of the two and three-reel features as well as longer ones over the old style single-reel stories.

It is interesting to note that a number of motion picture houses which ceased to operate when the special war tax went into effect have paid their taxes and are again in the ring. One of the local film houses which lost three small houses out in the state has regained the entire lot. It was at first thought the houses would remain closed until spring anyway.

OTHER LOUISVILLE NOTES.

J. JOHNSON MUSSELLMAN, with the aid of Carpenter & Johnston, film men of Louisville, recently took 500 feet of motion pictures of Belva Brown, a young woman who recently appeared at Anchorage, Ky., and who has since been the subject of a great deal of space in the Louisville newspapers. It has been hard to establish the girl's identity. It is generally thought that she is working some advertising "stunt," but the papers have "played up" until the public is very curious as to what it all means. Mr. Mussellman has been promised a number of bookings on the short film which is expected to take exceptionally well.

Louis J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company, has purchased the Parkland theater from M. H. Thatcher, ex-Governor of Panama, who built the theater during the summer and who has been president of the concern operating it since that time. J. J. Mussellman has been placed in charge of the show house. General and Paramount services are being used.

Rowland Clark, manager of the Arista theater, of Lebanon, Ky., which was recently damaged by fire, has the theater back in running order again and is showing regularly. First reports stated the house was completely destroyed, including all equipment, but this was not the case. A fire did do considerable damage, however.

Charles Pressy, of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, of Louisville, has opened a southern branch at Jacksonville, Fla. The new office is in the Manhattan building and a stock of reels and supplies will be carried. This territory was formerly traveled by Fred Sheldon, president of the company, who at that time was connected with the Kinemacolor Company's Louisville office. Mr. Sheldon is thoroughly conversant with conditions throughout the South and has intended to invade his old territory for some time.

Camera men representing the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, recently made a trip to Western Kentucky, where a picture was made which is entitled the "Possum Hunters." This picture deals with conditions in the mining district which for some time has been in the fear of bands of night riders who operate under the name of the "Possum Hunters." The picture shows a number of buildings which have been riddled with bullets after one of the raids, and should go well in the western portion of the state as well as locally.

Louis M. Berg, who formerly operated a road show, has established himself at 424 West Green street. He operates the Great Southern Film Exchange and the Elite Feature Film Exchange. In addition to film service he carries a line of machines and supplies, and is also interested in the Kentucky Gold Fish Farm, located next door to his place of business. The latter concern was established with the intention of furnishing gold fish to moving picture houses, the gold fish to be used as souvenirs.

H. J. Roberts, of Milton, W. Va., was recently in Louisville calling on the film exchanges and figuring on new service.

Kentucky manufacturers of moving picture machines, opera chairs, and other supplies, were considerably surprised at the recent decision of the State Court of Appeals, which declared unconstitutional the workmen's compensation law, enacted at the last meeting of the legislature and of which so much was expected. The law was to have gone into effect between employers and employes on Jan. 1, and manufacturing concerns had already made arrangements either to insure with the state or with the commercial companies. It is hoped that a new law may be enacted at the next session of the legislature which will prove constitutional.

H. C. West, a traveling exhibitor who knows feature films, was recently in Louisville for a fresh outfit, as he had completed his circuit and had to have a new show.

The chairs and fixtures have been advertised for sale. The opera house was built in 1907 and was the pride of the city at that time, but the motion picture theaters are now getting the business.

Screeners Hold Frolic

Members of San Francisco Screen Club Attend Performance at Empress Theater —After Pictures and Vaudeville Stage Was Cleared for Dancing— Prominent People Present.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THROUGH the courtesy of Sid Grauman, manager of Loew's Empress theater, and president of the Screen Club of San Francisco, the members of that organization, with their friends, attended the last performance at the Empress on the evening of Dec. 18 and were then further entertained by a special vaudeville program, made up of talent from various houses. This program consisted of a half a dozen selected numbers, in addition to a reel of moving pictures taken at the recent Screen Club ball at the Coliseum. These pictures brought forth many pleasant recollections and showed Mayor Rolph leading the grand march with Mrs. Rolph, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Charles Chaplin, Victor Potel and other visitors among the player folks, as well as most of the members of the club.

At the close of the regular performance the invited guests remained and were addressed by several members of the club. Secretary N. K. Herzog gave a brief talk on the objects of the gathering and read telegrams of regrets from a number of prominent people in official circles who were unable to be present, together with a telegram from the Screen Club of New York. Charles Stillwell then gave a short talk and introduced one of the newly appointed Judges of San Francisco, who delivered an interesting address. In this he dwelt upon the meteoric rise of Sid Grauman, from a newsboy in the street to the manager of a great theater, and of his efforts to make the recent Screen Club ball a great success. Much to the surprise of President Sid Grauman he then produced a handsome silver loving cup, suitably engraved, and presented it amid great applause. In accepting the token Sid Grauman spoke feelingly but briefly, acknowledging that he was overcome with emotion. He wished for the club many years of service and a continuation of the present good times.

Following the regular program the stage was cleared and dancing was indulged in by all those who wished to trip the light fantastic, while at the same time a collation was served. It was not until the wee, small hours of morning that the first frolic of the Screen Club of San Francisco came to an end and it was voted to be such a successful affair that others are planned for the future. The value of the Screen Club is already becoming marked, bringing together as it does the leading exchange men, producers, exhibitors, actors and writers and permitting of the interchange of ideas.

Educational Pictures Win Out.

According to a decision just reached by the California State Board of Education the school children of the State will hereafter be treated to a course of education through the medium of moving pictures. Upon a special report of Will C. Wood, Commissioner of Education, on visual instruction, in which proper films for educational work were cited, the Board authorized the establishment of moving pictures in the curriculum of the elementary and high schools. The Commissioners of Education, co-operating with local school authorities, will act as a board of censorship. Pictures of animal and insect life, travel views and certain fictional photoplays emphasizing some proper instructive moral, embrace the film subjects classed as acceptable.

Cleaves to Lecture "Julius Caesar."

The wonderful success that has been met with in the presentation of the great George Kleine masterpiece, "Julius Caesar," wherever it has been shown in California, has led to the engagement of the distinguished Shakesperian scholar and reader, Prof. Fordyce P. Cleaves, A.M., who will deliver a lecture at each performance, including the delivery of Marc Antony's oration. Prof. Cleaves will start out in advance of the film and will address schools, clubs and educational bodies on the attraction, returning two days later to deliver the lecture. Hundreds of inquiries are being received from schools, colleges and study clubs, asking for information as to when it will be possible to view this picture.

Other San Francisco Items.

The great increase in business that has been experienced of late at the San Francisco branch of the George Kleine Attractions has necessitated another change in offices, although the present quarters have been occupied but a few months. Two late model Motiographs have been installed under the direction of W. W. Lewis, who is one of the leading operators on the Coast.

J. A. Quinn, a prominent moving picture man of Los Angeles, was a visitor here this week and announced his intentions of entering the San Francisco field on a large scale. He states that negotiations are under way for the erection of a moving picture theater in the downtown district, the house to have a capacity of 3,000. Mr. Michaels is striving hard for the betterment of moving picture conditions on North Beach, but competition is such that he feels that progress is slow. The prize contest for the naming of the house is at an end and the theater will be formally named at an early date.

Operators Victimized.

Charles E. Young Waits Trial in Kansas City on Charge of Swindling Operators by Blind Ad Offering Position—Applicants Were Asked to Deposit Five Dollars to Show Good Faith.

By Kansas City News Service.

IN one of the Kansas City newspapers on Dec. 2 there appeared an advertisement seeking a moving picture operator. It was a "blind" ad, giving instructions to send answers to the newspaper. There happened to be several idle operators in the city, because of the suspension of airdomes in surrounding towns with the advent of winter, and the closing of two large theaters in Kansas City. The advertiser therefore received several replies. To each letter, it is said, he responded that he had received several answers, but that this particular one suited him best. He also stated that he owned a theater in Paola, Kan., and that his operator was leaving immediately; if the answerer of the ad would send five dollars to Chas. E. Young, Paola, Kan., as a guarantee of good faith, the job would be held for him. Several operators sent their money. But there was one who was a little keener after that job than the rest. This fellow went to Paolo. He inquired for the owner of the theater who wanted an operator. But he could find nobody answering that description—there was no job, and as far as he could discover, no advertiser. Naturally he became suspicious. He called up the postoffice inspectors in Kansas City, who instructed him to notify the local sheriff and have the advertiser arrested when he called for his mail. The operator got the sheriff, and together they went to the postoffice—and there they learned that the man who had advertised under the name Chas. E. Young had called for his mail and gone a few minutes before.

The matter was dropped for the time being. But the postoffice inspectors—and the operator—watched closely for a reappearance of the ad.

Several days later Inspector Frank F. Sharon became interested in an advertisement in the newspapers offering to mail 18 pounds of pecans anywhere in the United States, postage prepaid, for $1. The inspector took his station at the window and waited for the advertiser to call for his mail. The man came and was arrested. When he was asked to write, he wrote a "hand" that to Inspector Sharon looked remarkably similar to that of the man who answered the inquiries of the moving picture operators.

The man, being questioned, confessed that he was the one who had advertised for operators before he went into the pecan business. He is now in custody, waiting trial.

Feetyur Phil Live Wire in Kansas City.

N. H. Spitzer, manager of the Box Office Attraction office of Kansas City, has added a new man to his force. This gentleman's name is Feetyur Phil, and his occupation will be advertising—an inside and outside job. Feetyur Phil is not a flesh and blood man; as a matter of fact as yet he is simply a caricature printed on a postal card. However, the advice that he gives exhibitors is well worth heeding. Feetyur Phil expects to visit the exhibitors of Missouri at least once a week.

More Missouri Items.

The moving picture business in Kansas City during the past week has not felt the stimulus that other business has. The fact that other lines have felt such a decided boost is probably the reason that the Kansas City exhibitors have seen their receipts dwindle. The suburban theaters complain that people are staying at home making Christmas presents, while the downtown theaters say that people are too busy shopping to attend a show.

W. J. Morgan, one of the pioneer picture men of Kansas City, has taken offices with the C. & A. Film Co. in the Gloyd Building. As yet he has not announced his intentions.

The Twelfth Street theater has secured a return engagement of "The Battle of the Sexes," the Mutual feature by Griffith. This theater ran the picture two days when it was first released in Kansas City. It was so successful that time that it has been booked for a week this time.

Joe Gilday, booking agent for the Willis Wood theater, returned to Kansas City after a short trip to Chicago. While in Chicago Mr. Gilday reviewed over forty thousand feet of film. He brought back with him, so he says, the entire city of Rome in Kleine's "Julius Caesar." He also booked Leslie Carter in "Du Barry" and Howard Estabrook in "Officer 666."

The long-expected and anxiously awaited "Gertie" has arrived. Gertie is the pet Dianasour of the Box Office Attraction, and she was exhibited at the Wonderland theater for the first time Saturday, Dec. 19.

The Kansas City office of Warner's Features, Inc., is undergoing a complete change. Another room will be added so as to provide space to handle the United Service.

Sol. J. Berman, who has been booking the Thanhouser "Zudora" in Kansas City territory, and to whose efforts the success of the "Million Dollar Mystery" by the same company, this field is largely due, has left Kansas City for New York, where is is rumored that he will take a responsible position with the World Feature Film Corp.

J. H. Gillinsky, formerly owner of the Orpheus theater in Excelsior Springs, Mo., was in Kansas City several days ago on his way to New York. It is expected that Mr. Gillinsky will become connected with some of the film companies in that city.

C. S. Edwards, special representative for the Eclectic Film Co., returned to Kansas City after an absence of two weeks spent in Dallas, Tex., Denver, Col., and Oklahoma.

It is reported in Kansas City that when the Lona theater at Sedalia, Mo., recently had a ladies' matinee for the purpose of showing a film made by the Essanay Film Co. showing the fitting of Gossard corsets on living models, it was only with great difficulty that the men were prevented from breaking the doors of the theater and entering.

The Ramo release, the "War of Wars," made a great hit at the Lewis theater in Independence, where it was shown recently.

The Kansas City Commercial Club will show four thousand feet of film taken in Kansas City at the World Fair at San Francisco. This film shows all the points of interest in the city and will be shown in the Missouri building.

The Electric theater in Kansas City, Kan., recently turned its house over to the Police Relief Fund Association. Several good acts of vaudeville were secured and a four-reel feature. The admission charged was ten cents, all of which went to buy Christmas gifts for the poor.

The Gem theater at Arkansas City, Kan., considers the next essential thing to good pictures, good heat. As a consequence the theater is advertising that its house is kept warm during the cold spells that have visited the city.

Picture Suit Postponed

New American Theater Company Files Answer to Suit Over Paramount Pictures Brought by Casino Theater Company and Strand Theater Company — Court Postpones Suit—Rumored One Complainant Will Cancel Paramount Contract.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE New American Theater Company has filed its answer in the suit brought against it by the Casino Theater Company and the Strand Theater Company, involving the right to exhibit certain Paramount pictures under specified conditions and the right of the defendant company to advertise them as coming productions. In their answer the defendants state that neither of the plaintiff companies have shown their right in the bill of complaint to produce Paramount pictures in any particular portion of the District of Columbia, nor in the whole of the District, nor for any particular period of time, or in the case of the Strand theater, for a longer period than 55 days after the last date of showing by it. The defendants further claim that the advertising matter complained of specified no date upon which the Paramount pictures were to be shown by it. The case is postponed until Jan. 8.

Following the announcement of the suit comes the rumor that the contract for the rental of the Paramount pictures will be canceled by at least one of the complainant companies. This rumor has not been confirmed, but in all probability it will materialize. Tom Moore is at the head of the Casino and Strand Theater companies, operating the Garden and Strand theaters, while Frank E. Elder is at the head of the New American Theater Company.

WASHINGTON KIDDIES MEET SANTA AT SHOW

Over a Thousand Poor Children See Shows on Christmas Morning in Washington.

THE Cosmos, Poli's, and Howard theaters did much on Christmas morning to make happy more than three thousand of the city's poor children. Following a custom inaugurated some years ago, Mr. A. Brylawski opened the doors of the Cosmos theater to six hundred white children, while the Howard theater, on T street, accommodated four hundred colored youngsters. A full vaudeville entertainment was provided for them at the conclusion of which candy and fruit was distributed.

The doors of Poli's theater were thrown open to the youngsters at nine o'clock and at 10 o'clock all of the members of the Poli Players, who had entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion, presented a short Christmas play. At its conclusion an enormous tree, towering high into the flies of the stage, and aglow with hundreds of small incandescent lights of many hues, was disclosed to the juvenile audience. Then Santa Claus appeared and greeted them, concluding with an invitation to every chid in the audience to come up on the stage and receive from him the gifts which had been provided. Two long runways, leading from the left and right aisles of the auditorium, were provided and the children directed to ascend to the stage by the one and leave by the other, thus it was that no confusion or crushing occurred. Each child received a toy and a package of good and wholesome candy. A feature of the celebration was the musical program, for many musicians from other theaters had volunteered their services for the occasion and the orchestra was indeed a very large one. Preparations had been made for the accommodation of more than three thousand children and there were nearly twenty-five hundred who availed themselves of the generosity of the management. For weeks Manager Louis J. Fosse was busily engaged in making the necessary arrangements and in his work he was assisted by many volunteers. He was ably assisted in his charity by Abbott E. Jones, the genial superintendent of the house.

The action of these two gentlemen, Messrs. Brylawski and Fosse cannot be too highly commended, for as stated by the former, the expense of the entertainment was more than offset by the pleasure given to the several thousand youngsters and it is his hope that others will do the same thing next year, that a little sunshine may be made to enter the hearts of more of the city's poor.

Brings Them Up with Anthem.

According to A. Brylawski, operator of a string of moving picture and vaudeville houses in this city, a slide bearing the picture of a fluttering American flag is fast supplanting that of "Good Night," and "The Star Spangled Banner" is now to be heard in place of "Home, Sweet Home." "In my opinion," said Mr. Brylawski, "it is far more fitting that our flag and the National anthem be used. This custom is followed in a majority of the European countries and tends to instill patriotism in the audiences. Should one care to look at the matter from a more selfish standpoint, it might be said that an American audience will invariably rise at the starting of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and thus the house is quickly cleared, but the 'Good Night' slide is too much as though the exhibitor felt that he had already obtained the people's money and that having done so he had no further interest. It is very much like stopping the music after the last picture is shown. Show the flag and play the piece and the enjoyment of the people will be continued."

Other Washington Notes.

W. F. Bateman has secured control of the Rhode Island theater, formerly operated by Mrs. Brown.

Employees of the General Film Company on Christmas morning presented to the Washington manager, J. A. Koerpel, a very handsome pair of gold cuff buttons studded with diamonds. To the assistant manager, John Payette, they presented an equally handsome sterling silver cigarette case which Mr. Payette is proudly exhibiting to his friends.

The employees of Crandall's theater remembered Harry Crandall with a set of silver-mounted military brushes and comb. Manager Guy Barrett was also tendered a token of their esteem. On its part, the management of this theater, as did a number of others of the various houses, showed its appreciation of the good work of the employees during the past year in a very substantial manner.

James L. Young has secured control of the Favorite theater, 21 H street, Northwest, and has himself supplanted "Tom" Watson in the active management of the house.

H. F. Lavalle, formerly manager of the Washington branch of the Universal Film Company, has severed his connection with that concern and has gone to his home in Atlantic City, N. J. During his stay in Washington, Mr. Lavalle made a host of friends who deeply regret his going away. S. J. Mayer, formerly manager of the General Film Company here, recently succeeded Mr. Lavalle in the management of the Universal's office.

George Smiley has returned from a visit to New York City, where he spent the Christmas holidays with relatives.

SAME STOVE HEATS BOTH THEATER AND LOBBY

Ingenious Arrangement Gives Effective Heating to Both Auditorium and Lobby of Picture House.

By A. H. Gribler, Special St. Louis Mo. Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WM. McDONALD, manager of the Compton theater, 3206 Easton avenue, has solved the theater lobby heating problem in a most ingenious and practical manner, and his plan is well worth imitating by any theater that is not equipped with a steam or hot water heating plant. A large soft coal heating stove, that is used to heat the auditorium of the theater, which is placed just back of the entrance, is enclosed in a large sheet iron drum that reaches from the floor to the ceiling. This ironcasing not only makes the stove fireproof and accident proof, since it is impossible for any one to fall, or get pushed against the stove and burned, but it greatly increases the heat radiating powers of the stove.

The scheme to warm the lobby is the most ingenious, however. This is accomplished in the following manner: An opening leading from the drum to the lobby is connected by a large pipe. A 16-inch electric fan with the frame removed, is placed in the opening, and as the heat naturally rises in the drum, the whirling fan drives it into the lobby. The plan works to perfection. During the recent cold snap, when the nights were raw and chilly, and the thermometer four degrees below the freezing point, the lobby of the Compton, as well as the auditorium, was as warm as toast. Mr. McDonald's plan is worth copying by any manager who has to heat his theater with stoves.

Other St. Louis Notes.

THE Princess theater, at Grand avenue and Olive street, which gave up a mixed moving picture and vaudeville bill for road shows of the extravaganza type several months ago, will be turned into a moving picture house again by the time this article is in print. The present bookings of the Princess will be transferred to the La Salle theater, at Tenth and Pine streets, and the name of the theater will be changed back to "Imperial." Joseph J. Walsh, manager of the Princess, will go to the Imperial in the same capacity, but it has not yet been announced who will assume the management of the Princess with its new program.

Plans have been made and contracts let for the erection of two theaters in North St. Louis, that seem to mark a new idea in motion picture theater construction. One of the new buildings is to be erected at 1710-14 North Jefferson avenue, for M. Nash, a well-known exhibitor, and the other will be built by Jos. Mogler, on Ninth street, north of Bremen avenue. The buildings, which are to be 66 feet wide and 130 feet deep, will have five rooms and bath apartments on the second floor, with windows overlooking the street. This second story of the building will be just one room and hall in depth, the rest of the structure will be only one story in height. The stairway leading to the second floor will contain a platform for the projection booth. The new buildings, which are to be finished in February, will seat 1,400 persons, and are to cost $18,000 each.

The Garrick theater, at Sixth and Chestnut streets, is showing the Belgian war pictures taken by Edwin F. Weigle for the Chicago Tribune, under an exclusive contract with the Belgian government. The pictures are here under the auspices of the St. Louis Post Dispatch, and the proceeds of the performances, which run from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., are devoted to the Christmas fund for the poor, which is conducted by the Post Dispatch every year.

The West End Lyric, at Delmar and Euclid avenues, flash the name of their daily feature in letters a foot and a half high in electric signs that extend out over the street at either end of the entrance to the lobby.

Geo. F. Kern, manager of the Cherokee theater, at Cherokee street and Ohio avenue, is advertising his house in the street cars. A neatly framed sign is placed in a conspicuous place just over the front door of all cross town cars, informing the passengers that the "Cherokee theater is South St. Louis' Home of the Big Shows."

The Jefferson, a new all picture theater, which has just been completed at 2316 Franklin avenue, gave its initial performance Dec. 19. The Jefferson is a small house, seating only three hundred, but it is very neat, and thoroughly comfortable and up to date in other respects. Five reels of Independent pictures are being shown, and five cents admission is charged. Music is furnished by a two-piece orchestra, piano and violin. Arthur Bernaud, who is a veteran in amusement and moving picture circles, is manager of the new house.

The Princess theater, Grand and Olive streets, one of the largest theaters in the city, which has transferred its road show program downtown to the LaSalle, and inaugurated an all moving picture program, announced its first performance for Sunday, Dec. 27, with "The Robbers," a six-reel feature with Maurice Morrison in the star part. The prices for the new program at the Princess, are matinees, 10 cents, and nights, 10 and 20 cents, and the performances run from 2 to 5, and from 7 to 11 at night.

The Juniata theater, Grand avenue and Juniata street, one of the large all picture houses belonging to the Associated Theaters Company, has been redecorated and generally brightened up to be ready for the change of program that went into effect Dec. 27. After that date the Juniata will use an All Feature program in place of the one and two-reel bill they have been playing. Paramount features will be run on Sunday, Monday, Thursday and Friday, and General features the other days of the week. Manager Stevens says he is making the change in the program because the audiences of the house have given unmistakable signs that the large fetures please them best. The admission prices, which has heretofore been 10 cents for adults and 5 for children will be changed, and 10 cents will be charged for every seat in the house.

The Belgian war pictures, taken at the actual scene of hostilities for the Chicago Tribune and shown here under the auspices of the Post Dispatch Christmas Festival Fund, are proving so popular that their engagement at the Garrick theater has been prolonged for an additional week. It is claimed by the management of the films that 29,000 persons saw the pictures the first week of their showing.

A moving picture cameraman accompanied Park Commissioner Dwight Davis, Director of Public Welfare Emil N. Tolkacz, and Park Superintendent Nelson Cunliff to Cedar Grove, 35 miles west of St. Louis, where the party went to cut cedar trees which were used to decorate the street at Twelfth and St. Charles streets during the big outdoor Christmas celebration beginning Dec. 23. The films that were made include a tree chopping contest, participated in by members of the party, which resulted in a tie between Cunliff and Tolkcaz. The pictures will be shown in local theaters.

Law to Restrict Theatres

A New Measure Will Probably Be Introduced in Next Michigan State Legislature That Will Restrict Picture Houses to Corners of Alleys or Streets. Will that Effect Detroit Houses?

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FROM a reliable source we are informed that at the next session of the state legislature a law will be proposed restricting the building of motion picture theaters to corners only; that is, they either must be at the corner of an alley or at a street corner, thus making it a felony to build a theater in the center of a block. This will not effect Detroit to any extent, as that is practically the sence of an ordinance which has been in effect for some time, but being a state law, will naturally effect all other cities and villages in both the lower and upper peninsulas.

League Issues Certificates.

At a meeting of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors League on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 22, a committee consisting of Messrs. Ackerman, Ritter and McArthur was appointed to call on the Edison Illuminating Company for the purpose of having this corporation extend its wires a half mile further north, east and west, so as to give direct current to a greater number of motion picture theatres. At present direct current wires only run to Forest avenue out Woodward way. At this meeting it was also announced that the association had adopted a certificate of membership which would be displayed by the various owners and managers in the box office. The certificates are about 8 by 10 inches in size, and are attractively gotten up. The Detroit members of the league are endeavoring to get the Detroit City Gas Company to permit the use of arc lights in front of theaters before 6:30 p. m. Some time ago the gas company put many theaters on a four-cent rate, furnishing the carbons to the outside arc lights, providing they were not used before 6:30. Owing to the fact that it gets dark about 4:30 during the winter, the theaters would like to have the lights burned earlier. President Jeup announced that three more applications for membership had been received.

Keystones to Entertain Guests.

The Tuller Hotel is the first institution of its kind in Michigan to offer motion pictures as entertainment to its guests in the cafe. A fireproof booth has been built in the rear of the building, on the outside; there is a cut-out in the wall and the pictures are thrown on a screen between 8:30 and 10:30 at night. This is usually the quiet period at the Tuller, being after the diner hour and before the after-theater business starts. "We have cabaret entertainers from 6 to 8:30 and from 10:30 until 12," said Mr. Tuller, proprietor, "but we wanted some sort of entertainment for those who came into our cafe between the two periods. We thought of everything we could and finally concluded that Keystone comedy pictures would just be the thing. Our patrons enjoy them and we expect to continue them as a permanent policy."

Police Close "School" of Motion Picture Acting.

The police department has put out of business Nathan D. Josephi, who conducted a motion picture school at 214 Woodward avenue. This action followed after a number of complaints had been received by pupils who allege mistreatment on the part of the proprietor. Most of the pupils were poor girls who accepted the word of Josephi that he would make them "prominent picture stars." The police told Josephi to leave town or he would be prosecuted, and incidentally they cleaned out his "joint."

Other Notes from Detroit.

The organ at the New Empire has been thoroughly overhauled after ten days' work on the part of men from the factory. The organ is now in better tone than ever.

It is definitely settled that John H. Kunsky, who now operates a chain of nine theaters in Detroit under the name of John H. Kunsky, Inc., is to build his tenth amusement place. It is to be located in the downtown district, and will seat close to 2,000 people. It will be exclusively for pictures, and will have every modern convenience. It will be the only theater seating over a thousand people that will be used exclusively for pictures. The building of this new playhouse means that Mr. Kunsky will not renew his present lease on the Washington, which runs out the first of next August.

"Cabiria," the big Itala feature, had its first presentation in Detroit at the Opera House, Sunday night, Dec. 20. It drew a large audience. On Christmas day it started an indefinite run at the Broadway theater, where it will remain as long as the engagement is profitable. Performances are being given daily at 2:15 and at night, 8:15. Prices are 25 and 50 cents. Detroit has heard a great deal about "Cabiria" for many months, and no doubt its people will turn out in large numbers to view the spectacle. Bert St. John, manager of the Broadway, hopes to break the summer record of "Neptune's Daughter," which ran for 12 weeks at the Opera House.

The question has arisen very often of late: "Is Detroit being overdone with moving picture theaters?" It would seem "Yes" would be the correct answer, taking certain parts of the city into consideration. For instance, on Woodward avenue, from Seldon to Forest avenues, there are now the Garden, seating 1,055, and the Forest, seating 584; the new Majestic in course of construction and which will be ready about Feb 15, will accommodate 1,850 people, all on the ground floor; this will make a total seating capacity of the three theaters, 3,489, all within six blocks. The drawing power is limited to the people residing in that particular section. And it means that 3,489 people will have to go to the movies every night to fill these three houses for one show. And don't forget that there is a second show, which also will have to draw people. It has been intimated that the new Majestic may not show pictures exclusively, but will offer a few high-class vaudeville acts, opening and closing with pictures. This might be an excellent idea, as there are no outskirt vaudeville-picture houses, all of them being downtown.

Edward Wise, who recently purchased an interest in the Progressive Film & Equipment Company, 97 Woodward avenue, has been elected treasurer and vice-president. He is actively connected with this firm. The Progressive is now handling a complete line of theater supplies.

The sign shop and stock room of the Casino Feature Film Company, formerly located on the upper floors of the Royal theater building, have been moved to 31 Farmer street, where the Casino company has taken a long lease on the three upper floors. The former quarters will be used for shipping, examining films, etc.

M. Q. Evans has joined the Pathescope Sales Company, 501 Dime Bank building. Mr. Francis Reno, manager of this branch, reports a very satisfactory business. "Our machines are going into the very wealthiest homes of Detroit and Michigan and prospects for 1915 are exceptionally good," he said.

After January 1st Peter Jeup, president of the Michigan Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, who recently disposed of his interest in the Pastime theater, will take an important position in the City Assessor's office. It will in no way, however, effect his presiding at the weekly meetings of the league.

The Rosedale theater, owned by William F. Klatt, 2273 Woodward avenue, was formally opened Dec. 24, the attraction being "The Tigress," furnished by the Alco company. On Christmas Day "Salomy Jane" was shown. The Rosedale will run an Alco feature every week hereafter. The house is managed by N. A. Rounds, and is one of the most beautiful in Detroit.

Charles N. Davies, Michigan representative for the Alco company, states that he has sold Saginaw and Port Huron rights to Col. W. S. Butterfield, and Grand Rapids rights to A. J. Gillingham. "Orders are coming in faster than we can take care of them just now," he said.

As an added attraction on Christmas Day, the Forest theater, managed by R. W. Minkley, had a sixteen-piece band, known as the Royal Italian Concert Band. Concerts were given at 3:30 in the afternoon and 8:45 at night. There was no extra charge.

The Virginia Park, one of Detroit's handsomest outskirt theaters, opened its doors for the first on Christmas Day. The house is owned by Charles D. Wesch, of the Detroit Universal Film Company. R. W. Minkley, manager of the Forest, will also manage the Virginia Park. The music is furnished by a three-piece orchestra, although it is planned to later install a large auto-orchestra.

George Weeks, of Detroit, who owns the Royal Oak theater, in Royal Oak, Michigan, announces the appointment of Charles Stimpson as manager.

The manager of the new Majestic theater will be M. W. McGee, formerly of New York City. He has already arrived in Detroit and has taken full charge of affairs at the company's office, 1934 Dime Bank building. Mr. McGee has had 24 years of experience in theatricals, having managed road attractions as well as some of the leading theaters of this country. His career in the motion picture industry dates back to the time when it was in its infancy. He has several picture successes to his credit as producer and has been connected with some of the largest and most successful picture theaters in the East. He is a member of the Screen Club of New York. Mr. McGee has a lot of new ideas which he will put into effect and promises to make the Majestic the finest playhouse east of New York. He is now studying the situation in Detroit and will announce in a few weeks the definite policy of the Majestic.

No single moving picture star has come up so fast in point of popularity, as far as Detroit is concerned, as Miss Marguerite Clark, who played the Liberty theater the week of Dec. 20 in "The Crucible." Without any added announcement of her appearance, the Liberty started to "hold them out" at 2:30 the first day. From that time on there was a steady line of people waiting outside up to the last show at night. This is remarkable business considering the fact that it was the week before Christmas, when most people are saving every nickel for gifts. She drew exceptional big business when she appeared in "Wildflower," but she beat this record with "The Crucible," despite the handicap of Christmas week. The one regret in connection with her Detroit engagement was that a larger downtown theater was not available.

Nearly 2,000 children attended the second Saturday morning motion picture show and lecture given at the Washington theater, Dec. 19. The lame school children of the city were brought to the theater in four police patrols that daily carry them to and from school. A new feature was the presence of about 20 blind children from the public school for the blind. The pictures shown were of Switzerland and as they appeared on the screen, Rev. Percival Huget gave an interesting talk. Use of the Washington theater was donated by John H. Kunsky, and the films were loaned by the General and Universal companies.

The Majestic Theater Company is distributing many hundreds of high-class blotters which read: "When passing Woodward avenue, near Willis, please observe the finest photoplay theater in America now under construction." The officers of the company are: A. Arthur Caille, president; Frank A. Westbrook, vice-president; Henry J. Guthard, treasurer, and Harry Goldstein, general manager, while Mr. M. W. McGee is the house manager.

Howard O. Pierce, publicity manager for the John H. Kunsky, Inc., theaters, was in Chicago a few days, looking at pictures and getting new ideas from modern theaters.

Mr. Lorden, of the British-American Feature Film Co., Detroit, was in New York on Dec. 16 and placed the United States rights for "War Pigeon," made by the All-Red Feature Film Co., of Detroit and Windsor.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ASSESSMENTS ASTONISH TORONTO PICTUREMEN.

Amounts of First Assessments Under New Act Large—One Theater Must Pay $150 this Year.

By David A. Billings, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANOTHER bomb has been thrown into the camp of Ontario motion picture theater managers by the announcement of the first assessments under the new Workmen's Compensation act, under which theaters are compelled to pay a certain percentage of their total weekly payroll to the Ontario government. Under the act the wages of not only operators and ushers, etc., are taken into consideration, but also that of the orchestra and the manager. A small idea of the extent of the "blow" may be obtained from the tax bill of the Yorke theater, Toronto, which will have to pay $150 this year as its share toward the insurance of its employees. The managers are making an appeal to have the orchestra exempted from this ruling, as the musicians' union makes special provision for the care of its members.

OTHER TORONTO NOTES.

WITH the passing of Christmas week Toronto exhibitors feel that the crisis of the present dullness has been reached, and although several local theaters were not able to survive the critical period the majority have come out feeling that better times are in store for the near future. One of the unlucky firms to be caught in storm was Motion Pictures Limited, a company which has been operating a string of five theaters in the city. This firm went into liquidation last week and has been taken over by Richard Tew. Whether the theaters will be closed awaiting a revival of business or will be immediately reopened has not been decided. The theaters affected include the "Why," on Bloor street west, the King George on Bloor street, the Prince George, on Dundas street, the Classic on Gerrard street, and the Royal Palace. The Classic is one of the largest houses in the east end of the city.

Not a little excitement was caused among some of the local exchange men on account of the condemning at the last moment of the World Film release, "The Marked Woman," by the censors. The picture was to have been shown at the Strand theater the first half of next week, and was replaced by the Lubin drama, "The Fortune Hunters."

Leon Schlesinger, manager of the Strand, did the biggest three days' business since he has had charge of the theater with World Film offering made by the Colonial Company, "The Seats of the Mighty," which, being staged in Canada and adapted from the work of a Canadian author, was a special drawing card.

All Features Limited has secured Meyer Schlesinger, one of the numerous Schlesinger brothers, as their New York representative to look out for any new material that comes on the market. The Winnipeg office of the company reports an exceptionally good week's business.

F. G. Robson, manager of the Yorke theater, which is on the Strand circuit, did a good week's business Christmas week with the Vitagraph picture, "Santa Claus," which he specially advertised with Christmas cards appealing to the children. In addition Willie Norris, one of the best boy sopranos in Toronto, sang Christmas songs at each performance.

Warner's Features this week took over the Canadian agency for the entire output of the United Film service and reports a warm reception from exhibitors for the new stuff.

ALLEGED SWINDLER'S FACE ON SCREEN CAUSES HIS ARREST IN PHILADELPHIA.

Photoplayer, Alleged to Have Passed Worthless Checks in Los Angeles, Is Recognized in Lubin Picture.

By Clemment H. Congdon, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JOSEPH S. RYAN, a prominent member of the cast of a moving picture company, was recently arrested upon the charge of being a fugitive from justice. His arrest was the result of the showing of a Lubin picture drama, in Los Angeles.

A man who said that he had been swindled by Ryan in 1913 recognized his face on the screen. The Los Angeles police wired here to have him arrested. According to the police, Ryan, who resides at 4827 Kingsessing avenue, escaped arrest in Los Angeles, after passing worthless drafts upon a Philadelphia bank for sums aggregating $320. He came to this city in November, 1913, obtained a position with the Lubin Company and played minor parts.

Later he became a star and appeared prominently in films that were shown all over the entire country. This proved his downfall, for, according to the police, one of those he defrauded recognized him and the arrest followed. Los Angeles detectives will arrive to arrange for his extradition.

PRINCETON STUDENTS PLAY IN PICTURES.

The Triangle Club, a Dramatic Society of the University, Take Part in Picture Scene of Satan Sanderson.

Members of the Triangle chorus and cast, of the University of Princeton, and a dramatic club of the University, recently took part at the Graduate School in a scene of the moving picture production from the novel, "Satan Sanderson," written by Mrs. Hallie Ermine Rives.

The picture was supposed to represent a fight between two college students and the members of the Triangle Club took the part of a crowd of students urging the fighters on. Mr. Hooper, of the Lamb's Club, New York, who produced the original production of Floradora, and is directing the Triangle show here, assisted in the arrangement of the scenario.

Mrs. Rives, who is the author of several other books, was a resident of Princeton while writing one of her most successful stories, "Hearts Courageous."

OTHER PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

The manager of the B. F. Keith theater, of Philadelphia, sent Mrs. Francis Mooney, a probation officer, connected with the Juvenile Court, sixty free tickets of admission for distribution among the boys placed under her protection by Judge Gorman of the Municipal Court.

Mrs. Mooney was given her choice of any date preferable to her and she decided upon Dec. 22 as the night to treat the boys.

The Globe theater, which is located opposite to Wanamaker's, on Market street, included a special midnight show on New Year's Eve, which started promptly at 12 o'clock midnight and continued until 2:30 a. m. The program was of the usual high standard which has always been the policy of this theater and the moving pictures of the best grade obtainable.

The Merchants' Theater Ticket Company filed a corporate amendment, changing its name to the Merchants' Amusement Company. It is a Philadelphia concern.

PICTURES DOING WELL IN OTTAWA SPITE OF HARD TIMES.

J. Severman, in Moving Picture Business in Montreal, Finds Ottawa One of the Busy Places.

By F. J. Genest, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture theaters in the Canadian capital continue to attract big crowds nightly despite the general depression on all lines of business. While some of the smaller houses show a slight falling off in their box office receipts, the majority of the managers have no reason to complain.

Mr. J. Severman, who is connected with the moving picture business in Montreal, was a visitor here this week. After making the rounds of the various picture houses, Mr. Severman gained the impression that Ottawa was one of the busiest moving picture centers in Canada.

The moving picture theaters in Hull are running full blast just now and capacity houses prevail every night. For the benefit of our American readers, we might explain that Hull, a manufacturing city of some 25,000 people, is in the Province of Quebec, and is connected with Ottawa, Ontario, by two large bridges spanning the Ottawa river. The population of Hull is largely made up of French Canadian, the great majority of whom are employed in the many factories there. Hull boasts of several first-class picture houses, which besides running on week days, are in full operation on the Sabbath. The laws in Quebec, regarding the closing of theaters on Sunday are not as strict as in the sister Province, Ontario. Consequently many Ottawa people, who look upon moving pictures as legitimate Sunday enjoyment, are in the habit of journeying over to Hull on the Sabbath, despite the protests of the Lord's Day Alliance people.

OTHER OTTAWA NOTES.

The Talbotoscope, situated on Main street, Hull, is showing "The Million Dollar Mystery" the first three days of each week. The final episode of "The Million Dollar Mystery" was shown at the Family theater in Ottawa last week. Hundreds of people here followed this exciting film, and its termination was a matter of general regret.

Construction work is soon to be started on the Booth theater at the corner of Bank and Slater streets. This theater is to be up to date in every particular and will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

The site of the new theater was formerly occupied by the Bank Street Methodist Church. During the demolition of this edifice, an American film company applied to the contracting firm for rights to take pictures of the huge steeple in the act of falling. The contractors, however, rather than run any risks of endangering the lives of pedestrians, refused to grant moving picture rights on the steeple and demolished it piece by piece.

A film that is creating much interest here is the offering of the All Red Feature Company, Ltd., with headquarters at Windsor, Ontario, entitled "The War Pigeon." This company is showing exclusive Canadian pictures, mostly of Canadian troops at present and is sure to become popular with moving picture theater patrons in the Dominion.

The city architect's department with the new year is going to start a campaign to "clean up" the ill-ventilated and badly built theaters in the city which have hitherto been allowed to go unmolested. The city architect stated last week there are at least a score of houses that will have to undergo extensive changes before they will be allowed to stay open.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox says:

"In 'Are They Born or Made?' Mr. Rose has preached a sermon on a vital question more powerful than I have ever heard from any pulpit by any preacher."

ARE THEY BORN OR MADE?

Startling revelations of the tragic incidents that shaped the career of Andy Andrews. An "inside" story of politics and crime, by Jack Rose. A great, gripping, masterly four-part drama.

DAYTON EXHIBITORS HOLD CHARITY BALL.

Thirty-Four Houses Give One Day's Receipts to Federation of Charities.

By Kenneth C. Cardwell, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WEDNESDAY of last week was set aside by Dayton exhibitors for the use of charity, thirty-four houses in the city, composing all of the leading theaters, agreeing to donate their receipts to the federation of charities, which takes care of the poor in various respects during the winter. Public interest in the matter was fully aroused by plenty of newspaper space, and attendance at all of the houses reached a high point for an ordinary week day, much to the benefit of the charities. The houses which thus generously give up a day's business for the benefit of the poor were the following: The Orpheum, the Mecca, the Royal, the Westwood, the Lyric, the Midget, the Majestic, the Museum, the Globe, the Columbia, the Comique, the Ideal, the Wayne, the Electric, the Rex, the Lyceum, the Pastime, the Alhambra, the Forest, the Royal, the Portola, the Wyoming, the Eagle, Old Glory, the Empress, the South Park, the Dreamland, the Edgemont, the Olympic, the Muse Us, the Lafayette, the Comet, the Elite and the Mirror.

Self-Improvement Club Studies—Lip-Reading from Pictures.

"CAMEO KIRBY," the Famous Players' production of Dustin Farnum's stage success, with that star in the title role, was the first of the Paramount releases seen at the Strand theater, being shown there the latter half of Christmas week with marked success. Incidentally, it was made the medium of a rather curious test by members of the Self-Improvement Club, an organization of Cincinnati deaf-mutes. The members have all studied lip-reading and desired both to test their expertness in this line and to see whether moving pictures had progressed sufficiently to make the dialogue plain to any one familiar with lip-reading. "Cameo Kirby" was selected as peculiarly suitable for the purpose, being a film adaptation of a successful play produced on the stage, with the same star, making it the more probable that the stage dialogue would be largely used. The club attended a private showing of the film, with eminently satisfactory results, as they were able to distinguish much of the dialogue by watching the actors closely.

Prize Giving Frowned On.

THE giving of special inducements, in the form of prizes to be drawn for by members of the audience, has become more or less common among some of the suburban houses around Cincinnati, and has been the subject of much criticism on the part of other exhibitors, whose business has undoubtedly suffered from the practice. One house recently gave away turkeys to the lucky members of the audience, this particular prize being, of course, very popular in view of the season. The Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is much opposed to such plans, believing them to be detrimental to the best interests of the business, and is making a strong effort to induce exhibitors who follow them to give them up.

Other Cincinnati Items.

THE showing of the Chicago Tribune's war pictures at Music Hall, in Cincinnati, by Richard Prendergast, who secured them for this city, proved so popular that the pictures were continued all last week, instead of only on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, as was originally intended. Additional interest was added by the fact that on several days 20 per cent. of the gross receipts were donated to the distressed miners of Eastern Ohio. It is said that two thousand persons a day attended the exhibition, bringing the total attendance well up toward record-breaking figures.

A good-sized photoplay house is being planned for the eastern part of Cincinnati, to take the place of an airdome which did good business last summer, by Drs. E. and C. Behymer. The seating capacity of the house is to be between 600 and 700 persons, and it will measure about 40 by 140 feet, with modern equipment in every respect. Details will be available when the plans are settled upon and contracts ready for letting.

The Lubin theater was one of the several local houses to issue attractive Christmas cards. The Lubin announcement extends the usual holiday greetings to its patrons, and states that the management intends to continue the policy of presenting two high-class productions a week. On the reverse of the card announcement of the showing of the Famous Players' offering, "The Sign of the Cross," for the first time in Cincinnati was made. This production was shown the first half of Christmas week, being especially appropriate for the season, and drew unusually well.

The stunt of a "professor" of spiritualism, holding forth at a certain Cincinnati motion picture house, resulted in getting a member of the police force, Patrolman Lewis Kitchen, into hot water. According to the records of the department, Kitchen stands suspended on the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer, for the reason, as it is alleged, that he entered this particular theater and requested the "professor" to inform him how long Chief Copelan, of the Cincinnati force, would remain chief of police. This undue curiosity was held to call for the punishment indicated.

Severe weather, which lasted all last week, injured the attendance at moving picture theaters in Cincinnati somewhat, as on several days the sidewalks were so icy as to make it uncomfortable, if not dangerous, to attempt getting around. After devoting most of the day to Christmas shopping, most people were content to remain at home during the evening to recuperate. In spite of this, however, good offerings at the leading houses were well attended. The big Eclectic feature, "Jean Valjean," dramatized for the film from Hugo's celebrated novel, was one of the week's winners for the Orpheum, while Bosworth's "Valley of the Moon," from Jack London's latest story, also did well. The Alhambra, the Lubin and the Strand, among the downtown theaters featuring big multi-reel productions, and the Nordland Plaza, for another suburban house, also managed to keep the crowds coming, despite the unfavorable weather. All made special efforts, moreover, to present attractive programs for Christmas, and succeeded, for the most part, sufficiently well to please the holiday amusement seekers.

L. S. Muchmore, manager of the Victoria theater, one of the popular houses in Walnut Hills, has become interested in the film exchange end of the business, having taken up work in connection with the booking of George Randolph Chester's serial, written for the Mutual, "Runaway June."

A fire worked considerable damage to the Gayety moving picture theater in South Covington a few days ago, getting considerable start before the fire department could get to the spot. The blaze is thought to have originated in the furnace, which was working overtime in order to warm the house during the exceedingly cold weather prevailing. The building was formerly used as a Methodist church. The damage was estimated at about $200.

The Ivy theater, at Cleves, O., a suburban point about twelve miles from Cincinnati, caught fire, presumably from defective electric wiring, one night last week, and but for good work on the part of the volunteer fire department of the town would have been destroyed. As it was, however, the blaze was extinguished before it had done enough damage to put the house out of commission, and the show was put on as usual the following night and thereafter.

OHIO NOTES OF INTEREST.

By John D. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Majestic theater, 1779 West 25th street, Cleveland, one of the largest and considered one of the most valuable picture houses in Cleveland, has been sold by Horn & Hoover to R. H. Gray, of Niles, O. The consideration in the transfer is understood to be about $15,000. G. A. Schroeder will continue as manager of the theater.

Columbus theater managers have been active in co-operating with the charity movement of that city and recently set apart their Sunday receipts for the charity newsies, a practice that has been continued for several years.

Theaters in Cleveland suffered as did other downtown business recently when an explosion severed the Cleveland Illuminating Company's main feed cable and put the city in temporary darkness. With power off a number of the theaters were forced to suspend for nearly two days.

At eighty, John Heiks, of Smithville, O., became a moving picture fan, on his first visit to a theater. Smithville lacks the advantages of the silent drama, so when Mr. Heiks went to Massillon to do his Christmas shopping and was forced to spend the night there he was persuaded to go to the show. He never left his chair from the time the show opened until it closed. He saw the pictures three times and in passing out complimented the manager. "Fine," said he, "I'm going to try to get one of these shows in Smithville."

The Lucier is the name of the new picture house in Lakewood, a suburb of Cleveland. It is located at Detroit avenue and Wayne street, in the heart of the Lakewood business district. The lobby of the Lucifer is of snowy white marble and with its elaborate lighting scheme it makes a charming appearance. The interior of the theater is of cream color, finished with oil paintings. It has a seating capacity of 650. B. C. Maheu is the manager.

The construction of a one-story brick, steel and reinforced concrete theater building for the Conneaut Theater Company, at Conneaut, O., to be built at a cost of $40,000, is held temporarily in abeyance. The plans were prepared by Frank B. Hursh, Mansfield, O., architect.

Theaters over the state have exercised considerable rivalry to secure the recent Pathe news film release in which the cameraman snapped Ambassador Herrick on his arrival in New York and his reception by the Cleveland committee of friends.

The Jewel theater, just completed, at East 124th street and St. Clair avenue, Cleveland, opened just before Christmas. It is 60 feet wide and 125 feet deep and accommodates about 900 people. A spacious arcade from St. Clair avenue serves as the theater's lobby. E. L. and F. K. Stadler, who for four years operated the Ideal, are lessees of the Jewel.

Other recent theater deals of interest include:

National, East 55th street and Payne avenue, sold by D. Deesauer & Son to J. J. Harwood.

Edison, 5327 Fleet street, sold by Chertoff & Rosenfeldt to Goodman & Weil, and resold by Goodman & Weil to J. J. Davis.

Garfield, 1235 Euclid avenue, sold by Chertoff & Weil to J. H. Fisher, and resold by Fisher to Sam Licht.

Scovil, 3907 Scovil avenue, sold by Frank Spath to Imhoff & Imhoff, Hamilton, O., and resold by Imhoff & Imhoff to M. C. Backer, Akron, O.

The Bijou Dream, one of the attractive downtown theaters, located in Euclid avenue, has been purchased by the Union Amusement Company of New York. It will be remodeled and redecorated and the management will book big features only.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

EDISON.

A SUPERFLUOUS BABY (Jan. 11).—Wood B. Wedd and his partner in failure, Darby Jenks, once more greet you in another of their death-defying escapades. Darby has added a new beauty to his list of conquests, but when he tells Wood B. about her, all he gets is the merry ha! ha! However, when he produces her picture Wedd seeks an introduction, and Darby fixes it up so well that Wedd cuts him out entirely.

Such is life, for Wedd is all ready for the ceremony, which he believes about to take place. He makes a date with Lottie, the blonde beauty in question, but cruel fate is on his trail, for, while on his way with Darby to meet her and her chum, a mother seeking a lost baby-cart leaves a baby in Wedd's arms, despite his protests. Lottie and her chum appear, and by a stroke of fortune, the child is shifted to Darby, and his girl, Lottie's chum, and Wedd is safe for a while. Her frantic mother screams for her missing nuisance, and starts a general uproar and search for it.

Wedd leads his intended better half into the park, where he places the oft-used ring on her finger. His moment of bliss is interrupted by the mother, who disscovers him and immediately pounces on him Lottie faints—they all faint, and, to make a long story short, Wedd gets his ring back, and a whole lot more.

OLIVE'S OTHER SELF (Eight of "Olive's Opportunities" Series—Jan. 12).—Olive, despite Vance's repeated entreaties to give up her settlement work on account of the risks she incurred, would not do so, but kept on ministering to the poor unfortunates. While on her way to perform some act of mercy, she is run down by an automobile in which is Maurice Castle, the well-known, but profligate artist, and upon her recovery in the hospital, the physicians claim that she is suffering from aphasia, or lack of memory. She turns from her former friends and scorns Vance, as if he were an enemy. Seeking out the company of Castle, she becomes a model in his studio and leads the usual Bohemian life, drinking and smoking as if she were used to it.

One night, at a wild orgy in the studio, she becomes so enlivened by the champagne she has imbibed in, that she performs a wild gypsy dance and in so doing arouses the wicked nature of Castle. During the evening's entertainment she has displayed marked preference for one of the guests and this fact has made Castle's wicked resolution all the stronger. Upon the departure of the guests, Olive attempts to leave, but is detained by Castle. In his drunken frenzy, he calls up Coleman and tells him of his intentions. Olive, hearing the message, begins to realize what is about to occur and manages to get possession of a knife that is lying nearby. A fight ensues in which Olive wounds Castle. As she is looking at his body, Vance arrives. Olive sees the blood on her hands and the shock brings back her memory, and Vance takes her away.

CURING THE COOK (Jan. 13).—Cooking in a student's boarding house is what Sherman thought of war, so thought poor Bridget, and to forget her trouble, she would sit all day with a black bottle beside her. "We want lunch—we want lunch," quoth the starved-out students. "A cook, a cook, our learning for a sober cook," said they all. However, the cook had a gentle hang-over and would not move. The landlady finally extricated Bridget from the aforesaid bottle, and set her to mixing some week-old hash.

What will the students do? Ah, one has a plan. They will cure the cook by means of a skeleton that they have. They hang it in the coal-bin. Bridget sees it, invokes the aid of seventy saints and runs. "Everywhere, here and there, but the skeleton her pursues." She falls off the roof and breaks all the new pavement, for which the landlady assessed the students one "bone" apiece. She mixes up the crowded traffic of Bingville by getting run over by an automobile, and then, refusing to collect a crowd, boatmen, policemen, everyone, are skeletons, but she learns her mistake, beats up and ducks the stew-reforming students and then swears off.

McGINTY AND THE COUNT (Jan. 13).—Is that a tango instructor trying to teach Mrs. McGinty and her sweet little daughter, Mary Ann, the tango? No, no, it's the fearless, faking, little Count Bunkie bowing to them. Mary Ann is attracted to him on account of the wonderful perfume that he carries with him. It is an essence of sulphur flowers from a three-cent store in Italy.

The Count, picking an argument, tries to lead a labor uprising against McGinty himself, but McGinty puts the Irish kibosh on it, and the Count and his allies get theirs. The Count challenges McGinty to a duel with swords and Dinny sends word to his wife to bring reinforcements.

The "dool," as McGinty calls it, takes place and McGinty, or, we should say, one of his wife's biscuits, is impaled on the Count's sword. His wife arrives, and the Italian army, led by the Count, beats retreat, followed by some presents, such as bricks, otherwise known as Irish confetti, and what's worse, Biddy's biscuits.

LENA (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 15).—The Miggles' family were in the throes of servant troubles, and, though every effort was made to secure efficient help, each new maid turned out worse than the one before. Mr. Miggles took a hand in visiting the employment agencies, and brought home a collection for his wife to choose from. All were discarded. It just so happened that Miss Janet Brewster, president of the Society for Improving the Condition of Domestic Servants, had decided to enter service in order to get first hand knowledge of the problem, and when Miggles returned to the employment agency for a fresh batch, he caught sight of her, dressed in a picturesque Swedish costume, and hired her on the spot.

"Lena's" advent in the Miggles family caused quite a sensation and Jack was particularly impressed, and as the days went on, his attitude toward the new maid began to be remarked upon by the rest of the family. In the meanwhile, Count d'Estang, hopelessly smitten with the wealthy Miss Brewster, sought the aid of a private detective to locate the object of his adoration. This added complication served to mix matters, especially as Mrs. Miggles missed a valuable pin from her dressing table and jumped at the hasty conclusion that "Lena" had taken it. An examination of the maid's trunk disclosed an outfit of very expensive clothes, and, as this constituted quite conclusive proof of the maid's guilt, the detective was ordered to arrest "Lena." This sensation, happening as it did, in the midst of a reception, caused quite a commotion, especially as it was quickly learned that Euphemia was wearing the missing pin, thus proving "Lena's" complete innocence.

Mr. Miggles' threat to discharge her was met with Jack's declaration that if "Lena" left the house he, likewise, would go, and this set everything at sixes and sevens. The very next day, to her great delight, Mrs. Miggles received an invitation to speak before the Society on the servant question. Her preparations for the event were very elaborate, but she was hardly prepared to find that the celebrated Miss Janet Brewster was none other than "Lena," the maid. Quickly, a change of heart took place, and Mrs. Miggles rushed back home and had the maid's room refurnished and repapered so that when "Lena" returned, she would find everything improved. In due time, the fair deceiver appeared on the scene, only to be met with the greatest deference by all, and, as the detective and Count d'Estang also arrived a short time after, they were met with a warm reception. While all of the foregoing was happening, a mutual attraction had sprung up between Jack and "Lena" which culminated in an engagement which delighted the entire Miggles family and brought assured peace where only discord had dwelt before.

THE BANKER'S DOUBLE (Adapted from the famous Felix Boyd Series, entitled "Below the Dead Line"—Jan. 16).—Boyd and Coleman were sitting in Boyd's private office in Pine street when the phone rang. Boyd picked up the receiver and heard the following: "Boyd—come quick—help—they'll kill me." Then came the sound of a falling body and all was still. After considerable difficulty Boyd and Coleman finally located the place where the message came from, and there they found Smith, the head bookkeeper for Hersey & Company, lying on the floor in a pool of blood. However, the man was not dead, so, upon his recovery, he told of a man that looked like Mr. Hersey, the banker, who had ordered him to hand over certain bonds and cash, but, upon Smith's discovering his mistake, this crook had beaten him into unconsciousness.

Everybody believed Smith's story, with one exception, Boyd. He had noticed that the man's pulse was regular, and that fact made him suspicious. However, he had Smith taken to his home, outside of which he kept watch. That night, Smith came out, and, followed by Boyd, made a trip to a house in the suburbs. Boyd, looking through a convenient window, discovered Wykoff, the master criminal, and his band, dividing the loot with Smith. Entering by another window, he held them up, but was frustrated by another crook, who came late to the rendezvous. At that minute, Coleman, for whom Boyd had sent before, entered. However, in the interval, Wyckoff managed to get away, but his band, including Smith, were grabbed.

PATSY BOLIVER SERIES, NO. 3—PATSY AT COLLEGE (Jan. 11).—Through the medium of traveling shows, Patsy Bolivar has formed a conception of the proper dress for college students, and we find him so habilitated, much to the delight of his mother and sister, and the disgust of his father, who had much rather see him eschew golf and other gentle pastimes, and take up boxing. Patsy's Hoodoo, Sykesy, and his sister Jane, as well as Tilly Grace, are also seen preparing for the same college to which Patsy is bound. Arriving at the railway station, he finds all the boys and girls of his school days, gathering to bid him farewell and trying to get his great load of paraphernalia on the train, which starts without him. Making a leap at the rear end of the train, his grip becomes scattered along the track, and in tryiny to retrieve it, he falls from the train down an embankment, and arrives late at college. His arrival there is the signal for much amusement on the part of the students, and, in spite of the advice of his friend Jack Prince, athletic coach at the college, he proposes to dress in his own way, which makes him the butt of his fellow-students and co-eds. He continues his hopeless adoration for Tilly Grace, and this is the cause of much trouble, on account of the jealousy of Sykesy.

Discovering, however, that Jack's advice as to personal appearance has been correct, he goes into training with such vigor that he breaks his leg in his first game of football. One day, pursuing his training, he is passed by an automobile containing Sykesy, Tilly, Jane and a student, and these stop for luncheon at a road house. An idler steals the automobile, Jane gives the alarm, and a bike cop starts in pursuit. The auto thief, finding Patsy tired on the road after a long run, gives him a lift home, and, being overtaken by the bike cop, the two are arrested. At the police court in the morning Jane arrives in time to free Patsy of the charge against him, she swearing that at the time the car was stolen, he was not in it. After the football game, Patsy's broken leg makes him a veritable hero, and the students, wishing to see how far he will go in the way of playing pranks, induce him to be a party to placing a cow in the president's library, and for this he is suspended for the balance of the term. The picture ends with Patsy, in spite of his lameness, being put to work at plowing on his father's farm.

BASKETBALL AND TROUBLE (Jan. 12).—Jack Potts buys a ticket for the big ball game. On the morning of the game wifie asks him for money to buy a new hat, but Jack, who intends to have a big time, tells her he has no money. He shows her the ticket, tells her he found it the night before, and induces her to telephone the boss that he is very ill. The boss is sorry for poor Jack, and telephones Mrs. Potts he is coming out to the house to see how her husband is. Jack is at the ball game, so Mrs. Potts pays a tramp a dollar, does him up in bandages and splints from head to foot, and explains to the boss when he arrives that Jack insisted on going to the office in spite of his illness, and was struck by an automobile on the way. When the boss sees the terrible condition of the supposed Jack he immediately tries to telephone his own physician to come with an ambulance and take Jack to the hospital, but the phone is out of order, and he decides to go out to the corner drug store and telephone.

In the meantime Jack has "cleaned up" a bunch of money betting on the game, and tries to get wifie on the phone, but, of course, is unsuccessful. He goes home, lets himself in quietly, and overhears the wife applying endearing terms to someone in the next room. He flies in a rage, but does not dare "butt in" on account of the boss. The boss goes to the drug store and Jack confronts his wife. Explanations follow, but the tramp threatens to expose the deception unless he gets more money, and keeps on demanding money every timt he gets a chance. While they are arguing with the tramp the boss comes back and finds Jack. Mrs. Potts is first to recover her wits and tells the boss it is Jack's twin brother who has come in response to her telegram. Jack excuses himself, and goes out and makes some changes in the house numbers of a couple of other houses in the block to mislead the doctor, and succeeds in getting the doctor and the boss (who had gone out again to find out what was delaying the doctor) into the wrong houses, with the result that the doctor takes the boss to the hospital in the ambulance, thinking him mentally deranged.

WHEN HONOR WAKES (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 13).—A well-dressed young man occupying a room in a cheap hotel carefully destroys all clews to his identity and prepares to take poison. Attracted by a strong smell of gas he hesitates and then investigates. In the adjoining room he finds a young woman lying unconscious on the bed, the room full of gas. He carries her to his room, revives her and from her lips hears the story of a poor department store clerk tempted by the finery about her until she became a thief and preferred sui-

Bill's Restaurant

Once upon a time two brothers lived on an Island far out in the Sea. Their names were Bill and Sam.

One night during a great storm a ship was hopelessly stranded on the shore. The hull was not damaged much, and as the crude island village could afford no ready shelter, the passengers and crew decided to live on board. But the seas had gotten into the hold and all the food was ruined.

Bill and Sam were quick to grasp the opportunity. They carried sandwiches and coffee and pie to the ship in baskets. The famished castaways bought eagerly and the brothers made an arrangement with the Captain for the exclusive food privilege on the ship.

The food was cheap and crude and Bill soon saw the necessity of improving its quality and varying the bill of fare, but Sam wouldn't agree to any such expensive arrangement. Their customers simply had to take the food offered or starve, and to Sam improvement of quality meant nothing else than cutting down profits. So the brothers quarreled and Bill started to build a restaurant on the shore.

In the midst of his preparations Bill ran short of money and urged Sam to become a partner in the new enterprise, but Sam refused and Bill had to borrow from his neighbors and go ahead with his plans alone. He knew that he was sacrificing a lot of easy money for an idea, but when he finally opened his doors for business, Bill had a restaurant. His equipments were the finest obtainable, his cook was the best on the island—and his material was the pick of the market. Consequently the food he served was pure and delicious and of such variety that no appetite could possibly grow tired of it. Of course, Sam is still doing a little business with his basket because there are a few people everywhere whose ignorance makes them awkward and uncomfortable outside of the squalid surroundings they are used to. These are Sam's customers.

But Bill's Restaurant was a success even beyond his own expectations. Nearly all the townsfolk closed up their kitchens because the food at Bill's was better than they could prepare at home, and the ship people were so well satisfied that they knocked their ship to pieces to build houses and become permanent citizens of the beautiful island, causing it to grow wealthy by establishing a regular trade with vessels which formerly had visited there but once a year. Thus Bill's Restaurant became a great benefit to his native city, and Bill was heaped with riches and honor.

On a larger scale the motion picture business is exactly like that. It caters to countless eager appetites.

Bill is the manufacturer who provides the best-that-can-be-made-pictures and Sam is the nearsighted "hang the quality—get the coin" film peddler. His trade is with those who don't know any better.

The marooned people are the Exhibitors. The food which they must have today or starve is the one reel comic picture. Those few exhibitors who cannot keep their footing unless there is sawdust on the floor, still get along with Sam's rank stuff, but the wise majority turn gratefully to quality and variety on a high class reliable program.

MinA Films are the most finished and satisfying comedies on the market today. They are the result of forethought and long preparation. Their release was held back until months of study and experiment had shaped them to fulfill their special purpose.

MinA Films are the UNUSUAL in one reel comedies—uniform in technical quality, always full of humorous surprises and are served every THURSDAY on the matchless GENERAL FILM PROGRAM.

cide to disgrace. Her story finished, the girl discovers that her rescuer had visited the hotel for a purpose identical with hers. He tells her the story of an army lieutenant who, befuddled with drink, cheated in a game of cards and was forced to resign to avoid exposure.

The city is San Francisco and just as the second confession is finished, the earthquake occurs. Prepared a few moments before to meet death, the man and the girl, when confronted by a great danger, respond automatically to the instinct of preservation. They manage to escape from the building, which has caught fire, and make their way with other refugees to a public park. There the lieutenant's military training stands him in good stead. He organizes the men in the crowd and begins to bring order out of chaos.

Meanwhile Major Blake, Waring's superior officer, and the man who forced his resignation, has left his barracks and set out for a downtown hotel where his wife, pending alterations of their quarters at the military reservation, has been temporarily living. Mrs. Blake, overcome by fright and smoke, is helpless in her room, but her maid escapes to give the alarm. She meets Waring and a party of his refugees and leads them to the burning hotel, where Waring enters and rescues the woman. Major Blake arrives at the hotel just in time to see Waring stagger out with Mrs. Blake and fall insensible. Waring is borne, unconscious, to the hospital tent erected in the park, where Ann and a physician are in charge. The doctor surmises that something graver than his injuries is the trouble with Waring. Ann knows what it is and intercedes with Major Blake to give the young lieutenant another chance. Major Blake consents, and two people are thereby made happy.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF LAMOND (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 14).—William Hardy, a steadfast and reliable man, but without the theatrical attributes which appeal to some women more strongly than solid virtues, is the husband of Elsie, a girl of most romantic disposition and shallow mind. Hardy's best friend is Victor Lamond. Lamond comes to visit his friend at his Virginia plantation home, and soon discovers that Hardy's honor and happiness are in grave danger, Elsie having become infatuated with Harold Maxim. Lamond determines to save his friend from the pain and humiliation which the logical development of such an affair would bring upon him, but at the same time realizes that under no circumstances must Hardy be allowed to suspect his wife's folly. An appeal to Elsie is worse than fruitless, and Lamond is forced to adopt the precarious plan of posing as Maxim's rival.

Maxim realizes that he must act quickly, and induces Elsie to agree to an elopement. This elopement is frustrated by Lamond in the guise of a jealous rival, and Elsie turns from Maxim in disgust. So well does Lamond play his part, however, that Elsie becomes more infatuated with him than she had been with Maxim. Lamond discovered that the basis of Elsie's folly is her romantic admiration for what she regards as picturesque heroic actions, and physical courage, and determines to take advantage of this trait to turn her regard from himself to her husband, even at the sacrifice of Hardy's friendship and the risk of his own life. Lamond knows that under Hardy's undemonstrative manner there is unlimited courage and a fierce sense of personal honor. Seizing an occasion when Elsie is present, Lamond grossly insults Hardy at the card table. As he expected, Hardy is filled with a cold and deadly rage, and eagerly assents to Lamond's suggestion that they settle the matter as gentlemen—with a pair of duelling pistols taken from the wall. Acting the part he has chosen, Lamond, seemingly with cowardly and murderous intent, fires while Hardy's back is turned, and then, as though realizing that he is at the mercy of the man he has attempted to assassinate, cringes with fear and begs for mercy. Hardy's anger changes to utter contempt, and he allows Lamond to go. Lamond steals away as though in mortal terror, and out of his friend's life forever. As he had calculated, however, the girl turns to her husband with all the admiration and love of which her shallow nature is capable, and the husband never knows how closely shame and misery hovered over his house. Lamond goes his way, responding to the call of the Minister of War of Venezuela to take a commission as colonel of the Foreign Legion in an impending war.

OUT OF THE STORM (Jan. 15).—Buck Hennessy holds up the paymaster of the Bonnie Bell Mine and robs him of the money sack. A big reward is offered for the capture of Hennessy, and a posse is organized. Hennessy, in fear of capture, abandons his horse and makes his way through the thick woods, bordering the road near the cabin of Phil Martin (employed in the mine) his wife, Hetty, and their child. Phil leaves Hetty to work on the night shift. Toward morning Buck steals up to Phil's cabin and, assuming that the husband has just left, enters and demands food. After eating he is overcome with sleep and, before falling onto the bed, swears that the first person entering the cabin door will get his head shot off.

Buck then locks Hetty, the child and the dog in the tiny kitchen and falls asleep with his six shooter in his hand. Hetty knows that she must prevent the return of Phil. Finally she scribbles a note on a piece of cardboard, fastens it to the neck of the dog and forces him through the chimney from which the stovepipe has been removed. The dog meets Phil on his way from the mine and when Phil stoops to pat him the note is seen. Help is procured, the outlaw is captured and Hetty herself wins the reward.

SPAGHETTI AND LOTTERY (Jan. 16).—Antonio and Pascale, well known in little Italy, as a couple of harmless fellows, who would rather get a little easy money easy than a lot of hard cash hard, discover it is time to buy the policy on their lottery. They manage to get enough to buy the much-coveted prize, when the odor of spaghetti from the nearby restaurant reminds them that it is also time for eats. Being now penniless, they decide to try it on their nerve, so over to the restaurant they go. They order the largest platter of spaghetti ever ordered in the place. Their ridiculous actions cause the other guests to laugh. Being unaccustomed to such insults they at once show their wounded feelings by hurling spaghetti at the offenders. In a short time there is a general fight, and Antonio and Pascale are compelled to run away to save their lives. They are finally caught and are about to fare badly when the appearance of the policy man with the money won by the lucky number on their ticket enables them to square up the damages and they are once more happy.

MR. STUBBS' PEN (Jan. 16).—Mr. Stubbs is invited to a little supper given by a few of his business acquaintances, and during the evening they present him with a fountain pen. His troubles commence the next morning when he attempts to fill it, for he spills ink over himself, his stenographer and the office in general. When a client enters with an important document, requiring his signature the pen misbehaves again and spatters the document and disturbing Stubs to such an extent that he throws the pen out the window . The pen strikes a street pedler, who reads the name "J.

Stubbs," engraved on the side of the pen, and promptly returns it to Stubbs, not forgetting to claim a reward. After spoiling several vests and a number of good cigars, Stubbs resolves to get rid of the pen forever. He ties it up in a handkerchief along with a brick and drops it in the river. A fisherman hauls it ashore in his net and sells it to a jeweler. Mrs. Stubbs, while looking for a suitable birthday gift for hubby, decides upon a fountain pen and by chance selects one of the same pattern as the one Stubbs threw away and instructs the jeweler, who has just purchased the "Stubbs" pen from the fisherman, to engrave "J. Stubbs" on the name plate. The jeweler controls himself, however, and Mrs. Stubbs presents hubby with the pen he took such pains to lose and wonders at his sudden collapse.

VITAGRAPH.

THE FATES AND FLORA FOURFLUSH, NO. 2 (Jan. 11).—Note: This picture is a parody on the numerous Thrills, Perils and Mysteries recently perpetrated and must not be taken too seriously. At the finish of the first installment of this series, Frank, the honest young street cleaner and Flora, the beautiful millionairess, were hurtling through the air towards the earth, after being thrown from a balloon burst by the arch-fiend, Sir Simon Blackheart, their hated enemy. By an odd coincidence the balloon basket containing Flora and Frank drops through the glass conservatory of Flora's house, arriving just in time for tea. Flora then decides to take a trip to India to see the Rajah of Chutneypore. Frank accompanies her and on the way they are attacked by pirates, the chief of whom proves to be none other than Sir Simon. Frank is captured, but Flora escapes in the yacht. By the villain's orders, poor Frank, with a cannon tied to his neck, is thrown overboard. Holding his breath, the brave youth picks up the cannon and walks along the ocean bottom to shore and safety. Finding a small boat, he gets into it and rows out to sea. The pirates see him coming and fire upon him. The shell, with fuse burning, drops into Frank's boat. He nonchalantly picks it up and hurls it back to the pirate ship, where it explodes and kills all but Sir Simon. Later, Flora arrives in India, and while visiting the Rajah, is seen by the rascal Sir Simon, disguised as an Indian fakir. The Rajah shows her the famous treasure house of Bhosh, which is in a vault beneath the figure of a huge elephant. While she is inside Sir Somon creeps up and pulls the elephant's tail, causing the ponderous roof to slide down, slowing crushing the helpless Flora. She screams for help, and Frank, who has just arrived at the palace, breaks through a stone wall with his bare hands to rescue her. Sir Simon then prevails upon the Rajah to have the foreigners thrown into the alligator pit, and the terrible vengeance is carried out to the bitter end. The next installment shows what occurred in the alligator pit.

A MIX-UP IN DRESS SUIT CASES (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 12).—Upon his return from his honeymoon, Henry Brown finds a letter from an old flame in Philadelphia, Stella La Blanche, threatening to publish his love letters unless he soothes her broken heart by a substantial check. He starts for Philadelphia, telling his wife he is visiting Stevens, an old friend. He reaches that city, secures the letters from Stella, puts them in his dress suit case and starts back. On the train he gets into a row over a poker game. In the mix-up he grabs, by mistake a suitcase belonging to Gentleman Harry, a crook. During his absence, his wife learns of a daring theft in Stevens' home, to which Henry was supposed to be going, and, finding her husband knows nothing of this, she becomes suspicious. While he is asleep she manages to open the suit case and finds—not the letters—but silverware stolen from the Stevens. She is horrified, and, believing her husband is a thief, starts for Philadelphia to return the silverware. Brown does not discover the mix-up until Gentleman Harry calls on him and demands his silverware. Learning that Mrs. Brown has it, the crook angrily refuses to give Brown his letters and dashes for the railroad station. In the waiting room he surreptitiously swaps suit cases with Mrs. Brown and "beats it." He runs into Brown again, who thinks he still has the letters and a fight starts, during which the sidverware is brought to light. Gentleman Harry is arrested and Brown receives $500 dollars reward. He catches the same train on which his wife is leaving and by a clever trick, manages to secure the letters from her suit case and tear them up. His wife is astounded on arriving at the Stevens home to find the transformation of the silverware into her husband's belongings. Brown shows up with a policeman, who restores the silverware to the Stevens and explains Brown's lucky capture. After much "hero worship," Brown and his wife depart, but she is still wondering about the silverware.

THE HAIR OF HER HEAD (Jan. 13).—Intensely jealous of his bride of a few months, Jeremiah Sinks starts a comedy of misadventures. Following out the instructions of a fortune-teller's ad, he surreptitiously clips off a lock from his wife's hair, and pays a visit to the seeress, who calls herself Madame Devere. She places the hair under a big glass bowl or globe and goes off into a trance. Jeremiah's imagination is worked on by the Madam's words to such an extent that he believes he sees his wife flirting with a stranger. Jumping up in a violent rage, he smashes the crystal and rushes out. On the way home in his car, Sinks sees a gentleman similar in appearance to the one described by the fortune-teller, accompanied by a heavily-veiled woman. He follows them to the seashore and, finding the couple sitting on the sea wall, throws the man into the water and carries the woman—who has fainted—into his car. Still thinking the lady is his wife, Sinks carries her unconscious form into the house, where he is confronted by Mrs. Sinks, herself! He drops his burden on the sofa in horror while his wife hysterically asks what is the matter. At this moment, the stranger, with two policemen, is admitted. Sinks is arrested and taken away while the young man introduces himself to Mrs. Sinks as Jim Gladden from her home town. His wife is revived and introduced to Mrs. Sinks, but no one can explain the experiences they have just gone through. Feeling there must be some mistake, Mrs. Sinks leads the way to the station house, where, after Sinks pleadingly explains it was all a mistake in identity, the matter is straightened out and he is forgiven. The Gladdens take their departure and Mrs. Sinks gives a final knock-out to her husband's jealousy by making him humbly admit the fortune-teller's words were as deceitful as his wife's false curls from which he cut the lock of hair.

THE LEGEND OF THE LONE TREE (Jan. 14).—In a beautiful series of visions, the legend of Lone Tree, as it is related to a young Indian boy by an old Medicine Man, appears before us. Twanda, the Chippewa maiden, is loved by the Chippewa brave, Red Wolf, and also by the Delaware brave, Many Feathers. Lone Tree, the maiden's father, favors the suit of Red Wolf, but Twanda loves the Delaware. The betrothal of Red Wolf and Twanda is announced by Lone Tree and the little Indian maiden flies to her lover in distress. He comforts her and assures her he will find a way. He appeals to his father, Tired Horse, the Medicine Man of the Delawares, who—against his better judgment—for the Chippewas and the Delawares are enemies, sends the brave back loaded with presents to lay his suit before Lone Tree. In council Lone Tree frowns upon him, rejects his suit and Many Feathers returns dejectedly to his father. The day of Twanda's wedding arrives. Unable to bear the ordeal, she runs away. On the mountain top she observes the signal of her lover, who, in a similar frame of mind, seeks consolation in solitude. Twanda replies to his signals and he goes to her side. Meanwhile Lone Tree discovers the absence of his daughter, and Tired Horse learns of the disappearance of Many Feathers. Both parents follow the trails. Lone Tree arrives first, finds the lovers together and in a fury, rushes upon Many Feathers. A brief struggle ensues and Many Feathers is thrown from the cliff, and meets instant death at the bottom. With a cry of despair, Twanda throws herself after her lover and both depart for the Happy Hunting Grounds. Tired Horse arrives, learns what has happened, and, in his terrible rage, visits a curse upon Lone Tree. There, on the mountain top before the wondering eyes of the watching braves, Lone Tree, in accordanc with the curse, dissolves into a lone tree.

CHIEFLY CONCERNING MALES (Jan. 15).—It all began through Sonny Jim's childish love for the make-believe. He wants to be a real postman, so when Daddy Jim gives him a letter to post—a most important business letter—Sonny trudges off with it to the barn, where he very importantly deposits the missive in the oat bin, because it makes such a splendid make-believe letter box. In the same way he disposes of Bridget, the cook's, letter to Patrick, the iceman, in which she accepts his ardent proposal, and the letter of pretty Aunt Alice, wherein she curtly refuses her suitor, Peter, because of a trifling quarrel. All unconscious of the mischief he has wrought, the little postman pursues his untroubled way, but Daddy discovers a big business opportunity has been lost, Bridget waits in vain for her lover, and Peter, not hearing from Alice, believes himself forgiven and, jumping into his car, makes all speed to Daddy Jim's home, where Alice is staying. It looks like serious trouble all around, but it so happens that Peter really is forgiven by Alice after she has thought it over. Patrick is struck by Peter's auto and carried to Daddy Jim's home. He is not seriously hurt and after he and Bridget settle their differences, they decide to get married. Alice and Peter are reunited and also decide to become man and wife. But this is nothing to the joy exhibited by all, when, through a newspaper item, it is discovered that the business deal into which Daddy Jim had contemplated going, is a fraud. Had Sonny mailed his father's letter, Daddy Jim would have been ruined. So the little angel unawares is forgiven and made much of, instead of re-

THE SAGE BRUSH (Broadway Star Features Three Parts Special Jan. 16). – The story of "The Sage Brush Gal" is told by an old timer, a derelict of the days of '49, to an automobile party, stopped on the road by a blow-out. 'Liza Filkins, queen of a coffee house at Amador Junction, Cal., is the object of universal admiration. Among her numerous admirers is Bill McTwirk, known as the "square" gambler and her most persistent suitor. Although 'Liza will have nothing to do with him, Bill keeps up courage until the arrival of Ted, a young easterner, who, leaving a sweetheart at home, comes to work for his Uncle, Sam Johnson, a mine owner. Ted immediately falls in love with 'Liza, who returns his affections, little dreaming there is a girl back East.

The young easterner, who is somewhat of a weakling, is enticed by the allurement of the camp's sporting life and starts to gamble. Bill McTwirk, owner of the gambling house, tries to prevail on him to quit, for 'Liza's sake, but the fever is in his veins and he refuses. In order to continue his gambling, Ted steals money from his uncle, and even used money entrusted to his care by 'Liza—money she had saved to pay for an operation on her invalid mother—to satisfy his craving for the game of chance. A run of bad lucy puts him in ill humor, when he falls in with Trigger Jim, a typical "bad man," suspected of rustling cattle, who coerces Ted into giving up the combination of the mine office safe, which contains $10,000. To add to his troubles, he receives a letter from the East, in which his sweetheart upbraids him for his neglect, and 'Liza, quarrelling with him, gives back the engagement ring, and demands her letters, among which she finds the one from the eastern girl.

Trigger Jim is suspected of the theft of the money, but there is no proof until 'Liza overhears him offer Ted half if he will help him cross the border. Ted agrees, but determines to return his share of the money. 'Liza tells the sheriff and Johnson of her discovery, but stipulates that Ted be allowed to go back east to his sweetheart, who needs him badly. She discovers the hiding place of the money by a trick and in trying to regain it from an isolated cabin, where Trigger had cached it, is saved from death at Tgigger's hands by a landslide which kills Trigger, 'Liza escaping the tons of rocks that demolishes the cabin, by a hair's breadth. Bill McTwirk, disgusted at the turn of his love affair, determines to go back home and wrecks his home preparatory to leaving. As he is standing in the midst of the wreckage, 'Liza comes to thank him for bringing a famous city surgeon to cure her mother. She realizes that Bill is the one she really loves and gives him to understand that if he would ask her, she would gladly become his wife. Just a little later wedding bells ring out joyously in Amador Junction, while back in New York, a loving and trusting girl is made happy by the timely arrival of her lover and protector.

The tire is fixed as the story is finished. The automobile party proceed on their way, while the old timer is seen shaking his head in retrospection of a good story well told.

GETTING FATHER'S GOAT (Jan. 1).—Judge Barr's daughter Helen grows tired of society life and decides she would a reporter be. The judge's influence secures her a position on the Evening "Scoop."

Helen is in her father's court the following day, when Jack, a young clubman, is fined for speeding. The two are mutually attracted. The same day, Helen's employer informs her of his intention to start a reform movement. The reporter thereupon departs to dig up some material for her paper.

Sheer accident leads her to discover a gambling house. Unknown to Helen, her father and Jack are in the place engaging in a poker contest. Each is out for the other's scalp. Jack is getting the best of the judge. Meanwhile, the reporter notifies the police and engineers of a raid.

Judge Barr has just signed an I. O. U. when the officers enter. Although all other persons are captured, Helen's father makes his escape. The girl finds his I. O. U. on the table and appropriates it. Rapid foot work enables Judge Barr to be in court when the prisoners are brought in.

Remembering his losses, the magistrate, in revenge, sentences Jack to ten days at hard labor. Helen, however, attracts her father's attention. Showing him the I. O. U., she terrifies him into freeing Jack. Later, the judge comes upon the boy in the act of embracing Helen. The father separates the two but Helen again waves the tell-tale paper in his face and the judge is glad to allow the two to love each other in peace.

THE GIRL TELEGRAPHER'S PERIL (8th Episode of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series Jan. 2). Blake is painfully injured when a locomotive smashes his handcar. Helen, who has witnessed the accident, dresses Blake's injuries.

The lineman, who is a widower, falls deeply in love with Helen, but the girl rejects his suit. His pride wounded, Blake angrily stalks from Helen's office. Accidentally bumping into Pete, a tramp telegrapher who has just drifted into town, the lineman thrashes him. Helen come's to Pete's aid and drives Blake away.

A few minutes before the Elwood Express is due that afternoon, Helen glances out of the window. The sight of Myra, Blake's three-year-old daughter, crossing the trestle over which the express must pass fills her with horror. In spite of the danger, the brave girl rushes down the track towards the child.

Pete also discovers Myra's peril and hastens to the scene. The Elwood Express is approaching at full speed when Helen reaches the child. Seizing Myra in her arms, the girl leaps off the trestle, landing in the river thirty feet below. Unable to swim, Helen and Myra are in a dangerous predicament when Pete dives to the rescue.

Although the engineer of the express sees what has taken place, he is unable to stop the train until the trestle has been crossed. Blake, attracted to the scene, learns of Myra's awful peril. The frantic father rushes to the water's edge just as Pete assists Helen and the child to shore.

His gratitude causes Blake to beg Pete and Helen for forgiveness. He again asks the girl to be his wife but Helen is still to meet the man she is to marry.

THE SCORPION'S STING (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 6).—Discovered by Marston in the act of robbing the safe, Mann, the crook, shoots and slays him. The murderer escapes, carrying with him a casket containing jewels. So strongly do circumstances point to Lyda, Marston's daughter, as the slayer, that she is tried for the crime.

Despite the evidence of the butler and other servants, who tell of a violent quarrel between Lyda and her father just prior to the shooting, the girl is acquitted. In her anxiety to get away from the scene of her father's death, Lyda sells the house and goes to the country.

Fate leads her to the same hotel in which Mann is hiding. The two fall in love. Lyda, consenting to be Mann's wife, is horrified to find her mother's ring as a betrothal gift. Something within warns her that she is face to face with her father's slayer.

Love has caused Mann to repent of his criminal career. The murderer resolves to take Lyda out rowing and while on the water reveal his past and beg her to help him lead a better life. At the same time, the thought of her father's untimely end fills Lyda with desire for revenge. She decides to induce Mann to take her out rowing. Once on the lake, it is her intention to inform the murderer of her identity and of her knowledge of his crime. Then whilst he is overcome with surprise and terror, she plans to upset the boat and perish in the water with him.

Mann finds Lyda waiting for him on the dock. A moment's hesitation, and the girl accepts his invitation to go rowing with him. Propelled by Mann's vigorous strokes, the boat glides out toward the center of the lake. THE ADVENTURE AT BRIARCLIFF (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 11).—Upon their graduation, Edith, Claire and Evelyn vow never to marry until full suffrage has been granted to their sex. Edith and Claire, who own adjoining estates, return home. Dan, a lover of outdoor life, pitches camp on Edith's estate. Egged on by Claire, Edith orders Dan off the place. Dan, however, attracted by the girl's beauty, impudently announces his intention of remaining.

The girls summon the constable and have Dan locked up. The Justice of the Peace is located in the village tavern and induced to try the case. Dan is fined $10. Pretending to be a dollar short, the boy requests Edith for a loan. Amazed by his boldness, Edith gives him the money. Dan promptly returns to his camp. Despite Claire's protests, Edith declines to order him away again. In fact, when Dan serenades her with a piccolo that night, she comes to sit beside him. Meanwhile, Jenkins, the stableman, burglarizes the house.

Edith discovers the man at work. Her shouts for help bring Dan. He thrashes Jenkins and throws him out. Jenkins later secures revenge by shooting Dan in the arm. The following morning Edith discovers the young man's wound—and the fact that she loves him. Claire comes upon the two in the act of embracing. Horrified, she reminds Edith of their oath. At this moment Evelyn is announced. Seeing Dan, she throws her arms about him. Edith is inclined to be jealous until she learns than Dan is Evelyn's brother. Snapping her fingers at the old oath Edith announces her intention of becoming Dan's wife.

A BOLD, BAD BURGLAR (Jan. 12).—With the kind of assistance of Squiggs, who in his spare moments acts as sheriff, Pussyfoot Pete, a burglar, gains entrance into the home of Araminta. Araminta, who is an old maid, discovers his presence. Does she get frightened? Not a bit! Instead, she thanks Providence for sending her a man. In answer to her inquiry as to how he became a burglar, Pete tells her it was the fault of his indulgent parents. They never denied him anything. In fact, according to Pete, his father even reached up and unhooked the moon from the sky when he cried for it.

While relating his sad story, Pussyfoot Pete demonstrates his taking ways by robbing Araminta of her valuables. Later, while the old maid prepares a meal for him, the burglar tries to escape. He gets caught in the window, but Squiggs again kindly assists him. Not until the sheriff misses his watch does he conclude that Pete must be a burglar, b'gosh!

Araminta joins Squiggs in his pursuit of Pete. The latter is finally captured. Araminta offers him the choice of either marrying her or going to jail. One look at Araminta's awful face and Pete gladly declares his willingness to go to jail for life, if necessary. The lady is heartbroken. But not for long. Lost in admiration for the fearless woman, Squiggs pops the question. Before he can find time to change his mind, Araminta throws herself in the sheriff's arms.

THE STOLEN RUBY (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 31).—Patrolman Killegren, seated alone in his home, is startled by the sound of shooting. Rushing outside, he meets several officers who inform him that two thieves, attempting to escape, had entered his cottage. Positive that no one had entered the house, Killegren conducts the policemen through the building. The father is startled, upon entering his son Alex's room, to find the boy at home. Knowing that his son could not have been in the room more than five minutes, Killegren is filled with a terrible suspicion.

After the officers have departed, the father returns to Alex's room. He finds the boy unconscious. Reviving, Alex tells of how he had been duped by Marcia Judson, an adventuress, into helping her rob a ruby from Duare, a collector of gems. Innocent of the part he was playing, the boy aided her to escape from the police by hiding her in his room. Danger of capture over, Marcia emerged from her hiding place and jeeringly informed Alex of how he had been victimized. He attempted to snatch the jewel from her grasp, but a blow from behind knocked him senseless.

The following morning, Killegren, debating whether to place his son under arrest, learns that the ruby has been recovered. It seems that Durae's Hindu servant had trailed Alex and Marica and overheard the conversation which took place in the boy's room. Seeing Alex attempt to seize the gem, the Hindu, mistaking his motive, climbed through the window and laid him low. The man then compelled Marcia to surrender the ruby. He was taking her to the police station when the woman broke from his grasp and escaped. Delighted at the turn of events, Killegren arranges for his son's exoneration.

A BOOB FOR LUCK (Jan. 15).—When his uncle Hiram forbids Jed to marry Mary, Jed determines to leave the farm and make his fortune in the city. At the same time Hiram receives a message from two confidence men offering some nice greengoods for sale. Jed makes his home in a boarding house. One of the boarders, a fortune teller, informs the boy that he is to come into a fortune. Inspired, Jed goes forth in search of a job. Jobs, however, seem hard to get.

Hiram arrives in the city with a $5,000 bankroll. Hoyle and Casey, the confidence men, meet him and soon annex his money. Meanwhile, Jed is waylaid by highwaymen. After sandbagging the boy, the men throw him into an alleyway. Hiram discovers he has been swindled and goes in pursuit of the crooks. Threatened with capture, the men throw Hiram's roll into an alleyway. Jed is just recovering consciousness when the thieves pass. The money falls into his hat.

After staring unbelievingly at the roll, Jed rushes to a clothing store and gets a new outfit. Back to the farm he goes. When Hiram, compelled to walk home, finally arrives he learns of Jed's luck. The sight of Jed's money overcomes the uncle's objections, and he consents to let Mary and his nephew wed.

THE BROKEN CIRCUIT (Tenth of the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series"—Jan. 16). The noise of men rifling the safe in the telegraph office awakens Helen, who lives in the adjoining room. Knowing the men to be after the money entrusted to her care by Paymaster Wilkens, Helen rushes into the office and holds them up with her pistol. The thieves grapple with the girl and overpower her. During the struggle, Helen's revolver is discharged. Before help can arrive, the girl is bound by the thieves who take the money from the safe and flee on a hand car.

Struggling to her feet, Helen endeavors to pursue them. She gets as far as the railroad track when she stumbles and falls across the rails. The noise of the oncoming train warns the girl of her terrible peril. The sight of the bonding wires connecting the ends of the rails gives her an inspiration. With a desperate effort, Helen tears the wires loose with her feet, thus breaking the circuit. This causes a semaphore, fifty yards away, to automatically flash out its warning. The engineer of the train sees the signal and brings his engine to a stop less than three feet from Helen. The girl is freed. As the result of her story, word is sent to the man in charge of a nearby switch tower. Throwing a lever over, the towerman derails the handcar on which the desperadoes are making their escape, throwing them down an embankment.

Helen later corners the leader of the men and engages him in a furious battle. The girl is being badly battered when help arrives. The crook is captured and shortly afterwards his confederates are rounded up. Helen's next Hazard will be released on Saturday, Jan. 23.

Upon awakening, Sweedie is unable to determine whether she is alive or a ghost. She goes home, but is unable to make herself seen or heard. The family is overcome with grief. She is then certain that she is a ghost. Her note is delivered to the captain, and he goes to the grave followed by his recruits. She agrees to and goes in answer to an ad for a companion to Miss Herrick, in whose home the robbery is to take place. She is accepted. Here she meets Captain Featherstone and falls in love with him. She is now determined not to help her husband, and on the night he had planned to carry out his scheme, she rebels. He makes the attempt alone, and is killed by a detective. Captain Featherstone then proposes to Rhoda, overlooking her past life and unfortunate marriage to Melcher.

THE FABLE OF THE FELLOW WHO HAD A FRIEND WHO KNEW A GIRL WHO HAD A FRIEND (Jan. 13).—Mr. Angora, an easy going chap, was called up by a lodge brother who knew a Corker who had a school chum visiting her. They went to call. The school chum proved to be a lemon, and when Mr. Angora wanted to talk baseball she got huffy. She preferred art and literature. On the way home Angora was on the verge of committing murder, but he decided not to. Some time later Mr. Fyxit had another friend who had a friend, and again Mr. Angora was the goat. They went to a cafe where he tipped the waiter to call him on the phone. After he had been gone an hour, they decided he wouldn't be back, so Mr. Fyxit paid the check. Mr. Angora had dug up a wonderful little Flapper who had a friend. They insisted upon going to the skating rink. Angora wasn't much of a skater, but wasn't mortally injured—merely knocked out. He had lost his faith in mankind.

Slim does this according to directions, then goes away to await results. Outside Mustang and Hiram Clutts stand with a basket of eggs, and when Slim leaves the hen alone, through a hole in the wall they slip several eggs under the hen. When Slim returns he is delighted, but after repeating his performance several times, catches sight of Mustang's arm. parents are unable to stand the expense of an operation which will cure her, so she starts in to save the necessary $100. Slowly the money accumulates. Meanwhile Broncho Billy is caught making moonshine whiskey in Gulch canyon. Mae turns against him instead of sympathizing and returns his ring. By this time Marguerite has saved $100 and is about to mail the letter asking the doctor to come when she learns that the government will release captured moonshiners upon payment of $100. She tears up the letter, then takes the money she worked so hard to save and turns it over to the authorities. That evening finds Broncho asking Marguerite to become his wife, while her sister becomes engaged to another man. (This film has been registered in the U. S. Patent Office.)

DEAR OLD GIRL (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 15).—Ted Warren, a student, and his fiancee, Dora Allen, have arranged to be married at Ted's fraternity house on the day of his graduation. While Warren is passing through the campus on his way to the station to meet his bride, the university chimes ring out the melody of "Dear Old Girl." He remarks to his companions about it, telling them he is the happiest man in the world. A few minutes later he receives a telegram that the train on which his bride was to have arrived was wrecked and she was killed.

His mind unbalanced by the shock, he is taken back to the fraternity house by his friends. Each day when the chimes ring out he thinks it is his wedding day. He insists on going to the station to meet his sweetheart and his spirits are dashed each time when she fails to come. Grief finally breaks him down and he is ordered to bed, where his faithful old servant watches over him. One day, however, he eludes the servant when he hears the chimes and rushes to the railroad station, and then down the track in his eagerness to meet the train. The servant arouses Ted's friends and they hurry after him. They find him barely alive in a ditch beside the tracks and carry him home. There dying, he sees a vision of the spirit of his bride coming to greet him at the beginning of the long journey.

MINA.

DISTILLED SPIRITS (Jan. 14).—McQuarrie cannot resist the craving for drink and under its compulsion steals the last coins from his poverty-stricken home, leaving his wife and little child to get along as best they may. At his corner hangout McQuarrie invests his money in a bottle of spirits, and is soon completely under its influence.

He then crawls into a barrel and falls asleep. In his delirium McQuarrie sees the devil sitting astride the barrel mocking him. Suddenly the barrel is sealed up and with McQuarrie inside, rolls violently down a mountain side, spins madly around on the brink of a precipice and finally plunges over and is smashed to pieces on the rocks below. McQuarrie is then seized by soldiers and carried before their General. The bottle is found in McQuarrie's pockets and as a drunkard he is sentenced to death.

The soldiers ram him into a huge cannon and touch off a fuse. McQuarrie is presumably blown to pieces, but actualy lands in a boiling caldron in which some savage islanders are cooking their food. They, too, discover the bottle and sentence the inebriate to wander alone on the desert island until destroyed by giants.

Gideon, the king of giants, captures him and finding the bottle crushes McQuarrie into a bag, and, swinging it around and round his head, hurls him back to the land from whence he came. The unhappy creature lands in the midst of a band of bandits, who liberate him from the bag. But they, too, find the fatal flask of whiskey and sentence him to death. After a frantic pursuit McQuarrie eludes the bandits, only to see the double of himself sitting under a tree. This vision so unnerves him that he starts to gulp whiskey from his flask. The devil again appears to mock him, and in a rage the hunted drunkard hurls a boulder at the devil, who vanishes, and in his place appears the bandits.

A thrilling chase, in which a running fire of guns is kept up, ensues, McQuarrie finally escaping by a miraculous leap across a river. Seeking a place to hide he discovers the shattered barrel in which he originally started his wild journey. He crawls in between the barrel hoops and the barrel assembles, piece by piece, about him. When complete, the barrel retraces its course up the precipice, over the rough rock beds and up the mountain side, stopping in its original spot in the farm yard, where the ends drop out and McQuarrie is awakened by the old chicken which had been nesting in the barrel. Delighted to find that his horrors were only imaginary, he rushes home to his wife and baby, promising never to touch liquor again.

THE BARRIER BETWEEN (Jan. 8).—With only two years to live, John Morgan contrives, by making a scene in a restaurant, to make his sweetheart break their engagement. She marries his friend, who knows John's secret. But in giving too much attention to business Gordon neglects his wife, and she falls victim to the wiles of his partner, Travers. John, returning suddenly to the apartment he has rented to Travers, is in time to save her from the wrath of her husband, who, coming to consult Travers about a business matter, discovers Ethel in a compromising situation.

A SAFE ADVENTURE (Jan. 9).—Buying a second-hand safe is one thing; having it delivered is another. This particular safe could do anything except climb a tree. And after it was sold the former owner discovered he had left something in it—which added to the excitement. You'd go through a lot yourself to get back your favorite pair of slippers—which was just the way Mr. Bond felt about it.

THE FASHION SHOP (Jan. 9).—Making clothes for the ladies must be a delightful and exhilarating occupation, to judge by the happenings in this emporium of style, where a pretty woman's flirtations with the handsome models, and a jealous husband's wrath—to say nothing of a fat lady and a policeman—help the poor operators to pass the time away.

William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, says business confidence has been restored. Motion pictures caught him making this statement. Other pictures showing industrial conditions in all sections of the country show real condition of business as new year dawns. A symposium of motion picture optimism.

WIPE YER FEET (Jan. 1).—Michael and Bridget Clancy, and their pretty daughter, Maggie, live a life of continuous combat owing principally to Mrs. Clancy's insistence that they shall keep their feet clean when they tramp through her kitchen. Terry Ragen and Paddy Dillon are in love with Maggie, but Terry is given the inside track through the favor of Mr. and Mrs. Clancy.

Poor old Michael gets into all sorts of trouble because of his inability to keep the mud off his shoes as he works in a sewer excavation. Mrs. Clancy declares that every time she scrubs the floor somebody scrapes mud over it and as a result, she has battles every day with callers, including an Italian statuary vender, a peddler, and last but not least, her husband, Michael.

Paddy Dillon has been disqualified in the race for Maggie's hand, but wins the good graces of Michael by helping him scrub the floor, after Mrs. Clancy has set him to this task. Paddy covers the floor with soap suds, whereupon everyone who enters the room slides and skates about in a frenzy of acrobatic stunts. Paddy wins out and marries Maggie.

LASSOING A LION (Jan. 2).—Simon Valjon is inordinately jealous of his pretty, young wife, Mary, who, however, never gives him cause to doubt her fidelity and affection. The

Cobe Talks to You

THE broad highway on which the feature film programme must travel to success is lined with failures. To a close observer this condition is due to one primary cause—the neglect of the element which supplies the sinews from which the feature programme derives its strength, namely, the public.

Why So Many Fail

Ninety per cent of the feature manufacturers exploit an idea which appeals to them without taking into consideration what the man, woman or child who pay their money to see the picture think about it. What is the result? The feature fails to draw, the exhibitor suffers a loss, the exchangeman is assailed, and he in turn removes his support from the manufacturer.

Now What Happens?

The manufacturer deprived of revenue is kept busy for a few weeks trying to stay three jumps ahead of the sheriff. He is overtaken at last. His requiem is sung by the announcement that "The Conglomerate Film Co." is in the hands of the receiver.

What Is the Answer?

Consider your public. Employ a vehicle that conveys a story of general interest. Be sure that it embodies an exposition of human life at its best. Let there be laughs aplenty, and tears of joy coupled with the spirit of good will and tolerance. Have faith, hope, charity, brotherly love, fidelity and trust marked strong in your story. Employ good actors, capable directors, efficient cameramen and by all means look for beauty in scenery instead of employing a convenience of location. Play fair with your public by refraining from being cheap, for oft times cheapness is synonymous with cheating.

Where the Reward Comes

The reward will come with the public paying to see the features played along these lines. That is why we can point with pride to the Alliance Feature Programme, which since its inception on the 12th day of October, last, has grown by leaps and bounds to a solidity that defies destruction.

A Few Blasts on the Trumpet

We are jumping to the front with celerity, yet we are at the same time building firmly to stand the onslaught of competition. We have come to stay. The Alliance is not a child of the moment, but a sturdy young giant who is clearing a way to success.

A combination of capable producers, reliable exchanges, energetic and resourceful exhibitors bidding for the patronage of the public on a policy of Reliability, Regularity and Respectability.

The Alliance Programme will make you money

We can prove it

young couple have their home on a South African ranch in a neighborhood infested by wild beasts, particularly lions. Kimball, an artist, seeks their hospitality.

On the following morning Kimball makes a sketch of the ranch house, and when Mary comes to the door he tells her to remain there while he sketches her in the picture. He arranges her pose to make the picture more effective. Simon observes this and misconstrues his motive. Later on, Kimball catches Mary when she falls from a stool while placing his sketch on the wall, and Simon sees this action and misconstrues it also.

A predatory lion enters the house in the absence of the men folks, who hear Mary's screams for help. Kimball offers himself as a bait to lure the lion from the house through an open window, and Simon and his Uncle Paul lasso the brute, thereby saving Mary from death. Simon apologizes to the hero for his jealousy.

THE STRANGE CASE OF PRINCESS KHAN (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 4).—Philip Dawson, an illustrious author, is making a tour of the world for the purpose of accumulating data for another "best seller." He has letters of introduction to various social leaders in the different capitals of the world, and while in Bombay, presents one of these letters to Mrs. Carewe.

Mrs. Carewe gives a ball to entertain the latest "lion," and "kills two birds with one stone" by making Sadi Khan, a famous Hindu hypnotist and mystic, a guest of the evening. She arranges to have Dawson meet Sadi Khan, who, in truth is a charaltan. He is also avaricious and when Mrs. Carewe requests him to give a private exhibition of his wonderful powers, he demands a goodly fee. Mrs. Carewe offers him a valuable jewel if he will agree to comply with her request. The Hindu accepts the jewel in payment.

Sadi Khan receives his guests with great pomp and ceremony. His assistant, Ben Saada, helps to arrange the guests in a semi-circle, after which Hindu servants bind their wrists, so that they can make no demonstration during the exhibition. After this has been accomplished, Sadi Khan places them all in a hypnotic trance and then, slowly receding into a slight recess which is apparently a solid wall draped with portieres, he dissolves before their eyes and then a beautiful girl appears on the same spot, apparently from nowhere.

She glides gracefully into the circle and performs a few steps of a slow, mystic dance and then steps backward into the recess, where she disappears from view, and Sadi Khan again makes his appearance before the guests. They come out of their trance with a full recollection of the scene which their hypnotized eyes have witnessed.

The guests thank Mrs. Carewe for her entertainment. Philip Dawson is impressed by the beauty of the apparition. His mind is filled with the unusual occurrences of the evening and as he sits pondering before the fireplace in his chamber, he is startled to discover a strand of golden hair on his coat lapel.

Then he recalls that when the beautiful Princess appeared before the circle of his friends, her beautiful golden locks had brushed his sleeve.

On the day following he again visits the villa of Sadi Khan and requests that he shall be given a private view of the old Hindu's powers. The charlatan agrees finally, after Philip Dawson has written a check for $1,000.

Philip Dawson takes his seat in the drawing-room of the mystic, and a servant ties his hands behind him. On the floor between his feet, he has deposited his hat. Sadi Khan performs his hypnotic gestures and Philip feels himself giving way to the hypnotic influence. But his senses do not wholly desert him. Sadi Khan performs the same evolutions as on the previous evening, and the Princess again makes her salaams as on the preceding occasion and retires as before.

Dawson is satisfied that she is real flesh and blood. When he picks up his hat, he notices that a small slip of folded paper has been dropped therein by some person who could have been no other than the Princess. Philip hurries to his automobile and reads the contents of the note. The note reads: "Once in each week my uncle unlocks my reason with a powerful drug. At all other times I am under his hypnotic spell. I am writing this while my normal self, with the hope that it will reach a friend. I am half English. He calls me Princess Khan. God send me help."

Philip hastens to the police station and shows the note to the police sergeant, who details two men to go with Philip for the purpose of investigating. An automobile carries Philip and the two plain-clothes men to the villa of Sadi Khan and they make known their errand, that is, to release from enforced detention the Princess Khan.

They search in vain, because the Princess is concealed in a secret room and the detectives do not discover the cunningly contrived doorway. Upon their return to the police station the sergeant is inclined to be skeptical and believes that Philip is leading the detectives on a wild goose chase, but Philip is not deterred. He confers with some of his acquaintances and tells them the story. They agree to accompany him in an effort to rescue the Princess and they make their preparation without delay.

Ben Saada, the crafty assistant of Sadi Khan, has his suspicions aroused and follows the automobile in which Philip departs in the company of the two detectives after visiting the villa. Ben Saada overhears Philip planning with his friends to rescue the Princess, and, hastening back to the villa, tells Sadi Khan what he has overheard. They decide to leave the villa hastily and carry the Princess away.

The unconscious girl is wrapped in a loose garment and carried from the villa by Ben Saada. An automobile has been summoned and they dash away.

Philip and his friends espy the fleeing automobile of Sadi Khan, and an exciting race ensues. In their efforts to outdistance their pursuers neither the driver nor the other occupants of the leading machine notice that a bridge crossing a river has been partially dismantled. When they see the sign of warning it is too late!

However, before reaching the open space in the bridge, the automobile strikes a plank and throws the unconscious girl out. Sadi Khan and Ben Saada are carried down into the stream and when their pursuers arrive there is no trace of them. Philip and his friends find the Princess lying in a stupor on the ground. They carry her to the hotel, where Mrs. Dawson, Philip's mother, renders every care and assistance.

The Princess is still under the influence of the spell cast upon her by Sadi Khan, and the most learned doctors declare that they know of no remedy which will release her mind. The body of Sadi Khan is fished out of the river by boatmen, and in his garments is found the vial containing the drug which brings the Princess back to consciousness. The Princess seems to realize instinctively that Philip is her predestined mate, so there is no obstacle to their union and their future happiness.

A MILITANT SCHOOLMA'AM (Jan. 5).—Jerald Bruce, a motion picture actor, has a dispute with his director, and, as a result, Jerald joins the ranks of the unemployed. He learns that a school teacher is wanted in the range country and applies for the position to Ted Winter, a ranchman, who is the school director. Jerald lands the job and also wins the admiration of Ruth Winter, the school director's daughter. Bill Benton, a neighboring rancher, is very much in love with Ruth and her father encourages him.

Ruth falls head over ears in love with Jerald, and, as she is still attending school, they find many opportunities for courtship. Jerald compels her to stay after school. Old man Winter catches them love-making and promptly fires the schoolmaster. Jerald has his make-up box with him and, after dressing up as a girl, again applies for the position. This time as a schoolma'am, and gets the job. He has a great time spanking cowboy pupils. With the aid of Ruth, who does not suspect his disguise, he pounds up and captures a devastating cattle thief, who is none other than Bill Benton.

IN THE LINE OF DUTY (Jan. 6).—Helen Brant, society editor on a newspaper, is engaged to marry Robert Carter, who practices in secret the vocation of a clever jewel thief. Carter stations "Mickey" Turner, an accomplice, outside a house where he is attending a society function, and he passes through the window to "Mickey" a diamond pendant which he has stolen from Miss Lamont, a guest.

"Mickey" hastens away from the house and collides with Helen Brant, who has been assigned to "write up" the function for her newspaper, "Mickey" drops his pocketbook and Helen picks it up. Helen examines the pocketbook which she found the night before and discovers pawn tickets which lead her to trace the owner of the pocketbook to "Mickey." In following up her clue, she finds Carter and "Mickey" in a guilty conference. Her conscience dominates her love for Carter and she exposes him to the police.

THE OLD CODE (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 11).—Marie and Pierre are forest lovers. Marie is so happy and secure in her assurance that Pierre loves her that she teases him and tests his love and fidelity in various ways. She does not realize that she may go too far, and flirts recklessly with other young men of her acquaintance.

Langlois, a powerfully built woodsman, has been attracted by Marie, who has noted his infatuation with secret joy, because she feels that she can use him as a foil to Pierre, and make her lover jealous. Langlois enters the cabin with her father, finding the young lovers there. Then a plan pops into Marie's head to test her lover's faith. She takes the water bucket and starts for the river, but, instead of inviting Pierre to go with her, she gaily tells Langlois to come along. Pierre is speechless with astonishment.

In the meanwhile, Langlois has accompanied Marie to the creek, and unobserved by her, clips a curl from her locks. Believing that her foolish actions have given him the right to make further advances, he seizes her in his arms and attempts to kiss her. Marie is insulted and runs to the cabin where she throws herself sobbing on her bed.

Langlois meets Pierre in the forest, shows him the curl which he has clipped from Marie's head and boastingly intimates to Pierre that Marie thinks more of him than of her lover, whom he jeeringly declares she has discarded. Pierre is frantic with rage, and leaping upon Langlois, takes the curl from him. A blow has been struck, and according to the custom of the wilderness, the two men must now fight. They repair to an open space in the forest where the Indians, half-breeds, lumbermen, etc., gather about to witness the contest.

Lota, a forest maiden, who is jealous of Marie, hastens to carry the news to her rival, and finds her in her cabin in tears. Marie regrets her ruse to create jealtusy in the heart of Pierre, but does not yet realize how far the affair has proceeded, or that the men are now preparing to engage in a fistic combat. Lota promises to carry a message, and Marie writes two notes: one to Pierre telling him that she loves him and for him to come to her at once, and the other to Longlois, telling him that she hates and despices him and never wishes to see him again. Lota agrees to deliver the two notes at once, and hastens away with them.

When she arrives at a safe distance from the cabin, Lota cleverly clips off that portion from each note bearing the name of the one to whom it is addressed. Then she hurries on and finds the men fighting. She gives the note intended for Pierre to Langlois, and the note intended for Longlois to Pierre. She tells Langlois of the substitution she has made.

Pierre wants to die, but wishes to destroy his rival, Langlois. Therefore, he cries aloud so that all of the assemblage may hear his words: "I demand the right of our ancient code—a fight to death on the island." Langlois agrees at once.

The two rivals are taken in a boat to a neighboring island which has been the scene of so many bloody tragedies, and Pierre is set ashore at one end of the island, while Langlois is landed on the farther end. Each man is armed with a revolver. The plan is for them to creep toward each other and endeavor to shoot his rival, or capture him and subject him to the torture.

Marie, who does not realize the desperate condition of affairs between Pierre and Langlois, dries her eyes and walks into the forest. She finds two Indian children playing with the two bits of paper which Lota clipped from the two notes written by Marie. At a glance Marie realizes the trick which has been played upon her and upon Pierre. Frantically she rushes to the post where an old hunter tells her that Pierre and Langlois are fighting to the death on the neighboring island.

Marie seizes the old hunter's rifle, and running to the river shore jumps into a canoe and paddles in desperate haste toward the island. She hears the first shots of the duel. The rivals have discovered each other and have exchanged bullets.

In the meantime, Pierre and Langlois have a most dramatic fight. Langlois locates Pierre and craftily encircles his position until he arrives in his rear. He then approaches Pierre from behind and strikes him down. Before the stricken man can recover Langlois has tied him to a tree. When Pierre recovers from his partial swoon Langlois tells him that he will put him to the torture and kill him afterwards.

Marie reaches the island just as Langlois is preparing to put the finishing tortures which will culminate in a frightful death for Pierre. He has his revolver pointed at the head of Pierre when Marie sees him.

A bullet from her revolver saves Pierre, who is quickly released from his bonds, and is convinced of Marie's love for him when she explains the ruse which has resulted in the terrible misunderstanding.

The bullet from Marie's rifle does not kill Langlois, but the forest people, learning of his brutal treachery and his insults to Marie, drive him from the country.

The simple people of the woods rejoice in the reconciliation between the two lovers.

THE STRENUOUS LIFE (Jan. 8).—Gladys Willing, a simple village maid, lives with her mother, Mrs. Vera Willing, a comely widow, in their modest rose covered cottage. Manly Fellows, the young and stalwart village blacksmith, is in love with Gladys, but Vilas Canby, a wealthy villain of the deepest dye, has sworn that the maiden shall be his.

Canby abducts the maiden and takes her to a hut in the woods. Manly Fellows goes to the rescue and saves her. He saves her several times—from a railroad engine, from imminent death on the railroad track where she has been tied, from a den of lions and from other perilous positions where the villain has placed her to compel her to become his bride.

Manly Fellows becomes practically an invalid, because of his strenuous duties as a hero. So, when the villain again abducts Gladys, the manly hero declines to commit further acts of heroism and marries the dashing widow instead of the charming daughter. Then Gladys marries the villain.

FURTHER ADVENTURES OF SAMMY ORPHEUS (Jan. 9).—Sammy Orpheus, the roving flute player from the Bowery, whose skill and genius as a musician has saved his own life many times, while it has kept alive the memory of his sweetheart back in old New York, lives in an African jungle with faithful "Toddles," the elephant. He wants to return to his sweetheart Jenny, back in the Bowery, and he tells "Toddles" of his hopes and fears.

The next night Sammy takes refuge in a cave, where he has an awful experience with a pair of lions, but the music from his flute subdues them. When he reaches the seashore, he surprises a notorious pirate and his crew burying a treasure. They capture Sammy, but he charms them with his flute, and they take him with them. The ship is wrecked and Sammy is the sole survivor. He escapes into a Moorish castle, where the Sultana falls in love with him, but he is true to his sweetheart Jenny. The Sultana consigns him to a lion's den, but again the flute disarms their ferocity.

After many adventures, Sammy recovers the pirates' gold and with the faithful "Toddles" returns to his sweetheart Jenny.

HAROLD'S BAD MAN (Jan. 12).—Esther Lee, a western girl, attending a college in the East, becomes engaged to Harold Shaw, a young collegian. She goes home to spend her vacation on the ranch, and arrives just after the election which has made her father the county sheriff.

Sheriff Lee is a great coward, and shudders with misgivings at the thought of the dangerous work ahead of him, because the country is infested by outlaws. He receives word that "Cross-eyed" Steve, a noted outlaw, has held up a stage and escaped into the mountains. Harold and Esther run into the outlaw and capture him. The sheriff is notified, comes and gets the prisoner and receives the credit for his capture. Esther and Harold promise secrecy if he permits them to marry.

The Bradys make a good strike. Dirk Patterson and McGee, unscrupulous claim jumpers, plan to rob the Bradys of the gold they had taken out of the mine and hidden in their shack. While the younger Brady is away the crooks overpower the father and torture him with a red-hot poker in an effort to make him disclose the hiding place of the gold. Brady, Junior, returns in the nick of time and the crooks are given a sound beating.

The Bradys then take the gold and go to the shack of Campbell's widow, where they inform her that her husband had a share in their mine, giving her all their savings to save her from starvation. The mortgage on the Arizona ranch is still unpaid, and the Bradys start out to try their luck once more.

Victoria, the professor's daughter, is in love with Eddie. Eddie asks to marry her but is told by the professor that he can have Victoria only in the event that he is able to revive the mummy with his elixir of life.

Eddie calls in his chum, Lee. Together they plan to have Lee pose as the mummy. Lee does so, and the experiment proves a success. The Pasha and his men surround the house and await the opportunity to steal the mummy. When Lee is left alone they pick him up and run off with him, pursued by the professor. Realizing that he had got more than he had bargained for, Lee runs away. He seeks refuge in the professor's house, where Eddie takes the real mummy, stabs it and throws it out of the window. The Pasha finally gets the mummy and Eddie gets the girl. The professor is satisfied that his elixir works, and Lee is satisfied that he has proved an able medium for the success of his friend's love affair.

Dot, a young lady of leisure, is rowing on the park lake, when she is seen from the shore by a young man of flirtatious temperament. He at once hires a boat and rows out to get a closer view of Dot, but in his eagerness, he is careless, and upsets not only her boat, but his own as well. Struggling in the water, they become separated and Pedro rescues Dot, while a like act is performed by Pedro's wife for the young man. While Dot is thanking Pedro for his heroic act, Pedro looks about in his embarrassment and sees the young man, who is, in gratitude, kissing Pedro's wife, his rescuer. Pedro, angered by what he thinks is his wife's faithlessness, draws his stiletto and starts out to revenge himself. The young man sees the infuriated Italian coming for him with a gleaming blade, and at once runs to insure his own safety. Dot, in the excitement of the moment, follows Pedro. The chase leads to the lake shore, where pursued and pursuer meet and clash in a combat, which results in all concerned being precipitated into the waters of the lake.

Both belligerents rush to the nearest bowling alleys to prove their individual contentions. Schmaltz demonstrates successfully his superiority over his rival. Grousmeyer resolves to get revenge, and succeeds in smearing soft soap on the alleys. Schmaltz, discovering the deception, goes for Grousmeyer and a fight ensues in which every one present, including the spectators, takes part. In the meantime, Mrs. Grousmeyer returns, and, finding her house wrecked, starts a fight with Mrs. Schmaltz on whose husband she puts the blame for the state of her home. The fight carries them over to the bowling alleys, where they are caught in the big royal battle.

VICTOR.

MY LADY HIGH AND MIGHTY (Two Parts—Jan. 11).—Off they go over field and dale, the fox in the lead, the hounds on the scent, and up in the front ranks, first over the hedges riding like the men in the party, comes Lady Mary, the daughter of the Earl of Dreadwood.

Poor Sir Harvey proposes to her almost daily, but, despite his excellent social position and vast estate, Lady Mary gives him but scant encouragement. Lady Mary has been reading modern novels and tells Sir Harvey that what she wants is a man who will not fawn at her feet but will command her in cave-man fashion. Saddened by her persistent refusals of his offer of marriage, Sir Harvey goes to an island near his estate, where he camps out with his dogs, trying to forget his troubles.

Meanwhile an aged old usurer has proposed to Lady Mary. He likes her untamed ways and threatens to oust the Earl of Dreadwood if that gentleman will not consent to his marriage to the Earl's daughter. The Earl, hard pressed for money, unwillingly gives his consent to the marriage. He has not recokned with his daughter, Lady Mary, however.

When the old usurer proposes to her, Mary throws a hot cup of tea in his haggard face and flees from her father's estate to the island where Sir Harvey is camping out in solitary gloom. Sir Harvey sees her coming across the sands and determines to play cave man, now that he has the opportunity.

Accordingly he seizes her roughly, much to Lady Mary's surprise, forces her to wash his linen, to cook and to clean out his dugout in the hillside. Then he compels her to wash his dogs and to split wood. At the end of her hard day's work he seizes her by the hair and, in true cave-man fashion, throws her in a corner of the cave and goes to sleep himself in the opposite corner.

Lady Mary, who has been petted and spoiled all her life, rather likes the treatment, just for a change. However, she hopes that Sir Harvey will wake up in the morning more kindly disposed than he had been the day before.

Meanwhile the old Earl is in a towering rage. He discovers from the butler that Lady Mary has gone to the island and he comes upon them just at break of day. He is about to murder Sir Harvey in his wrath until Lady Mary interposes and displays a wedding ring, her mother's, which she had brought to the island.

Mollified, the Earl consents to an immediate marriage, and that night in the castle hall Sir Sir Harvey signs the papers which frees the Dreadwood estates of debt. Lady Mary's proud spirit has been quite conquered by her experience on the island and she is quite willing to obey, thereafter, her "lord and master."

REX.

PAWNS OF FATE (Two Parts—Jan. 14).—Frank Marston is known to the world as a successful man. His daughter Helen is engaged to Tom Farrell, a young business man.

One night the young couple go to a gay party at the studio of a famous artist. Helen and her father started a game of chess while waiting for Tom and the old man goes back to the library after seeing the young folks leave.

As he sits in the flickering firelight toying absently with the chess pieces in front of him, memory takes a hand and moves the pieces into strange relationship. The white queen and her knight face the black knight. As he watches the three pieces slowly change into the figures of himself, as a young man, standing in place of the black knight and in place of the white pieces, come the forms of his old pal, Marc Bailey, and the latter's pretty Mexican sweetheart, Anita, of the years of long ago.

Slowly the chessboard fades away and the scenes from the past come up before him. Marc Bailey, living in the little Mexican town of Cocholento, located a good prospect the same day that he received a telegram from his old pal, Frank Marston, that the latter had been granted a zone by the Mexican government. (A zone is a sixty-day mining option on any large tract of land, giving the holder the sole right to file on any portion of that land during that period, even when other parties have located prospects in the district.)

Anita forgets Bailey's faithful love for the handsome Marston and he pretends to care for her. They dally in the southern moonlight, unsuspected by Bailey.

Trusting his friend as himself, Marc shows Marston the prospect. But the streak of greed in Marston overcomes his scruples and all the friendship of years. He alone has the right to file on the land, and unknown to Bailey, he does so. But Bailey discovers the fact and accuses Marston. The latter offers to pay him for the prospect but outraged friendship rebels at this insult, and Bailey pulls his gun to shoot Marston.

Anita watched the scene afraid. Thinking to stop Bailey, she throws herself in front of Marston. Too late. The bullet drives its way into her fickle heart. Bailey is overcome, for his love for the girl is greater than his hatred of Marston. He rushes to her side, throwing his gun away as he goes. She turns away from him and calls for Marston, but the latter, afraid of Bailey's vengeance, has fled.

The scene fades back to the library again. On the chessboard the black knight has disappeared and the white queen is prostrate. Marston agitated by memories, pours himself a drink. He is taking it when a face appears at the window, a face distorted with hate. The face is that of Bailey. Bailey, the failure, who has drifted lower and lower, until at last he has joined a band of crooks for the robbery of Marston's house.

When Bailey recognizes Marston all the old enmity is aroused. He enters the library, gun in hand. Marston, the animal hate overcoming him, throws away his gun. He must kill this man with his bare hands. Grimly and silently the two gray-haired men struggle. Bailey's hands at Marston's throat.

Meanwhile in the gay studio the grim messenger of death has been a guest. Pretty Helen, reveling with the others, goes up the stairs with her fiance to the long gallery for refreshments. Drinking to her host, she stumbles back against the weakened balustrade. It gives way and the girl is hurled to the floor below. The guests and her horrified fiance hurry down to her, but the little life is broken. Heartbroken, they take her body back to Marston's house.

As they carry her into the library, Bailey is tightening his grip on Marston's throat. The men stagger apart. With a wild shriek Marston stumbles to the girl's side. Bailey stands for a moment watching the scene. He sees that the girl is dead. His vengeance is complete, for life will be worse than death now to the man who so wronged him in that long ago past. Bailey goes out again into the snow, a failure, leaving Marston, the success, sobbing his heart away in the beautiful library.

GOLD SEAL

A WOMAN'S DEBT (Two Parts—Jan. 12).—Thelma Morrison is the stenographer of Jack Davenport, the president of the Louisburg Bank. Davenport is in love with Thelma, who is engaged to Bob Cameron, captain of the town's baseball team. Davenport proposes to her, but is interrupted by Cameron, phoning from a nearby pool room. Cameron invites Thelma to the ball game that day. She consents to go and Davenport offers to take her in his machine. She accepts half-heartedly and they go together. When Cameron sees them, he jealously pushes the girl. Davenport leaves, apologetically, and Cameron goes back to the game, leaving Thelma in tears. She, too, leaves shortly, and, Davenport, who is outside in his machine, takes her to her shabby home, asking if he may call that night for his answer.

When Thelma arrives home she finds her mother wearily bending over the ironing board. Her father returns gloomily from work to tell them the factory is closed. The mother starts to cry and Thelma resolves to marry Davenport to save her family. That night when he calls, she accepts him. While in his embrace, Bob whistles outside. She goes to him and tells him she is marrying Davenport to save her mother.

Five years elapse and Thelma becomes a social butterfly, gambling heavily in bridge and pressing her husband, Davenport, to the wall because of her extravagances. She loses heavily to Muriel Hope, giving on one afternoon an I. O. U. for $2,000. While the game is in progress her little son is taken ill and the nurse comes to tell her of it. Thelma dismisses her angrily. When her husband returns she treats him indifferently and he hurries up to his boy's side. That night the doctor calls Thelma to the boy, saying he is very ill, but she only laughs at their fears.

While she is talking guests are announced. Thelma goes to meet them and discovers Muriel Hope's fiance to be Bob Cameron, whom she has not seen for five years. She almost betrays herself, but manages to accept the introduction. Muriel asks for her money and while the two women are talking, Cameron writes Thelma a note, insisting on her coming to his office, and indicating that he holds Muriel's I. O. U.s and can help her. As they leave and Thelma stands watching them go, the nurse rushes down to tell her to come to her little boy, who has just died. With a cry of anguish she rushes upstairs where she finds her husband lying across the bed. He pushes her away and will not let her share the sorrow.

Several days later Thelma remembers her appointment with Cameron, but determines not to keep it. She goes to her husband and asks for money, but he indicates he has paid her last gambling debt. She turns and leaves for Cameron's office. Cameron takes her in his arms, shows her all her I. O. U.'s, etc., and indicates they are hers if she will give herself up to his love. Tempted, Thelma promises to come on the morrow. The next day she leaves again for the office and when Cameron attempts to kiss her, she holds him off, indicating she must have the I. O. U.'s first.

He goes into the vault where they have been placed and she conceives the idea of getting the I. O. U.'s from him and shutting him in. This she does very cleverly, but when he is locked in she realizes what she has done, and hysterically calls up her husband, who comes to her assistance. Davenport sends for an expert to open the safe and while they are waiting Thelma confesses. Cameron is released, quite chastened and offers to give Thelma the I. O. U.'s. Davenport, however, insists upon paying for them. The last barrier is down. Thelma sees Cameron in his true colors and turns to her husband, realizing that his is the only love really worth while.

BISON.

THE GOVERNOR MAKER (Two Parts—Jan 16).—Grace Parker and Mary French work in the Acme Mills. Jim Savage is a mill hand and the recognized leader of the male workers. Cyrus Wade is principal stockholder in the Acme mills. On the day that the leaders of Wade's party notify him that he has received the nomination for governor, the directors of the mills are called into executive session. At this meeting Wade casts the vote which closes the mills and throws hundreds of factory workers out of employment.

A month passes. The mill hands, now in desperate want, choose a committee, consisting of Grace Parker, Jim Savage and another man, to visit Wade and beg him to re-open his mills. Wade receives them, but makes it plain that he is not in sympathy with their purposes.

That night, Jim Savage, half drunk, plays upon the feelings of his followers, and they creep into the mill intent upon setting it on fire. On the way they meet Grace and Mary. Jim acts too familiar with Grace, who slaps his face. Enraged, Jim intimates that they are about to square accounts with Wade. Whereupon Grace hurries Mary off to notify Wade, while she herself follows Jim Savage and his men.

The three men break into the mills, make their way to a passageway and saturate rubbish with kerosene. Mary steals after them. As Jim is about to apply a match to the rubbish, Grace threatens him with arrest. He and the three men grab Grace and bind her. As Jim is about to make his second attempt to fire the rubbish one of the men shows the "white feather." A fight ensues, during which the other two slink off. Jim gets the better of his opponent, fires the rubbish and rushes out, leaving Grace and his helper to their fate.

Mary meanwhile hails a passing auto. The chauffeur rushes her to the Wade residence, where she exposes the plot to Wade, who, with his butler, enters the auto and is driven to the mills. They arrive just in time to discover Jim Savage leaving. Meeks closes with the half-drunken Jim, while Wade and the butler enter the building. Wade rescues Grace, and the butler succeeds in putting out the fire. Grace is unhurt, and Wade insists that the girls permit Meeks to drive them to their homes.

A week later Wade is billed to make a political speech. Grace has obtained employment in a bakery. Jim Savage and his crowd start to mob the speaker. Wade makes his escape, and dashes down the street, the infuriated mob in close pursuit. Grace at work in the bakery, hears the noise, rushes outside, halts the fleeing Wade, and sends him through the bakery to a rear exit. She then holds the mob by hurling at them the contents of the bakery.

Wade, twice obligated to Grace, offers her a position as his campaign secretary. Grace accepts. In the course of her work she frequently meets young Meeks, who is Wade's favorite nephew. Mary has informed Grace that she (Mary) has secured a position in a near-by town. Meeks endeavors to make advances to Grace, but meets with no success.

One day Grace enters Wade's office as Meeks is leaving. On the floor she sees a letter which proves to be from Mary. In it Mary chides Meeks for abandoning her. Meeks misses the letter, returns for it and endeavors to force Grace to give it up. She refuses, and Meeks attempts to take it by force. In the midst of the struggle Wade enters. He demands to know the meaning of the scene. Grace is loath to tell, but Wade takes the letter from her, reads it, then orders Meeks to bring Mary to him.

Later, Grace, encouraged by Wade, advises him to win his election by re-opening the mills, thus winning the labor vote and inspiring the confidence of those opposed to him. By adopting her platform Wade is elected by an overwhelming majority. Grace then resigns her position, but Wade has learned to love the clever girl, proposes marriage and is accepted.

REUNITED (Two Parts—Jan. 13).—While visiting his sweetheart, Antoine de Vallence, a French lieutenant, is ordered to report for duty at once. Marguerite Du Bois keeps two miniatures, one of Antoine in his uniform and the other of herself, which she places with a bundle of old love letters. Later she hears of De Vallence's death and, broken hearted, she fades away and dies.

Two hundred years have elapsed. They quarrel. Vallery receives a message to come to his dying uncle at once. During his absence Marguerite realizes that she really loves her husband.

Arriving at his uncle's house Vallery finds the old man dying. He is shown over the property to which he is to fall heir and looks with interest at the portraits of his ancestors. He is about to enter a room when the servant tells him it is haunted. Vallery laughs at this nonsense and enters.

The room shows traces of having been a boudoir. Picking up two miniatures from a desk he finds them to be pictures of a young officer of the French army and the other a dainty little maid whose face seems strangely familiar to him. All at once the spirit of the lady appears. Startled beyond measure, the young fellow hurries from the room.

The uncle dies. The young man returns to the haunted chamber and as the vision again appears he asks: "Who are you?" She bids him take off the top letter from the old package of love letters and he reads the news of the young officer's death. At once it occurs to him that the portrait is of himself as he was

ROMANCE IN BEAR CREEK (Jan. 17).—The Whitmans and the Morgans are bitter enemies because the Whitmans have dammed up the stream running between their ranch and the Morgan's ranch, thus effectually cutting off the irrigation supply from the Morgan ranch. The quarrel leads to the killing of old man Whitman by the Morgans, much to the horror of Lola Morgan, who is in love with young Whitman.

Whitman vows revenge and as he lies in waiting for the Morgans he is spied by Lola, who hastens to warn her father and brother. As she runs she stumbles and falled down a cliff. Whitman hastens to her rescue, but before he can get to her she loses her hold on the rock and falls down to the bottom. Whitman picks her up and carries her to the Morgan house, where he meets the Morgans. At the behest of Lola he leaves at once, being unarmed.

Later the Morgans discover Lola and Whitman in loving embrace. Whitman, being unarmed, is allowed to proceed in peace, but Lola is locked in her room. She tries to escape and succeeds in shooting off the lock on the door. She hastens to prevent the murder of her sweetheart by her brother and father.

The Morgans find Whitman and open fire on him. Lola appears and threatens to shoot herself unless they cease hostilities. Whitman joins her and finally peace is proclaimed.

THE LEGEND BEAUTIFUL (Two Reels—Jan. 4).—Indolent Jose and industrious, avaricious Pietro, like Jacob and Esau, are brothers. Rachel loves Jose, but admires Pietro for his enterprise. However, she refuses to marry either of them. The Padre suggests to the boys' aged father, that he tell his sons that the neglected fields have gold in them, in order to rouse Jose. Pietro immediately applies himself to searching for the gold, and in his greed deserts his father, who is cared for on his dying bed by Jose. Rachel at last consents to marry Jose; and Pietro, seeing that he is about to lose the girl, drugs his brother's wine and induces him to sell his share of the patrimony. Jose, on coming to himself, in shame and despair, wanders away. Returning a few weeks later, he learns that that very hour his brother has married Rachel. He goes to a certain rock and putting the gold he has received from Pietro underneath, with a note swearing revenge to the death, he cunningly informs his brother that there is one rock he has overlooked. Pietro and his bride discover the money and the challenge.

Several years later finds Pietro reduced to poverty and stricken with illness. Jose, well armed with gold and thirsty for his long plotted revenge, sends his knife to his brother by a traveler, and then, stopping at the cottage which was once his home, he falls asleep. Meanwhile, Leah, the eight-year-old child of Pietro, has been listening to the Padre's story of the Legend Beautiful. She comes to the cottage with her basket full of bread and lilies and wakens the sleeping stranger. He hears with amazement that she is his brother's child, and her recital of the legend stirs him to repentance. Falling on his knees in the hut, he is vouchsafed a vision of the Christ. Then he hastens to Pietro's house and clasping his brother in his arms, begs his forgiveness. Not long after, Pietro succumbs to his sickness. On the threshold of taking holy orders, Jose learns of his brother's death. He and Rachel at last are united.

IN THE VALE OF SORROW (Jan. 5).—Frank Mathews is very ill. The doctor says he may linger awhile, but that he never will regain consciousness. There are three little mouths to feed, the youngest a baby of two years, and Nan Mathews must go out to support them. But then who will nurse the husband? Nan, with little Mary toddling beside her, meets on the street a wealthy man, well known in the community, who at sight of Baby Mary's winsome face exclaims, "I would give a thousand dollars for a child like that!" The mother does what she believes is best for all and she holds Mr. Van Arsdale to his offer. Later, an unexpected change in Mathews' conditions sets in, and gradually he recovers. Nan awaits with dread the moment he shall miss the baby and ask for her. When the time comes, however, she gives him to understand that Mary is dead. Not long after this, Mathews is called to the home of Mr. Van Arsdale to fix an electric lamp. The foster father of Mary is an unseen witness of the real father's joy on finding his child. He tells Mathews that his baby was lost, and that he rescued her. Then, sadly, he sees the little girl pass out of his life forever.

DOMINO.

A FLOWER IN THE DESERT (Two Reels—Dec. 31).—Violet Waldron is the child of dissolute parents beyond hope of redemption. Yet, strange to tell, she is a loyal, loving little soul, who stands by her father and mother in their degradation, regardless of the way they abuse her. Seeking help for Bill Waldron, who has taken an overdose of cocaine, she tries in vain to persuade her mother, whom she finds in a wine room, to return home with her. Tired out, she climbs into the limousine of the wife of Mr. Claybourne, a rich lawyer. Mrs. Claybourne takes her home and adopts her. But Violet does not forget her father, and later she runs away to find him. One of a band of crooks, of which Waldron is now a member, kidnaps Violet and carries her to their den, where, to her joy, she meets her father. That same night the police raid the building which takes fire. Waldron, mortally wounded, is deserted by his pals. Meanwhile, Mr. Claybourne arrives, tracing the lost child, and finds Violet with Waldron, whom she refuses to leave. Already Flora Waldron is dead, and when Bill Waldron breathes his last, their child is saved to a new life by her foster father.

KEYSTONE.

FATTIE AND MINNIE HE-HAW (Two Reels—Dec. 21).—Fatty steals a ride on top a freight train, where he is discovered and put off in the middle of nowhere. He is stumbling along over a sandy waste, when, overcome by the heat, he collapses in a dead faint. A very fat old squaw finds him and rescues him. She decoys Fatty to her tepee, where she woos him assiduously, and finally wins from him the promise that he will marry her.

While the Indians are preparing the wedding feast, under the direction of Minnie He-Haw, Fatty attempts to make his getaway. Only a brief taste of freedom, however, is to be his. He is captured by the enraged Indian maiden, who is quite as big and strong as he is, and is led back to the camp. Fatty is obliged to conceal his real feelings, and to make a great show of affection for his lady love. Satisfied at last, she conducts him to the marriage feast, seats him between herself and her father, the chief, and gives him to eat of the stewed dog meat.

Dog meat far from pleases Fatty's palate. He soon makes a plausible excuse to return to Minnie's tepee—and this time he actually does succeed in escaping. He finds his way to the Lost Hope Inn, where, meeting the vivacious daughter of mine host, he becomes much infatuated. Thither his deserted bride traces him, discovers his perfidy, and there is a lively scene. In the end Fatty grabs Minnie's horse, and starts off in John Gilpin style, the squaw giving pursuit. Minnie's steed heads for home, and on reaching the Indian camp, he deposits Fatty in a dizzy heap on the ground.

When Minnie He-Haw reaches the village, she finds her loyal tribe in the act of lashing the faithless Fatty to a stake, and piling up brush and kindling wood around him. But she loves her delinquent betrothed too much. And rather than see all her hopes go up in smoke, she breaks the thongs which bind him, and clasps Fatty to her forgiving bosom.

The plan is put through, and Peters notifies the police, who arrive and lie in wait for the crook. Meanwhile, Marsden, in an attempt to decoy his father-in-law from the house, sends him word that his daughter is seriously ill. Peters, however, sends to Jane, Ralph Miller, a business associate, who he had hoped his daughter would marry. When Marsden enters the library and touches the safe, instantly the electric shock kills him. Jane returns home with Miller, and a reconciliation is effected. Soon after, he receives word that his wealthy father is dying, and requires that his son return and marry a girl of his choice if young Hull is to inherit the family fortune. He manages to sneak off without leaving Mary any clue, and arrives home in time to be married to the girl, whom his father favors and to receive the old man's blessing. Mary, after waiting in vain, follows her lover to the town where he has given her to understand that he lives. She is unable to find any trace of him. Realizing that she has been duped, and being too proud to face the scorn of her family and friends, she accepts the attentions of a rich old roue. Several years later she sees Hull in a cafe in another city, and learns from the waiter that he is a prominent man of the place. Mary conspires with a shyster lawyer. They convince Hull that the supposed mock marriage really was legal and that therefore he is a bigamist. They bleed Hull of his fortune, and Mary goes from bad to worse—until she discovers that the man she hates is the father of two little daughters whom he dearly loves. She then gives back part of the money to Mrs. Hull and the children, finally confessing to Hull that she has ruined him simply to get her revenge.

She returns with a necklace which he has presented to her, and when the unhappy wife emerges from the private office, she instantly recognizes Ethel's latest ornament as the jewels which her faithless husband had stolen from her that very morning. She hastens to enlighten Ethel, and they conspire to lure Mr. Jones to the office to visit the stenographer. He rises to the bait, and then Ethel uses her powers on him to such good purpose that Hadley, watching with the wife from the inner office, considers the evidence sufficient to start divorce proceedings at once.

The taxicab in which she is making her escape, however, is overtaken by the gang. Only the timely arrival of Reynolds and the police save Alice. Hodges, however, is unscrupulous. He finds out that Blue Flower's father has a hidden hoard of gold, and meaning to secure the treasure, he wins the Indian girl's promise to elope with him. Meanwhile, he attempts to steal the gold, intending to make it appear that Blue Flower has brought him the fortune with herself. He is surprised, however, by the Chief, and in the struggle which ensues the latter is killed. The daughter discovers the murder, and when she meets Hodges at the appointed place, she is armed with her father's gun. Terror-stricken, the prospector backs away from her over a high cliff and falls to his death. Then the young Indian brave appears and folds Blue Flower in his blanket.

doorman, not knowing him, at first refuses him admittance. But Mr. Flagg soon persuades that faithful official to let him enter the studio, where he is met by the director, Lawrence L. McGill. Margaret, however, has not yet put in her appearance, and Mr. McGill phones her. She finds, to her chagrin, that her watch has stopped but promises to hurry down to the studio at once.

Meanwhile, her distinguished guest makes himself thoroughly at home. He finds a young stage hand with artistic ambitions sketching the fat camera man on the back of a piece of scenery. Laughingly, he takes the crayon and with a few deft strokes perfects the drawing. Great is the admiration of the studio employees.

Our Mutual Girl comes rushing in, all apologies, and she and Mr. Flagg are photographed by the fat camera man. Simultaneously, on another stage a scene from the new serial "Runaway June," is being rehearsed. There is trouble, however, as one of the players has failed to report. Mr. Flagg is mistaken by the director's assistant for an "extra," and seeing in him the proper type for the missing part, the assistant tells him to take the stage. Margaret, panic-stricken, rushes over to tell the man that this is James Montgomery Flagg. But the arist puts his finger on his lips—and for the next half hour he works before the camera, to Margaret's mingled amusement and dismay. The scene over, Mr. Flagg is paid two dollars. He invests his first salary as a motion picture actor in a box of Huyler's for Our Mutual Girl.

This is the beginning of a friendship between young Goodby and Molly Shannon which is equally displeasing to both fathers. At last the lovers exchange clothing, plotting, thus disguised, to win their point. The parson, failing to recognize the pair, marries them. But the saloonkeeper, who is on to the ruse, arrives just at the close of the ceremony, in time to give away the culprits to the Reverend Mr. Goodly. A stormy scene follows—which ends with both fathers bestowing their blessings upon their willful offspring.

THANHOUSER.

SHEP, THE SENTINEL (Jan. 1).—When May receives a letter from another girl telling her that Jack, her lover, is untrue, she dismisses him. Shep, Jack's beautiful collie, however, is suspicious of Jim Hallet, who, some way, he feels is responsible for his master's unhappiness. He trails Jim and steals another letter, written by Nell Borden, Jim's accomplice, which betrays the plot. This Shep brings to Jack, who then is able to convince May that trickery and Jim's jealousy are behind their estrangement. Meanwhile, Jim has schemed to enter May's house by night and commit a robbery, putting the suspicion upon Jack. But Shep, whom Jack has given to May, hears the thief. The noise of their struggle wakes May, who summons Jack and the police. Jim is arrested, and May has all the evidence she can desire of her lover's faithfulness.

THE BRIDAL BOUQUET (Jan. 3).—Anna Marvin, a dressmaker's assistant, is engaged to Jim Randall, a young mechanic. Jim becomes attracted to a handsome, well-dressed cloak model, and decides to cast off his little sweetheart. Anna is sent to a wealthy home with a gown which has been delayed. It is the occasion of the wedding of the daughter of the house—and as the seamstress enters the hall, the bridal bouquet, tossed by the bride from the staircase, falls into the astonished child's arms. Though she had intended that one of her bridesmaids should have this honor, which, as everybody knows, betokens an early and happy marriage, the bride congratulates the little dressmaker's assistant and sends her home with the beautiful flowers. That evening Jim Randall calls and finds Anna radiantly happy, feeling that the incident of the afternoon is a good omen. He realizes how cruel he has been in neglecting her for the girl of more stylish appearance; and all his love for Anna, flooding back, he persuades her to marry him that very night.

HER MENACING PAST (Two Reels—Jan. 5).—Anna Sanderson has been trained by her father, who is a professional burglar, to be his accomplice. She loves the excitement of the life and has no desire to reform. One day, however, the police trail the father and daughter, and Anna, in scaling a high wall, falls and is knocked senseless. Her father carries her in his arms for some distance. Then, seeing that there can be no escape for either of them thus, he places her in the vestibule of a house, and makes his getaway alone. A young doctor and his mother discover the unconscious girl. But when they have revived her they find that she has lost all remembrance of her past life. They keep her in their home, and eventually Anna and the doctor fall in love and are married. Some time after this, a fall from a horse restores the girl's memory. The old life of peril and adventure reasserts its attraction for her, and she is on the point of rejoining her father, who has discovered where she is living, when she realizes that stronger love of adventure is the new love which she bears her husband.

ZUDORA (The Case of the McWinter Family—Episode Six—Reels 11 and 12).—The flames were sketching on the wall with their flickering shadows as Mrs. McWinter sat with her little daughter sewing. Near the reading lamp back of her McWinter sat. As his wife turned, and spoke to him, he put down his paper with a surly growl and answered her curtly. Presently the little daughter kissed her father and mother good-night and went to bed.

It was the next evening that McWinter's jealousy finally got the better of him and he determined to do something about the situation with which he found himself confronted. He came home early, kissed his wife and hugged his daughter, then left them and went upstairs to wash. By the time he was down again, their boarder had come home. This boarder was a young man, who was employed in McWinter's chemical works, and it was at Mrs. McWinter's suggestion that he had been allowed to come into their house as a paying guest. This first aroused the suspicions of the head of the house. As Mrs. McWinter said, when it was too late, "Oh, if I had only told him that Jim was my brother. We kept it secret, though, because we wanted Jim to get along on his own merits, and not on my husband's pull."

Before going upstairs the boarder went into the parlor, and when the husband and father came down from his ablutions he found the family boarder leaning over the table, looking at some pictures with an arm round wife and daughter. McWinter resolved to do something, and began planning.

Going to a hut near his factory, McWinter is soon busily engaged in fixing the catch so that it locks the door from outside and thus keeps any one, who is inside when the door closes, a prisoner till help comes. Over the door McWinter now builds a small shelf which is held in place by hinges. From the bottom of it a small piece of wood projects. This operates in such a way that when the door is pushed in the shelf is tilted back towards the wall, thus holding in place whatever may happen to be on it. However, when the door, after being opened, swings to again, and, in swinging back collides with the piece of wood which projects from the bottom of the shelf, the shelf itself, in turn, is tilted downwards and dumps on the stone floor whatever happens to have been on it.

With this idea in his mind he goes back to his chemical works and from the laboratory, when the backs of the two chemists are turned, he takes a bottle from the white label of which in large red letters the one word "Poison" stares. At home, on the pretext of going hunting, McWinter asks his wife if Jim would not like to accompany him on a short gaming expedition. At the suggestion of his wife, McWinter requests Jim to come along. He agrees. As McWinter and Jim were crossing the field together in earnest conversation concerning the prospects of good hunting McWinter exclaims, "By the way, I think I left an old hunting bag of mine in that hut yonder." Hurrying ahead and going into the hut, he adjusts the bottle of poison on top of the little shelf, propping the door open with a stick of firewood. His dog had followed him and now is crouched down beside McWinter, who is waiting for Jim's arrival. His intention is to get Jim in the hut, kick the piece of wood out of the way and get outside himself, knowing well that the bottle on the shelf above would crash to the floor and release inside the hut a volume of deadly fumes. Suddenly Jim appeared.

With a yelp the dog crouching beside McWinter jumped to meet the newcomer, and struck down the stick of wood as he leapt through the door, which closed with a bang, just escaping the hind heels of the hurrying animal. When Jim opened the door after a leisurely interval, for naturally it never occurred to him what was going on inside or that the door was even locked by its accidental closing, McWinter lay dead. A half hour later Jim was arrested charged with the commission of a diabolical crime. The news spread. A mob gathered. Meanwhile, Mrs. McWinter had called on the far-famed Hassam Ali, mystic detective, to investigate the case and save her brother from the electric chair. And to Zudora, his niece, Hassam Ali confided the case. At once she calls on John Storm, her young lawyer sweetheart, for aid in solving the mystery, for each success brings their wedding day nearer.

With Storm's help she does so. After examining the shelf and finding broken glass on the floor, she makes a few inquiries, and just as she has solved the problem she learns that a mob is lynching Jim. Hastening over road and field she persuades them to listen, convinces them of the truth and the man is freed.

ZUDORA (The Mystery of the Lost Ships—Episode Seven—Reels 13 and 14).—The seventh case, which Zudora was called upon to solve, proved to be the most difficult problem of all that she had encountered. It happens that the J. B. Starr Company, a shipping concern, whose vessels ply in all parts of the world, keep losing ships without apparent reason, when no rough weather or collisons have been reported. The company gain an apparent clue to these strange disappearances, when a series of mysterious explosions occur on some of their ships lying at their docks. Obviously it is the work of some enemy and after placing the case in the hands of a detective agency, which gains little information for them, the head of the company appeals to Hassam Ali. The mystic, in accordance with his agreement, turns the case over to his ward, Zudora.

Just at this time John Storm, her sweetheart, has asked her for her photograph, and she has promised to have one taken. Not realizing the fell designs of her uncle, Zudora asks him where she may have her likeness taken, and he directs her to a certain photographer, one Fal Green, above whose studio there lives an inventor-confederate of the mystic. Hassam plans there to gain the ends for which he had been striving.

Zudora goes to the photographer's, and while she is there her uncle calls on the inventor and to his surprise learns from him that he has discovered a wonderful but terribly destructive power in a certain ray of light, which he is able to throw for immense distances, or which, by a clock mechanism, he can release at a given time. From him Hassam also learns that the ships were destroyed merely as a means of proving the power of his discovery. By a liberal use of money the mystic persuades the inventor to agree to follow his instructions. Then the two men, through an opening in the floor, watch Zudora pose for her photograph in the studio below. Later Hassam plans to make use of his friend's mysterious invention to destroy his mysterious niece. Meanwhile Zudora has learned many things from Fal Green, the photographer. He is aware of the remarkable invention of Hassam's ally, although he does not know of the evil uses to which it has been put, and he tells Zudora about it. Also he tells her of an invention of his own, a certain chemical mixture, which he has discovered, which records and develops a picture instantaneously. Aided by John Storm, Zudora concludes that there is some connection between the lost ships and the inventor above the photographer's studio, but she keeps her own counsel, awaiting developments.

When she returns to the studio for her finished pictures, her uncle follows her again, determined to wreak his will. While the photographer is absent for a moment, she examines a bottle of the curious mixture he had told her about, and by accident drops it, shattering it to pieces. As she stoops to clean up the mess, she is astounded to see the pictured face of her uncle appear on the floor, and looking upward sees him hurriedly withdrawing his face from the aperture in the ceiling. Certain that all is not right she hastens from the studio and informs Storm of her strange experience, while Fal Green goes to accuse the inventor of spying on him. Storm returns with her after notifying a detective agency to send two operatives to the photographer's studio. Arrived there they force their way into the inventor's rooms, when suddenly there is an explosion and the house is in flames.

And then a strange thing happens. In the general stampede for safety Storm and the others in the house reach the street unharmed, while Zudora, alone, is trapped in the doomed building. Storm seems dazed by the danger to his sweetheart and wrings his hands helplessly. Then out of the crowd dashes a solitary figure. It is James Baird. He fights his way through the flame and smoke of the burning house to Zudora's side and carries her safely to the street.

He puts her down tenderly and when, a moment later, she recovers her senses and turns to thank him, he is gone.

CAMEO KIRBY (Lasky-Lieber).—"Cameo" Kirby, so-called because of his fondness for cameos, is the son of a New Orleans plantation owner who dies insolvent. When the plantation and slaves are sold at auction, Cameo's favorite body-servant is bought by one of his father's old friends, John Randall.

After the sale, Kirby and Randall start north on one of the Mississippi River boats. Randall meets an acquaintance by the name of Col. Moreau, and after losing heavily to the Colonel on a wager concerning a race between the boat on which they are traveling and another river steamer, consents to a game of poker to get satisfaction. Kirby, who, through his friendship for a certain gambler, is himself adept at the manipulation of cards, suspects that Moreau is not playing an honest game, and finally succeeds in forcing himself in and taking a hand. Randall, having lost all his money, wagers his home. The hand is played, and Kirby wins. Moreau accuses Kirby of cheating, and Randall, not appreciating that Kirby has won only to prevent the estate from falling into the hands of Moreau, shoots himself.

When the body is taken ashore, Kirby meets Adele Randall, the daughter of the dead man, and immediately falls in love with her. But he stands in a very bad light—as a man who has taken the very home from a friend who has just assisted him—and, of course, is held responsible for the suicide. Tom Randall, the son of the suicide, swears to avenge his father. When Moreau and Kirby fight a duel, with results fatal to Moreau, Tom takes the gun from Moreau's body in order that it may appear he was shot while having no weapon with which to defend himself. Kirby is accused of murder and becomes a fugitive from justice. In these black hours, he manages to see Adele, and to tell her the truth with such sincerity that she believes him and shelters him from the mob.

Finally, Moreau's pistol is found in the possession of Tom, whose forced confession frees Kirby from the charge of murder. When in addition to this, the deed for the Randall house which Kirby has sent to the Randall family actually turns up, of course Cameo stands forth again in his true colors as a chivalrous Southern gentleman. On his solemn promise to give up cards and all kinds of gambling, Cameo Kirby is betrothed to Adele Randall.

THE SPORTING DUCHESS (Lubin).—Lord Desborough and Captain Mostyn, both officers in the same regiment, are suitors for the hand of Muriel. Desborough wins and marries her, and thereby incurs the everlasting enmity of his rival. Their regiment is ordered to India, where Desborough falls under the wiles of an adventuress named Vivian Darville. His flirtation is duly reported to the absent wife by Mostyn, and the resultant future trouble between husband and wife, is fanned into flame by the jealousy of Rupert Lee, a young officer whom Vivian has driven to drink by her broken promises. On the return of the regiment to England the Desboroughs open their magnificent home, Desborough Hall, where in spite of the fact that Desborough is on the verge of bankruptcy, expensive entertainments are given under the patronage of the Countess, known as "The Sporting Duchess," because her aspirations are in the direction of hunting, horse racing and other phases of sporting life, rather than the less exciting functions of society. She is a woman of great wealth, keeps a large racing stable, and her liking for Desborough causes her to back his horse, Clipstone, for the Derby, as against King of Trumps, who is Mostyn's entry. Deciding to take unto herself a young husband, she selects Dr. Streatfield, a young army surgeon of fickle temperament, who has become engaged to Vivian Darville on the voyage home from England, and whom he introduces into the Desborough circle, only to find that his true affinity is Annette, daughter of Colonel Donnelly. Vivian's interest, however, goes no further than to be introduced into society through her engagement to Streatfield, and once under the Desborough roof, she begins to aid the villainous Mostyn in effecting a separation between the Desboroughs. This will open the way to Mostyn's attentions to Muriel, and at the same time secure revenge for Desborough's casting her off in India. But there is in the household, as nurse for the Desborough heir, Harold, Mary Aylmer, daughter of Desborough's stable trainer, whom Mostyn has betrayed under promise of marriage. She exacts fulfillment of that promise, and the plotters decide to remove her from the field of action at once.

Mary reveals her condition to Muriel, who consults Desborough, and he writes her a letter stating that he will provide for her future, but cannot, of course, retain her in his household as preceptress to his own son. At the same time he also writes a letter to Vivian Darville, asking that their former relations be forgotten, and that she no longer should remain in his home, to disturb the restored tender relations between his wife and him. Mary shows the Desborough letter to Mostyn, who promises to do what he can for her in a secret way, at the same time retaining the letter. Going with it to Vivian, she shows him the letter she has received, and the method of parting the Desboroughs is at once revealed. The headings of both letters are torn away, substituting for each other, and two letters are the result, which furnish evidence of Desborough's guilt both with Mary and Vivian. Muriel already prepared by Mostyn for certain compromising disclosures, is shown the letter, believes that her husband is doubly false to her and accepts Mostyn's offer to act as her escort to London, followed by the irate husband. Mostyn takes Muriel to an out-of-the-way inn, where his perfidy is revealed, for she now discovers that his only motive in removing her from her home was to further his own evil designs. She tries to escape from her prison, and a struggle between them is interrupted by Desborough, who administers a severe beating to Mostyn, and informs Muriel that he will at once begin an action for separation. This action results in a sweeping verdict for Desborough, in spite of the earnest efforts of "The Sporting Duchess" and other good friends, and he is given the custody of the child, Harold, a heart-breaking interview taking place in the court chambers. Following his event the affairs of Desborough grow from bad to worse, and even his stable is to be sold, including the great Clipstone, favorite for the Derby.

Believing that Desborough is the betrayer of his daughter, the faithful trainer, Aylmer, deserts him, taking with him Dick Hammond, the lover of Mary, who was to be the mount for Clipstone. The days of sale for the Desborough stable is announced, and to save for Desborough his one hope to recoup his shattered fortunes, his friends decide to raise a fund for the purchase of Clipstone. But their efforts are unavailing, the sum subscribed is not sufficient, and "The Sporting Duchess" is appealed to by Doctor Streatfield and Annette Donnelly to buy the horse herself. Replying that she buys expensive horses only for her husband, the young people magnanimously decide to break the engagement of marriage between them, and the doctor becomes the affianced husband of the Duchess. At the sale the Duchess buys Clipstone: he wins the Derby and nothing is left for Mostyn but to leave the army and retire into solitude with his fellow plotter, Vivian Darville. The unfortunate Rupert Lee, in the cottage where he has been living with Vivian, overhears the interview between Mostyn and Vivian and determines to revenge himself by making atonement for his share in the plots against the Desboroughs, which is done by producing the two Desborough letters with the proper headings supplied. Accordingly the Desboroughs are reunited, the erring Mary is forgiven by her faithful lover, and "The Sporting Duchess," deciding that it is best to be the doctor's mother instead of his wife, restores him to the unhappy Annette Donnelly.

WHEN LOVE AND HONOR CALLED (Essanay—Three Parts).—Broncho Billy is sent on a secret mission to a small Arizona town. There he meets a beautiful girl, Elizabeth Barton, who is betrothed to a handsome daredevil, Juan Martin, of the Bar-O Ranch. Broncho is given a job by the foreman, George Chisholm.

At a dance Martin and another cow-puncher quarrel. Martin draws his gun but Broncho Billy interferes. Martin is enraged and attempts to shoot Broncho. He takes the gun from him, takes the cartridges out and hands it back. Martin plots with the cook and other members of the outfit to poison the coffee of the foreman and steal the cattle. He hopes to throw the blame for the murder and theft on Broncho Billy.

Broncho wakes in the morning to find Chisholm dead and the rest of the company gone with the cattle. He borrows a horse and rides after the thieves. In a battle with the fugitives he is overpowered, and while some of the gang drive the cattle toward the Mexican border, Martin and two others bind Broncho and take him back to town, where they accuse him of murder and theft. He is put in jail. Miss Barton, however, had heard the trio framing the story on Broncho, as they were taking him to the jail, and telephones the sheriff. He immediately starts after the real thieves, leaving Broncho in jail in care of one deputy, pretending to believe Martin's story so he can capture the real thieves before they suspect that he knows of the plot.

The citizens of the town have heard the story from Martin and believe it. They start for the jail to lynch Broncho. Miss Barton hears of it and rushes to the jail ahead of them. She makes the deputy swear Broncho and herself in as his aids. They arm themselves and the three face the mob and tell the men they will fight to the death. They manage to hold off the mob in a desperate fight until the sheriff gets back with his prisoners. He then tells the citizens the true story and they cheer Broncho and the girl. Broncho then turns to the girl who had saved his life and whom he had loved from the first. She denounces Martin and throws herself into Broncho Billy's arms.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 1, "The Clutching Hand"—Two Parts—Released Dec. 28.)—The Consolidated Insurance Company, of which Taylor Dodge is president, has lost considerable money through the mysterious robberies of the master criminal known as The Clutching Hand. Perry Bennett, a young lawyer assistant to Dodge, is endeavoring to discover the criminal. Being of an affable and pleasing personality, he creates a deep impression upon Elaine, his employer's beautiful daughter. Dodge is visited by Limpy Red, a gunman wronged by The Clutching Hand. Limpy Red advises him how the mysterious crook can be found and gives him directions to find his lair. Dodge dismisses the gunman, and on returning to his office finds a mysterious note, advising him to at once destroy the directions received. It is signed by a well-drawn picture of a clutching hand. Greatly perturbed he returns to his home. Stepping out of his limousine, he is surprised to find an envelope with his enemy's trademark pasted on the door. Entering his home he is met by Elaine, Bennett, and Jameson, a reporter. He refuses to be interviewed by the reporter and enters his library, where he deposits Limpy Red's directions in his safe. Jameson, hearing Dodge remark that he has discovered The Clutching Hand, hastens to his friend Craig Kennedy, a noted detective, and tells him the news. Kennedy is greatly excited by this knowledge, and, calling to Jameson to follow him, hastens on his way to Dodge's home, remarking that he fears for Dodge's life. Meanwhile, as night has fallen, two masked figures approach Dodge's home, and one of them, forcing his way into the cellar, dragging wires, approaches the furnace pipe, and attaches them to it. Dodge, in his library above, as a precaution, removes Limpy Red's correspondence from the safe, and secretes it in a hidden recess in the wall, and places a fake envelope in its place. Turning to answer his telephone, he steps upon an iron register on the floor. As he grasps the telephone, there is a powerful electric flash, and Dodge sinks lifeless to the floor. The deadly wires below have done their work. In a few moments the masked intruder enters the library, notes the dead man, and approaches the safe. Mixing some peculiar powders, he places them on the top of the safe, and ignites a fuse. There is a blinding flash, and immediately appears a hole, burned through the top of the safe. The robber puts in his hand and pulls out the envelope which he supposes contains Limpy Red's confession, and makes his exit. His partner, searching out Limpy Red, slays the squealer, whom he follows from a low dive.

Kennedy, arrived at the Dodge home, arouses the servants, and explains his fears for their master's life. Hearing the whining of Dodge's dog, they hasten to the library, and there discover the victim of the Clutching Hand's vengeance. The detective immediately searches for clues, and discovers finger prints on a plaster bust. Thoroughly examining them, he is greatly surprised to notice that they are his own finger prints. He realizes the cunning villain with whom he has to cope. Bennett, consoling the grief-stricken Elaine, registers a solemn vow to consecrate his life to bringing the Clutching Hand to justice.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Second Episode—Two Parts—"The Twilight Sleep"—Jan. 4.)—Elaine Dodge and her lawyer, Perry Bennett, are endeavoring to solve the death of Elaine's father, who was mysteriously slain by The Clutching Hand. Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, has been called in to solve the mystery, but so far his efforts have been productive of no satisfactory result. While investigating a clue at Elaine's home, a letter tied to a stone comes crashing through a window. Kennedy sees that it is another threatening warning from The Clutching Hand. A search fails to reveal the intimidator. Kennedy leaves the house, but promises Elaine that he will not give up the search.

That night a German scientist calls at the Hillside Sanatarium for Women, ostensibly to investigate the celebrated "Twilight Sleep," but in reality to purloin a vial of the drug Scapolorium, which produces the "Twilight Sleep." The peculiarity of the drug is that while it does not render the patient insensible, it keeps her from recalling events following its application. The visitor, having witnessed the operation, takes his leave. The disappearance of the precious vial of Scapolorium puzzles the doctors.

Elaine Dodge, at home in bed, is drugged into unconsciousness by the masked figure of The Clutching Hand, who has entered through her window. While administering the narcotic, a piece of glass, unwittingly broken, drops to the floor. The Clutching Hand then produces the vial of Scapolorium, and injects the drug. Elaine is made conscious by a cold wet towel applied to her forehead, and gazes dazedly into the muzzle of a revolver. In abject terror of her sinister visitor, and obeying his commands, she rises and precedes him from the room.

Next morning, Craig Kennedy, in his laboratory, is amazed at the contents of a letter from Elaine, dispensing with his services as inefficient. He calls Elaine on the 'phone, and is dumfounded to learn that she has no recollection of having communicated with him. He goes to her home, where he is met by Elaine, her Aunt Susan and Perry Bennett. Elaine acknowledges the letter as in her writing, but is unable to account for it. Craig Kennedy's mind, keenly analytical, begins to see light. At his suggestion they all repair to Elaine's bedroom, where his searching eye discovers the fragment of glass dropped by The Clutching Hand. He also notes other evidences of the nocturnal visit, and, putting his data together, astounds the company by informing Elaine that she was the actual author of the letter while under the influence of the "Twilight Sleep." Through his scientific medical knowledge they are astounded to hear that the only way in which Elaine can possibly recall the events of the previous night is to again go into the "Twilight Sleep." Her confidence in Kennedy leads her to agree, and she is again injected with Scapolorium. While under its influence, she repeats in detail the incidents of the night before. Everything is made clear. While Elaine comes slowly out of the "Twilight Sleep" a note is seen to be pushed through the door-jamb. The party rush out, in order to apprehend the malicious agent, but are unsuccessful. Through mistaken identity, Bennett and Jameson struggle fiercely on each side of the portiers. As they discover their error, the cunning face of a servant peers from behind a divan. The mysterious note is a final warning to Craig Kennedy to cease his operations against The Clutching Hand, under a penalty of death. He is coolly indifferent to the threat, and pockets the note under the bewildered and admiring gaze of Elaine.

SHOT IN THE FRACAS—(Jan.)—Sol Grabupksi, the junkman, stops at Murphy's to "pick up" business. Noticing the adjacent house is to let, Sol gives it the "once over," and, as it looks good to him, he decides to become Murphy's neighbor. Sol and Becky, his bigger half, move in in installments. Rastus, black as the ace of spades, seeing an open window and being well "tanked up," enters, and at once throws himself on the bed. However he does not notice that Sol and his wife have preceded him, and immediately the night air is rent with cries of Police!—Murder!—etc. Poor Rastus takes to his heels, and makes an uncertain, though successful, retreat. Peace reigns supreme. The next day Sol, in need of a clothes line, decides to confiscate Murphy's. But the move is seen by Murphy and the battle is on. The fight that follows makes the European war look like a picnic. The forces of Sol and Murphy, augmented by the police, fight to a finish. Bullets fly as thick as flees, but no casualties result.

THE OLD THESPIAN (Pathe—Three Parts—Jan.)—Dr. Delmont, with his fiancee, Clary Dorney, and her mother, attend a performance in which the great Talby is starring. Clary is profoundly impressed by the famous actor and begs her fiance to allow her to see him at the door. She sends Talby a note telling him of her admiration and expressing a wish to meet him. He informs her that he will be strolling in the park the following day, and suggests that they should each wear a white rose. The next day, with bounding heart, Clary hastens to the rendezvous. Her idol has not yet appeared, but she notices an elderly man, who, strange to note, is wearing a white rose. He approaches her, and asks whether she is not the author of the note. She confesses that she is, and is greatly surprised to learn that the white-haired man is the great actor, who, on the stage, was made up to represent a young man. Her dream is shattered.

Years pass. Clary, married to Dr. Delmont, lives happily with him and their daughter. Alas for Talby! Time has dealt unkindly with him. Adversity has laid its heavy hand upon him, and he is now compelled to act the clown with a small circus. Clary and her family attend the performance. Talby recognizes Clary and is crestfallen lest she should in turn recognize him in his fool's attire. After the performance he is ordered to climb a high pole to loosen the guy ropes. He loses his balance and plunges to the ground. Dr. Delmont is called to attend him. While examining the unlucky clown, he finds his wife's picture given to Talby years before. He informs Clary, who hastens to the clown's bedside. Realizing the desperate plight of the fallen idol, Clary and her husband induce him to accompany them and make his home with them. And so we see Talby in a new role; the idol of Clary's baby girl.

NICK WINTER AND THE MYSTERIOUS BANK (Pathe—Three Parts—Jan.)—Richard Maury, a wealthy depositor of the World International Bank, calls in Nick Winter, a celebrated detective, to investigate rumors concerning the stability of the bank. Accordingly, Nick Winter calls at the bank in the guise of a prospective depositor and interviews the manager, Mr. Merserau. After a lengthy interview, he returns to his home, where he receives a telegram from the man whom he had just left, advising him that his identity is known. He also tells Nick that he has absconded with the bank's funds and defies pursuit. Nick hastens to inform Maury, who, rendered desperate by his loss, tries to kill himself. Nick prevents him and rushes to the bank. The bird has flown, however. No clue is left for Nick to work on. While examining the contents of a waste-paper backet, he sees a mysterious female dart out of the room, but is unable to capture her. When he returns, the basket has disappeared. Seeing a ray of light under a desk, he raises the lid, and discovers a secret passage underneath. Following this, he discovers the thieving manager packing a grip. Nick rushes to him, but plunges through a trap door into a dungeon below. Finding himself a prisoner, Nick takes a dynamite fuse which he had secreted about him and blows off the lock. Rushing to the floor above, he makes a vain search for the manager. He finds nothing but a warning note advising him to give up the case. Mrs. Maury calls at the bank and gives Nick a note from her husband asking him to hasten to Maury. Nick is about to obey, when he stumbles upon another secret passage. Seeing Merserau asleep in a chair, Nick tries to capture him, but discovers that it is only a dummy dressed to represent the manager. Before he has time to recover from his surprise, he is set upon by the real Merserau and drugged. Recovering from the drug, he learns from a note which he finds that Maury himself is the real culprit and has been disguised to represent Merserau.

Nick is angered by this new turn of affairs, and determines to run down the fleeing Maury at any cost. He chances to find a note from the railroad company which accompanied tickets for a distant city. Dashing from the bank, Nick meets an aviator and induces him to help in the chase. Getting into an aeroplane, they speed through the air, Nick meantime sending a wireless message to the chief of police from the flying machine, asking to be met by an automobile in order to meet the train on which the guilty Maury and his wife are riding. The change is made and the auto arrives in time. Maury is captured and taken to prison. He escapes, however, by a ruse.

Nick Winter picks up the trail, and follows Maury and his wife to their lair. Ascending to their rooms, he falls into a trap, and is again made prisoner. Bound hand and foot, he is placed in front of a clock which is set with an automatic revolver. The gun is set to shoot at twelve o'clock—fifteen minutes later. Left alone Nick tries to free himself. Cleverly removing his shoe and sock from one foot by the aid of the other, he grasps a nearby telephone with his toes, and telephones to the police for aid. The police respond to his call, and arrive to free Nick just in time to escape the bullet, which is fired on the minute of twelve. They then secrete themselves, and await the return of the two intended murderers. As Maury enters, he is set upon by the waiting police. His wife is also captured, and both are taken to jail, where every precaution is taken to prevent their escape. Nick has won again.

THE BIRTH OF PLANTS (Educational—Jan.—On the same reel.)—Truly marvelous is this pictorial unfolding of Nature's handiwork. The sprouting of the sweet pea, the germination of the bean, the development of the oak from the acorn, the development of the cherry blossom are all shown in a manner that will excite your wonderment and prove a source of interest to all who view these wonders of Nature.

ROMIET AND JULIO (Animated Comedy Cartoon).—A clever pictorial comedy is this cartoon, which graphically describes the tender love-tale of Julio, a masculine feline, and Romiet, the object of his affections. The howling of Julio is so realistically portrayed in this picture that you will imagine it is the product of the real article.

Julio, perched on top of a back-yard fence, sends his unmusical love song in the direction of the home of Romiet, his feline sweetheart. She, reposing cosily on the lap of her oldmaid mistress, sighs as the tender strains reach her ears. Her heart bounds as she recognizes Julio's sweet (?) song. Stealthily stealing to the window, she gazes down at him and signals that her only desire is to be perched by his side. But the oldmaid is wise to Romiet's wishes, and nips her romance in the bud by swooping down on her and removing all chances of her joining her adorer below. Julio realizes that he cannot reach his love, and decides to seek his dinner. Seeing a magpie enjoying a bone, he drives the bird away and captures the trophy. The magpie swears to be revenged. After his repast, Julio returns to Romiet's home, and sees a vender of toy balloons approaching with his wares. Julio confuses the poor peddler, who loses his grip on the top balloons. Catching the string which ties the balloons together, Julio is lifted into the air, and rapidly rises toward his waiting Romiet. But the vengeful magpie punctures the baloons with his sharp bill, and poor Julio is sent sprawling down to earth. Recovering himself, he flees from the pursuing peddler, who seems determined to take every one of Julio's nine lives.

MALAGA (Southern Spain—A Scenic on the same Reel).—An interesting scenic showing the wonderful views of this old city Various aspects of the sugar-cane industry, as well as those of the sardine fisheries, are also shown, making a picture of splendid educational value.

A SCRATCH OF THE PEN (Two Parts—Jan.)—Harvey Abbot, the nephew of Squire Thornton, is in the power of Jim Roycroft, a blackmailer. Harvey tells Jim that he will meet his demands as he expects to marry Eleanor, his uncle's ward. Eleanor, however, is in love with Harvey's cousin, Frank, and gives no encouragement to Harvey. Jim presses Harvey for money and renders him desperate. Abbot promises Jim money if he will meet him the next day. They meet as agreed, and Harvey makes a murderous attack on Jim, leaving him for dead. Jim is found by Frank, who is accused of the crime and sent to prison. Jim is made an imbecile by the attack. Harvey, in fear lest Jim's memory will return, decoys him to a high cliff and throws him off into a river below. Jim is rescued by Frank, who has escaped from prison. The shock restores his memory. He proves Frank's innocence and then hunts up his assailant. A terrific fight ensues, which only ends when both men lie stiff and stark on the bed of a nearby river. The scratch of the pen which placed Harvey in Jim's power marked the final episode in a misspent career. Frank receives his consolation and reward in the smiles of Eleanor, who always believed him innocent.

THE PRICE OF TYRANNY (Four Parts—Jan.)—Archibald J. Wright, the owner of the Burlingbrook Cottonmills, has an ungovernable temper. His son Edward, in defiance of his father's wishes, takes a day off from work to go hunting with his friends. After lunch a "friendly" game of cards is started, and Edward has to sign an I. O. U. for $10,000. He confesses his debt to his father, who works himself into a towering rage, and decides to send his son to a factory in India, where he will have to toil with the natives for a livelihood. For six months Edward labors wearily in the torrid Indian climate, and the only balm for his wounded spirit lies in the gentle glances of a young Hindoo maid. Their infatuation is noticed and word reaches his father of the intended marriage. He prohibits the union under penalty of disinheritance.

Harold, Wright's nephew, has craftily insinuated himself in his uncle's good graces and has succeeded Edward in the factory. Wright's spirit, softening with his advancing years, he yearns for his banished son and has his agent in India make inquiries for him. He learns that Edward and his wife had lived an ideal life the first four years of their marriage and had been blessed with a girl baby. Business reverses, however, had forced Edward to leave India, and he was last seen and heard of as an itinerant photographer in Greece. In reality Edward's troubles have come so heavily on him that he is finally overwhelmed and dies. His final message to his wife, enclosing a note to his father, tells her to go to Burlingbrook, and if his father seems softened to make her identity known; otherwise not. She starts with her child, but the road is trying, and after securing shelter in a wayside hovel her grief, together with the hopeless outlook for the future, cause her also to pine away.

Maud, left alone, is forced to sell her donkey to satisfy the debt she and her mother incurred. However, her youth and hope help her out, and she sets to work and earns her passage to the States. Arrived at Burlingbrook, she secures employment in Wright's cotton mills through a girl she meets. Her knowledge of Italian stands her in good stead when old Archibald Wright receives a foreign letter concerning his son and has no one to read it to him. His solicitude for his son, her father, touches her deeply, but she forbears to speak, because of the presence of the nephew, Harold, whom she suspects of duplicity. The letter contains the information that his son was last seen in Chiesa, Italy. Wright telegraphs to the Mayor of Chiesa, who responds that his son died there two months before. The shock of this news makes necessary an immediate operation on the old man's eyes, over which a cataract has been closing for some time past. The operation is successful. When his sight is restored he desires to see the child who was so attentive to him in his sorrow. When she is brought into his office she is sadly startled by a picture of her father on the wall. She cannot repress a gentle and pathetic caress to the portrait, and, on being questioned by the old man, declares her parentage. She also gives him the note sent him by his son, in which he is forgiven his past cruelties and entrusted with the care of his daughter-in-law and her child. The father is deeply affected by the disclosure, but is made doubly miserable at the news that the mother is also dead. He pays an awful price for his "rod of iron," but sees a chance for a sinner's repentance in the care of his new-found granddaughter.

SELIG STORIES.

lives. Doris accepts and finds true enjoyment there. The lesson of love is quickly learned and Doris rejects her wealthy friends for happiness in a real home.

THE SNAILBURG VOLUNTEERS (Jan. 15).—The village of Snailburg is far removed from the centers of civilization. The Bazoo prints news events of the world several weeks after they occurred, as there is no telegraph line to Snailburg, and the news travels by slow freight.

The threats of war against Mexico alarm the villagers who organize a volunteer force to repel possible invaders. They drill and manoeuver under the directions of earnest officers and the neighbors look upon their efforts with awe and admiration.

Two hoboes come to town and devise a plot for a swell "feed" at the expense of the villagers. One takes a part of a Mexican spy while the other assumes the role of an American soldier in pursuit of the said spy. The volunteers at drill are dispersed in a panic when the supposed Mexican spy makes his appearance. They scatter in all directions, while the hoboes feast upon huckleberry pie abandoned by one of the village housewives.

ROBERT THORN FORECLOSES (Jan. 16).—Violet Fitzhugh and her mother are distressed by the prospect of an immedate foreclosure of a mortgage on their home. The mortgage is held by a banking concern, which has just sent them a notice that unless the interest on the mortgage is paid at once, foreclosure proceedings will be instituted within ten days.

Violet tries to comfort her mother by saying she thinks she can secure an extension. She drives to the city, and visits the office of the banking concern where she confers with one of the officials who tells her that there is no recourse. The interest must be paid at once.

Doris finds the discarded uniform which her grandfather wore when he was killed in the Civil War. In one of the pockets is a letter, telling of a hidden treasure of money. She finds the treasure, but it is in Confederate bills. A thief attacks her and she is rescued by Robert Thorne, the president of the banking concern. Without knowing his identity, she tells him of her distress. It is a case of love at first sight, and the mortgage is hastily cancelled by Cupid.

What Gundlach Projection Lenses Have Done for the Owners of Motion Picture Theatres

Theatre owners learn what Gundlach Projection Lenses have done for your business. Before these lenses were placed on the market theatres were as a rule much smaller than they are today. The inferior lenses in use not only gave poor pictures but also limited the length of the throw and the size of the theatre.

In the first place, a sharp and brilliant picture can be seen and enjoyed at a greater distance while a flat, unsharp picture will become worse with an increase in size.

Gundlach Projection Lenses gave about four times more light than the ordinary lenses in use, and this additional luminosity permitted a substantial increase in the distance from the machine to the screen.

Later came the No. 2 Gundlach Projection Lenses (commonly called half size, although there is no reason for designating them in this way), and these lenses of large diameter in focal lengths ranging from 5¾ in. up made it possible to secure a picture of the same brilliancy at long distances. No arbitrary distance can be specified, but satisfactory results have been obtained up to about 200 feet. The Strand Theatre of New York and all other large and palatial theatres would not be in existence if these No. 2 Lenses did not provide the means to project a perfect picture through the long distances which separate the operating booths from the screens. We also venture to assert that the improvement in the picture and freedom from eye-strain incident to a sharp, clear, well illuminated picture has been a potent factor in attracting the public to motion picture theatres for entertainment and we are certain that the average theatre patron would immediately notice the difference and criticise the picture if a Gundlach Lens was removed from the machine and replaced by an ordinary projection lens.

Gundlach Projection Lenses offer you the very best that optical science can produce. No better lenses can be made. They make the picture as sharp and luminous as it is possible to get it so far as the lens is responsible for the result.

Gundlach Projection lenses are always sold subject to approval.

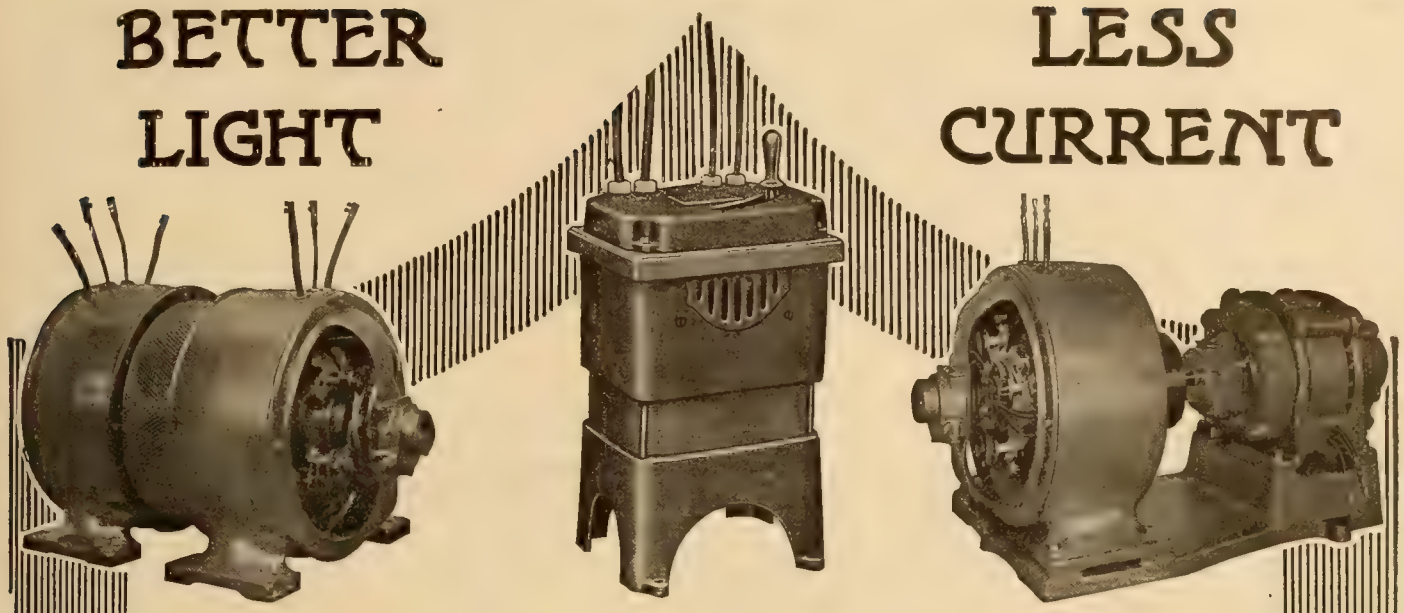
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

USE THE MOTIOGRAPH
WHY?

BECAUSE—It has been proved that it will stand the heavy grind of a continuous show and will project the most brilliant pictures. It will give better results with less current than any other machine and will last many years longer. We DO NOT use die cast or soft white metal parts, but only the genuine hardened steel parts to last indefinitely.

If you want 100% value for your money, there is only one safe bet—the MOTIOGRAPH

HAVE YOU THE COURAGE TO LET YOUR PATRONS DECIDE?

Recently, because of a wreck on the railroad, a Day and Night Screen agent was delayed three hours in reaching a town, where he had an appointment to make a demonstration. When he reached the theatre, the show was under way. The manager wanted him to wait over until after the night show. The agent was due in another town that night, and suggested that he make the demonstration then and there. He said to the manager, "Let your patrons decide it." The manager agreed. The demonstration was made. The patrons did decide it, and the agent left the town with two orders in his pocket.

Is there the same good faith between you and your patrons? Take them into your confidence. We'll do our part. Let them decide.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

PERFECT PROJECTION FOR YOU

No matter from what angle viewed, or how close you may get to the screen, with a Mirroroide screen, your pictures will be perfectly clear, bright and absolutely without haze or out of focus effect.

Perhaps you are blaming your machine or operator, when in reality the fault lies with your screen. Very often the exhibitor pays little or no attention to the importance of the screen in obtaining perfect projection, consequently you find, not only a dissatisfied exhibitor, but what is more important, a dissatisfied audience. You cannot afford to neglect this matter, as it means dollars to you, not only now, but in the future.

Send for large free samples. Test, compare with any other screen made regardless of the make, and let your eyes convince you that Mirroroide is THE ONE perfect screen.

Remember, Mirroroide is guaranteed for 5 years against cracking, peeling or turning black, and this guarantee is backed by a reputable business firm, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.

We could not make you a fairer offer in appealing to your common sense and judgment, and while it may mean business for us, yet more important it means success for you.

The Year of Realization

¶ On the threshold of a new year, at the inception of a calendar period that will in all certainty constitute the greatest epoch of the motion picture's advancement, the FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM COMPANY extends to the trade at large, to exhibitors, exchanges and manufacturers, its most earnest well wishes!

¶ In retrospective review, 1914 looms large as a year of tremendous accomplishment in the film industry, of unusual achievements and unsurpassed progress. 1914 saw the creation of such film triumphs as "Tess of the Storm Country," "Marta of the Lowlands," "Such a Little Queen" and "The Sign of the Cross." 1914 saw the conception and materialization of the most impressive photo-dramatic classic ever produced in all the years of the motion picture's evolution—Hall Caine's "THE ETERNAL CITY," which the trade press has proclaimed to be the film's greatest conquest! But 1914 was essentially a year of promise—1915 will be the year of glorious realization!

¶ To all whose support has made possible the unprecedented expansion of the FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM COMPANY'S policy, we can best express our thanks with the determined promise to excel and surpass, during the year before us, all our previous efforts and accomplishments,

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic Releases)

HIS LESSON (1 Reel Majestic). Released date Tuesday, Jan. 5.—An interesting story of a ward politician who for a time forgets his sweetheart of the tenements, but at last learns that she alone is faithful.

BRANCH 37 (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Friday, Jan. 8.—A young girl in a branch laundry is attacked by a robber and finds her rescuer and future husband in the person of the mounted policeman of the neighborhood. Not as well produced as it might have been.

THREE BROTHERS (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 10.—A story of Canada in which the love of three brothers for one girl results in the defeat of treachery and the victory of innocence and virtue. A different sort of story, well acted and photographed.

LOVE AND BUSINESS (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 10.—A farce melodrama based on complications arising from the wrong lady receiving the note offering $2,000 to reimburse her for her wounded feelings. Fay Tincher is featured.

PROBATION (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, Jan. 12.—A drama showing how a stern judge became a convert to the policy of probation in the treatment of criminals. Not as well acted or produced as we would have liked for a Majestic.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Jan. 17.—A powerful picture story along an original line excellently put on, featuring Mary Alden, Jack Conway and Spottiswoode Aitken. The degenerate aunt of a little boy teaches him to become a criminal and sees him facing the electric chair. In a vision she sees "what might have been," and is led to confess.

A FLYER IN SPRING WATER (1 Reel Komic). This is No. 15 of the "Bill" series and one of the best, featuring Fay Tincher.

A story of unusual power, of the most potential feminine figure in the chaotic, destiny-stricken reign of Louis XV. From her humble beginning as a milliner's apprentice to her death beneath the guillotine of the French Revolution 18 years later, the adventurous romance moves with speed and ever-increasing interest.

The settings are exquisite! Europe could provide no finer fabrics than those used in costuming the principal characters of the drama.

CONTINUES ITS ASTOUNDING SUCCESS IN THEATRES AS WIDELY SEPARATED AS THE OCEANS!

ALL CLASSES OF SOCIETY FIND A THRILL IN "CAESAR"—THE INTELLECTUAL AND THE UNEDUCATED UNITE IN THEIR PATRONAGE OF CHRISTENDOM'S GREATEST MOTION PICTURE SPECTACLE!

Here's a Case in Point:

Professor William Dallam Armes of the University of California showed "CAESAR" to members of the American Historical Association, High School Teachers, Artists and Musicians.

On December 28th the New Law Theatre in the heart of New York's East-side Ghetto District, played "CAESAR" to 7000 paid admissions, breaking all records in the history of that popular house.

Convincing proof, surely, of the tremendous human interest appeal of "Julius Caesar!"

"It proved the best film attraction that ever played Canton, Ohio," says V. L. Schram, Manager of the Grand Opera House, after a three-day run with "CAESAR." Many of our leading citizens witnessed this attraction two and three times in as many days!"

Eventually you will play "Caesar." Why not get in touch today—now—with the Kleine representative nearest you and make a date?

Fire insurance companies have begun their test suit in the federal court at Madison, Wis., for a legal decision as to their right to collect the federal stamp tax from the policyholders. Insurance Commissioner Ekern of Wisconsin had held that the companies could not collect the tax from the insured and threatened to revoke the licenses of any that attempted it. An injunction is asked restraining him from revoking their licenses, in order to get the issue before the court in the meantime the companies are paying the tax. EDISON FILMS AND EDISON SERVICE BETTER THAN EVER

A New Edison Idea To Fill Your House To Overflowing

We have now arranged so you can announce with big returns, that on certain days of the week your patrons may see their favorite Edison players in the best plays. Here, for instance, is a sample of the plan under which we are now working:—

EVERY TUESDAY

The captivating

Mabel Trunnelle

as the bewitching "Gypsy Madcap" with her beloved monkey and violin in "Olive's Opportunities" by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow.

Mabel Trunnelle, deeply entrenched in the affections of photoplay patrons for her sweet and sympathetic interpretations of many characters, finds in this entirely new role ample opportunity for her remarkable expressive power and beauty.

Each week's story, of single reel length, offers new adventures and new phases of Miss Trunnelle's dramatic power.

SECOND SATURDAY

of every month.

Gertrude McCoy

The popular and finished actress, in one of her greatest characters, "The Girl Who Earns Her Own Living," by the highly successful playwright, Mark Swan.

Under the title of "The Girl Who Earns Her Own Living" there will be afforded splendid opportunities for Gertrude McCoy to show her wonderful versatility in powerfully portraying twelve different and distinct girls.

This in not a series or serial, as each story ends with that evening and is satisfying to a degree.

THIRD SATURDAY

of every month.

Robert Conness

The accomplished

as the great, unbaffled detective, Felix Boyd, made famous in the gripping "Below the Deadline" detective stories by the noted Scott Campbell.

Robert Conness brings to the portrayal of this new character the art of the finished actor, and presents it with a skill that makes you forget the actor and see but the great detective.

There will be six to ten stories, each a single reel.

LAST FRIDAY

of every month.

Marc Macdermott

and

Miriam Nesbitt

portraying episodes in the life of "Young Lord Stranleigh," by the distinguished author, Robert Barr—the great Saturday Evening Post success.

The appearance of these two eminent artists, is in itself enough to stamp the success of this series as certain. But added to this is the vast popularity of a story. The story is already widely heralded and advertised. In four two-reel subjects.

ON MONDAYS—a single reel COMEDY; ON TUESDAYS, a single reel DRAMA; ON WEDNESDAYS, a split-reel COMEDY; ON FRIDAYS, a TWO REEL MULTIPLE invariably; occasionally, a THREE REEL MULTIPLE; ON SATURDAYS, another single reel DRAMA.

AN IDEAL EDISON POLICY FURNISHES IDEAL EDISON FILMS

Our settled policy is to make every Edison film crisp with action, meaty in interest and fairly sparkling in plot and intensity. Action, action, and still more action may be confidently expected in Edison films. We have cut and cut till what remains is the boiled down essence of the play. You will not be asked to buy mere footage, padded out to make a dragging play. That's not Edison policy. What we aim to do is to give the most profitable program and that, to our thinking, is one that is condensed, full of interest and variety. If you want to swell box-office receipts, rely on Edison Reels for bright, snappy action and sustained interest.

Edison Feature Films, entitled "Fantasma," a five-part film and "My Friend from India," a really good three-part comedy are attracting most favorable notice everywhere. In "Fantasma" is revealed a marvelous fairyland more beautiful even than the original celebrated play of Hanlon Bros. In "My Friend from India," Walter E. Perkins admirably fills the same role as he did in the original play—that of Agustus Keen Sham. Both films obtainable through the special feature film service of the General Film Co. Now Ready.

Facts and Comments

THE conquest of Broadway by the motion pictures is well-nigh complete. One of the latest Broadway theaters to yield to the motion picture is an old showhouse with an interesting and creditable record. It is a matter of sincere regret with all friends of the motion picture that this semi-classic temple of art has entered the field in a rather inauspicious, not to say deplorable, manner. It has chosen a very poor subject, but that is after all a matter of taste. It is not necessary to prophesy and criticise; the public will attend to that. We cannot help, however, protesting against the manner in which the exterior of the old house has been "decorated." There are spots on the lowery Bowery which are less objectionable on the score of "paper." Broadway ought to set a better example. The day of the lurid poster is drawing to a close even on the lower East Side, and we cannot understand to what portion of the public such leprous-looking daubs are expected to appeal on Broadway.

THERE are seventy million people living in our sister republics to the south of us. From all we can learn the people in these countries are as eager for good motion pictures as we are. Where do the theaters get their supply of films? There are no producers in South America that we ever heard of; the films are all imported. Big lots of junk drift to South America from England and other European countries. Probably there is a market for these superannuated films in some parts of South America, but we cannot believe that the hundreds of good houses in such cities as Buenos Ayres, Valparaiso and Rio de Janeiro draw their supply from the junkpile. All reasoning and all indications point to the probability that South America is practically a virgin field for good America films. It would seem to be well worth while to investigate conditions down there. The producers above all should lose no time in realizing the possibilities which this new market seems to offer.

WE call attention to an article in another part of The Moving Picture World which deals with the ruling of the Treasury Department concerning the standing of the motion picture theater under the War Tax Act. The Treasury Department expressly rules that the motion picture house must be classed as a theater and must pay the graduated tax for theaters imposed by the War Tax Act.

Exhibitors who delay or neglect the payment of this tax are subject to fines and penalties.

AN intelligent and progressive exhibitor running a theater in a medium-sized town of Pennsylvania writes to The Moving Picture World to take exception to the statement made by some of his colleagues to the effect that the raising of prices is "up to the manufacturer." He recites his own experience, telling how in the face of senseless opposition which descended to 2½-cent matinees he raised his price of admission to ten cents, but only after he has secured the best pictures obtainable. We always like to hear from exhibitors who cultivate the art of thinking, so we do not hesitate to quote the last words of the letter: "Some fellows begin to utter cries of distress when they get to a point where it takes a little gray matter and where so many more eight sheets will not get the money."

* * *

PAPER today is no longer the magic aid which it was or which the exhibitor thought it was three and four years ago. Ingenuity and originality are needed far more than "paper."

* * *

ONE of the belligerent powers in Europe has enlisted the motion picture in a unique and highly successful manner. It is claimed that a high speed kinematograph camera has been invented by means of which the camera man in a flying aeroplane going at the speed of sixty miles an hour is able to take views of the country which he covers. There have been allusions to this new method of reconnoitering in the various war reports. Here is one: "Photographs taken by our airmen show that the enemy were using the place as a shelter for their artillery." The camera is fixed to the flying machine so that the lens is constantly directed toward the ground. A small auxiliary propeller regulates the operation of the shutter in accordance with the speed of the aerial craft. Each time that the shutter is opened the position of the needle of the compass and the height as indicated by the aneroid barometer are impressed on the edge of the film.

The Director's Responsibility

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has always been opposed to legalized censorship. In the very dawn of the industry we have pleaded for the enfranchisement of the picture, asking that it be put on the same legal plane with the newspaper. We want to see the film as free from previous legal restraint as the press. The press enjoys no absolute freedom. It is responsible for an abuse of its constitutional privilege, and its editors may be fined and imprisoned for letting liberty degenerate into license. We earnestly hope that this will some day be the status of the motion picture: Liberty tempered by responsibility.

Until that time comes we must enlist public opinion as the best, the only and the final judge of motion pictures.

Nothing will help us more to get the support and friendship of the public than a little self-introspection. Let us try to see ourselves as others see us. Let us throw an occasional searchlight on the morale of the picture. We have before us a most interesting report of the Ohio Board of Censors. Because we know the questionable origin of the law creating that board and because we are opposed to censorship ex-officio, does not blind us to the fact that we may learn something from a report issued by this board. The report we refer to consists of a list of eliminations ordered in certain films by the Ohio Board. It specifies the objectionable scenes in some detail. The report also deals with such films as were suppressed in their entirety. The contents of the suppressed "features" are briefly set forth in the report. The list of eliminations and suppressions only covers fifteen days of the censorial activity, a fact which lends added significance to the lesson taught by this evidence. About sixty eliminations are ordered and eight films are suppressed entirely.

After carefully examining the eliminations ordered, we are prepared to say that many of them are undoubtedly justified. We do not by any means say that the necessity of these eliminations is a vindication of official censorship. While they do not justify the imposition of a previous legal restraint, they afford ample proof of the fact that there are producers who have not the slightest notion of their responsibility to the public. It is quite true that these producers are hardly worthy of the name and are in every sense of the word the outlaws of the industry. Something must be done to curb them. They are in the broadest sense of the word public enemies.

We ask our readers to examine the "stories" of these suppressed films and then determine for themselves whether the law forbidding obscene and indecent and criminal films cannot be invoked for the suppression of these films, and what is equally important, for the punishment of the men who were connected with either the production or the distribution or the exhibition of these revolting films. Here is the synopsis of a "four reel feature":

> Dissolute son and his pal, "Hook," plan to get money from boy's mother. "Hook" robs money drawer, and in escaping throws pal from top of high board between buildings; finding him unconscious has him removed to cover up his crime. Helpless boy is hidden in cellar. One criminal gives dope to half conscious boy and plans to have the robbery of money charged against him. Entire picture one of crime.

Disgusting as this production is, there are two others which rival it. We cannot help putting both of them into the pillory:

> Crook and woman rob safe of jewels and money and show them close up to screen; subheads, "Naw, Flora's nothing to me," etc. "I have squealed on Jim." He betrays girl. Crook again robs, is caught and handcuffed after fierce struggle; on way to prison attempts to kill guard; jumps out of car window and escapes. He hears of former sweetheart, and, attempting to kill her, was himself killed by policeman. All crime.
> Gang forces policeman to take baby into cellar where dynamite is kept; takes baby from him and then forces him with pistols to get into box-couch with lighted bomb. Gang attacks officers with pistols and shoots continuously. Baby fastened around man's neck as he crosses on wire high in air.

Men who produce or distribute or exhibit such films are nothing short of criminal themselves. The common law as it now exists in most of the states protects the citizen against such hideous and corrupting spectacles. The men responsible for these films ought to be prosecuted as common nuisances. Here is an opportunity for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to render a service to the cause of the motion picture. Let the officials of the League make an example of the producer of one such film and they will be entitled to the gratitude of every branch of the industry.

The eliminations, or at least some of them, show a shocking disregard of the decencies of life on the part of certain film producers. Some, in fact, many of the eliminations are apparently unjustified. The trouble is that one bad scene counts far more for evil than a thousand good scenes count for good. Such is the judgment of the public. We do not believe in the indiscriminate elimination of any and every scene which testifies to the seamy side of life. Who, however, can approve of such scenes as these? A man lights a fire to make a horse run; a boy holds up an old woman at point of pistol and takes purse; a man bathing in the ocean bites a girl's leg; murder and robbery of an old miser; operations of counterfeiting gang, showing process of counterfeiting money in detail; scene showing a man putting poison in baby's medicine bottle, which is given to the baby by its mother, killing the child; man putting a chicken's head in glass of foaming liquid.

The general manager of one of the big organized groups of producers recently suggested to the National Board of Censors that they get in touch with the directors and stop objectionable scenes from going on the films in the first place. We think that this is a most excellent suggestion. Intelligent direction would never permit the taking of such scenes. Where intelligence in direction is lacking, the action of a competent sub-committee of the National Board might be the best remedy. Restrictive intervention in the studio is worth a year of censorship after the film has been put in circulation. On behalf of his company, the general manager who made this suggestion of self-imposed censorship offered the freedom of the studios to the sub-committee. We have no doubt that other companies will facilitate to the extent of their power any method which will obviate the knife of the official or unofficial censor. Perhaps all studios do not need such intervention; indeed, I believe that but few really do need such supervision. It seems wise and proper to make the experiment. The successful prevention of a dozen bad scenes in a week would amply justify the carrying out of our friend's well-meant suggestion.

Best Pictures

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT the scientific end of production should outreach the artistic is quite natural—it had a long start and had attained high quality before attention was generally drawn to the necessity of fine structure and treatment of screen stories. It has, in fact, attained such a degree of perfection through intelligent camera work and factory efficiency that critics have almost ceased to mention photography in summing up photodramatic values. When they do, they are suspected of cloaking errors of form and expression, and exhibitors who closely scan reviews are beginning to look beneath the cloak.

After it is taken for granted that a story will be properly visualized so far as the scientific departments are concerned, we find quite a disparity of opinion as to what constitutes a "good" picture. It is perhaps just as well that tastes and opinions vary on this subject and that the field is open for discussion, for the clash operates as a stimulus to get at the truth. Without doubting in the least the sincerity of views opposed to my own, and standing ready to adopt any proved improvement on them, I venture to offer what has resulted from my observation as a critic and experience as an author.

Let us start with interpretation. It is well known that interesting personality counts. Some notable examples of this are attracting attention at the present moment. The drawing power of an actor or an actress who has achieved signal success is not to be denied, but so far as complete satisfaction in the performance is concerned, I lay greater stress on the fitness of type—does the performer suit the role? I have seen delightful plays in whose cast there was not a single star of the first magnitude. It is desirable, of course, to get high talent for the leads, but a well-balanced cast, with each part filled to its limitations, has a charm of naturalness not to be denied. We may even forget in such cases that we are looking at a fictitious representation and enter deeply into the story if it has strength.

There are many, very many, good performers who are given characters to impersonate, who do their level best to no particular end, and remain in obscurity because no proper avenue for their talent has been open to them. This may be due to our present faulty system of production, but it quite as often results from lack of logical characterization. Take, for instance, the well-known situation of a foolish or vicious mother punished when her daughter follows in her footsteps. In nearly all such plays the husband and father is portrayed as an inanity. If the women are beyond compassion, and he does not count, the sympathetic line of interest is sadly lacking.

Instance also the lady scenario writer's hero, a polished gentleman, who lets the heroine do as she pleases, never interposing the masculine protective instinct, nor even common sense, to save her from folly, but alternately wounded and forgiving—a feminist ideal which every normal man feels like kicking. I am always sorry for an actor who is struggling to make a real human creature out of a manifest absurdity, and the reason few critics blame the interpreters of unsatisfactory plays is because there is obviously little to interpret. Starting from almost any point, we usually round up at that mainspring of error, the play itself.

Be not confused by the admitted purpose of screen stories to entertain—there is such a thing as irrational entertainment—stuff utterly lacking in vitality and that solidarity of thought which holds our attention. We, the audience, are the heirs of past ages, students of life as we find it and progenitors of what is to come. The terrible conflict now raging abroad distresses every big human heart because it menaces the ideals which are knit into our companionship as human beings. Whatever pertains to those ideals is vital. An author must surrender his very soul to understand his age and helping it if he would become its spokesman and interpreter. The best pictures are those symbolizing our progressive world spirit.

Moving pictures seem to be in a state of transition from the murder-and-mush of amateurs to stories which express some resultant of human experience worthy of attention. Every author who has made a study of audiences knows that they respond quickly to a presentation which makes a clear and direct appeal to intelligence. That intelligence may vary among individual units, but the concentration enforced by screen presentation puts the aggregate mind in a receptive condition, a state in which there is very little to distract attention or distort judgment, and commonsense about pictures is as universal as love of music—only those who lack it can tolerate discords.

Comedy, even of the farcial kind, is in large demand because of wearisome repetition in serious plays from which only authors of originality can deliver us and of discordance in others from which only authors capable of solving deep and ever-widening problems can give us freedom. Writers who have studied our social impotence, our political corruption, the widespread distrust of laws and conventional morality, and kindred problems can find themes enough. And when the soundest of such writers give these subjects of universal interest adequate treatment we may all enjoy really high-class screen productions, especially with full-blooded characters and not wooden marionettes in the cast.

How can an actor make himself known or a director do himself justice—how can a play achieve greatness—unless the conditions to achievement are in it from the beginning? Is it not on grandeur or beauty of conception in any work of art that its final success must depend? Whether it be a stage play or a novel, a painting or a piece of sculpture, skilled treatment counts heavily, but it is a spirit of creative imagination in the initial design that gives soul to the work and inspires constructive imagination used in treatment to supreme effort.

Applying that judgment which guides us in the ordinary affairs of life to the subject, it appears unreasonable to expect great creations from those who cannot create. The image-making power is common enough, but not that marvelous power of recombining the materials supplied by experience in such forms as to gratify the universal sense of beauty and at the same time satisfy the reason. Great powers of this kind are not limited in their application to gratification of esthetic senses, but are exercised in setting forth some fundamental truth yet to be demonstrated by science. They are so rare that only the possessor of them is qualified to attempt works of genius.

So I dare assert that we will only have really great photodramas when we have really great authors to write them, and men of constructive imagination, taste and discriminating judgment to treat them with "faculty and vision divine."

"For when a well-proportioned theme you choose Nor words, nor method shall their aid refuse."

Pathe Sails for Europe

But Not for Long—Gives a Little "Bon Voyage" Dinner to His Staff and Promises a Quick Return.

THERE was a delightful gathering of officers, directors and the heads of departments of Pathe Freres at the Hotel Brevoort, New York, on Sunday evening, January 3d. The affair was important because of the presence of Mr. Charles Pathe, head of the great motion picture concern, and the announcement made by him regarding the future of the company's affairs in America. The party was a lively one, and all were on the qui vive to know what the "Big Chief" had in mind to say to them.

The dinner itself was quite an elaborate affair and was served in the best style of that well-known hostelry. The party sat down about 9 o'clock and did not leave the table till nearly midnight. Many little impromptu speeches were made. A toast was proposed to L. P. Bonvillain a former executive of Pathe Freres, now in the trenches somewhere in France; also, one in touching tribute to the late Arthur Roussel. The event of the evening was the address of Mr. Pathe, which was in the nature of an announcement of important changes in the management of the Pathe interests here. Mr. Pathe spoke in French, and the translation of his remarks follows:

"I regret very much to be compelled to leave you for a few weeks after having collaborated with you for two months and a half, but I console myself, as I feel confident that the rudder will be directed all right and that you will be watchful and give your best attention to the instructions of the new management, represented here by Messrs. Malitz and Dupuis.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to advise you that the Eclectic concern is no longer and has been replaced by the Pathe Exchange, and that the Board of Directors of this new concern, as well as the one of the Pathe Freres, has appointed Mr. Malitz vice-president and assistant treasurer of both corporations, with Mr. Dupuis as assistant director. They rely on you as I rely on them. The success of our business will be your work. It is bound to come, and I can assure you that our efforts will be crowned with success.

"Whenever I had the opportunity, at least for those of you who are at Jersey City, I did not fail to point out to you in which way your efforts should be directed and the exact scope you should try to attain. Not knowing the English language, I could not do so with those of you who participate in the management of the Eclectic, but Mr. Malitz, to whom I communicated my ideas, will tell you for me. I can assure you that in following his instructions you will obtain very quickly the result we are all aiming at, namely, to obtain on the American market what we have obtained on the world market.

"In fact, it is a vital question that you, who are our immediate collaborators, be well aware that in the motion picture industry, which embraces the universe, the firm you are connected with is the first in the whole world and that it only depends upon you, owing to our particularly advantageous position, to occupy unquestionably the first place in America. The officers of Pathe rely upon you, and you can rely upon them that they will reward your efforts.

"I drink to the health of all of you, and to the prosperity of Pathe Freres, which will be yours at the same time."

From the applause that followed this announcement it is safe to conclude that appointments made by Mr. Pathe were acceptable to the staff at large.

Commenting upon the remarks of Mr. Pathe, Mr. Malitz spoke at some length as follows:

"Gentlemen: You will pardon me if I want to say a few words in reference to Mr. Pathe's speech. The main point in Mr. Pathe's words is the expression of confidence which he has in his collaborators and in the destinies of his great firm. Of course I am proud, and I think we are all proud, to be in some way or the other connected with a firm of such exceptional standing and to be among the selected ones to give their share of personal effort for its success.

"Only in an atmosphere of mutual and absolute confidence is it possible to obtain such irresistible enthusiasm which carries with it progress and success. Even people whose ambitions are small scoped need enthusiasm in order to attain anything, but we have no small fields in mind, in fact, our ambitions are extensive, I will say unlimited. And in this connection I wish to make a statement. I am glad to have found this suitable occasion and I cannot sufficiently emphasize the fact that I have the fullest and heartiest confidence in every one of you, gentlemen, that you will help Mr. Charles Pathe and myself to further beautify and build on the already magnificent structure—the firm of Pathe.

"When I entered the concern, most of you, gentlemen, were with Mr. Pathe. I am satisfied that if the selection of my own collaborators had fallen upon me, I certainly could not have made any better or more harmonious 'pick' and my only wish remains that you, gentlemen, might have as much confidence in me as I have already placed in all of you. With such mutual confidence and understanding we will be swept by an overflow of genuine enthusiasm, guided by such an able commander in chief as Mr. Charles Pathe, who in his sphere represents the highest type of men of which the world possesses few, a man who like Napoleon has conquered the world; but I feel certain that unlike Napoleon Mr. Pathe will not spend the last days of his life on the Island of St. Helena, because contrarily to Napoleon's task, Mr. Pathe's task is a peaceful one; his ideals are sublime; they cannot be trampled upon by any hostile crowd, because he aims at making the world better and to raise the standard of life by sound entertainment and education of the people.

"In conclusion, gentlemen, let me say that my wishes are not only for Mr. Pathe and his lady, whose gentleness certainly has not been without influence upon the destinies of the house of Pathe, and their little daughter, friends and employees, but also for every human being who through faithful, honest and peaceful work, strives to make himself and the world a little better every day, for, no doubt, some day human beings will understand that love and affection, peace and harmony, good faith and confidence only can govern the world, and when that day comes, we will enjoy the realization of paradise."

A little later Mr. Malitz took occasion to speak of the work of several individuals who would assist him in the management of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the Pathe studio and factory. In this connection he said: "I shall be in charge of both concerns, seconded by most able and competent men, such as Charles Dupuis, who is an authority in all technical matters and has made himself known as an inventor of moving picture machines and devices; Ramirez Torres, who has been with the firm of Pathe for over eight years, and has been appointed assistant managing director; Robert T. Furman, who has been in the film business for his own account and whom I have appointed director of exchanges; J. K. Burger, who has been with the Eclectic Film Company from the very beginning, and other valuable co-operators."

Present at the dinner were Charles Pathe, Paul Fuller and H. F. Kingsbury of the firm of Coudert Brothers, attorneys; I. W. Goodfield, W. S. VanDoren, Charles Dupuis, J. Wessel, Leopold Wharton, D. Angelis, R. T. Furman, C. Julian, E. Ferrand, C. A. Karpen, A. Avare, F. H. Knocke, Jules Burnstein, Felix Malitz, E. A. McManus, F. Wathne, Henry T. Vernot, Fred Beecroft, P. A. Parsons, J. W. Buck, Theodore Wharton, W. F. Hurst, Ramirez Torres, W. A. Johnston, J. K. Burger, G. Bardet, L. E. Franconi and J. L. Hoff.

Mr. Pathe sailed on Tuesday, January, 5, with Genoa, Italy, as his destination. He said that it was his intention to return in about five weeks.

Suit has been entered in the Supreme Court of New York County by the Life Photo Film Corporation against the Alco Film Corporation, for a permanent injunction, restraining the latter company from in any wise disposing of the eight copies of "Springtime" which were delivered by the Life Photo Company to the Alco Corporation before the contract was cancelled between these two companies.

A temporary injunction was granted by Judge Hendricks of the Supreme Court. The papers recited in detail the transactions had between the two companies, setting forth that the defendants committed a breach of contract, and although they have not as yet exhibited "Springtime," in order to avoid any possibility of their using any of the prints in their possession, action was commenced.

Judge Warren W. Foster and Jacob Newman are the attorneys for the Life Photo Film Corporation in this suit.

The papers were served upon Mr. Seely, vice-president of the Alco Film Corporation, in the presence of Mr. Goldburg, the secretary of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Mr. Goldburg states that instructions were given to the attorneys for the Life Photo Film Corporation to institute another action against the Alco Film Corporation to recover the sum of $20,000 damages for breach of contract.

The production of "Springtime" is now being negotiated for by three of the largest releasing concerns in the country, and it is intimated that a contract with one of them, being a lately formed company, with powerful theatrical interests, will be signed in a day or two.

"The Avalanche," just completed by the Life Photo Company, will be released January 11th.

Censorship Appeal in Supreme Court

Argument Heard at Washington by Attorneys for Mutual, Who Assail Ohio Law as Unconstitutional—"Exercise of Police Power," Says Attorney for Ohio.

THE appeal of the Mutual Film Company from the decision of the Federal Judges sustaining the constitutionality of the Ohio Censor Law was heard in the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington Wednesday, January 6. The appellant was represented by W. B. Sanders, of Cleveland, O., who had instituted the proceedings against the censors in the Ohio Federal Courts. The state of Ohio was represented by Attorney-General Robert Morgan.

Mr. Sanders contended that the Ohio Censorship Law violated the provisions and guarantees of the Federal Constitution in various ways. In the first place, it places an unlawful burden on interstate commerce; in the second place it interferes with the freedom of the press and of speech; in the third place it delegates the powers of the legislature to individual officers. Mr. Sanders referred to the opinion of the lower court, which held that censorship of motion pictures was nothing more than an exercise of the police power and that the regulation of theaters had from time immemorial been considered a proper function of the police powers of the state. Mr. Sanders said he had no intention of disputing this opinion, but he pointed out that much more than the regulation of theaters was involved in the censorship question. "The motion picture," he said, "served many other purposes besides furnishing amusement. It has become a means of social propaganda and has already rendered valuable service in promoting the cause of temperance. The educational uses of the motion picture are growing, hygiene, prophylaxis, indeed, every branch of sociology is enlisting the screen for the purpose of educating the masses of the people.

"The motion picture is rapidly winning its way into the schools and universities of the country. In many instances the motion picture has come to take the place of the newspaper. The dissemination of the world's news upon the screen is one of the most important functions of the motion picture. The motion picture, therefore, ought to enjoy the same freedom of expression which is accorded to the press. The press is not subject to previous restraint, i. e., restraint before the publication, though no one will deny that newspapers often carry very undesirable matter from a moral point of view."

The argument of the Attorney-General of Ohio was brief and formal. He denied that the motion picture can in any way be classed as a publication within the meaning of the Constitution. The showing or producing of films, Mr. Morgan claimed, was a business subject to police regulation and the state has the power if need be to suppress it entirely. The Ohio Censorship Law, he declared, had been enacted in the interest of public morals, especially for the protection of the morals of the young, and it was therefore no more than a constitutional exercise of the powers inherent in the state government of Ohio.

A decision in the case may not come for several months, as the Supreme Court calendar is clogged with important business.

MORE "PARLOR COMEDIES" ON BIG U PROGRAM.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is officially announcing that one of its departures for the year 1915 and the future is to be the use of an increased number of "parlor comedies" on its regular program. To provide this kind of photoplay entertainment it is making every effort to secure producers in the field who have been particularly successful in this line. The announcement has it that these producers are wanted "immediately" and attractiveness is given the proposition with the promise that the Universal company will provide every known facility to enable the new producers who join it to do the best work of their careers.

STRAND BREAKS ANOTHER RECORD.

Manager S. L. Rothapfel of the Strand Theater reports that for the week beginning December 27 more than one hundred thousand persons paid their way into the big Broadway house. Mr. Rothapfel says this is a record figure for the Strand; furthermore, he is strongly inclined to believe that it is a record never before attained by any theater.

NOW "PREMIER."

The St. Louis Motion Picture Co., located at Santa Paula, Cal., has discontinued its "Frontier" brand, and hereafter all its releases will be known as "Premier."

Universal Holds Annual Elections.

Complete Harmony Prevails at Meetings of Stockholders and Directors and Big Year Looked For.

THE annual stockholders' meeting of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was held on Thursday, December 31. These directors were elected: Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, P. A. Powers, J. A. McKinney and John B. Stanchfield. At a following meeting these officers were chosen: President, Carl Laemmle; vice-president, Robert H. Cochrane; treasurer, P. A. Powers; assistant secretary, George E. Kann; manager of the home office, Joe Brandt.

When President Laemmle was asked if he had anything to add to the formal announcement sent out by the company, he said: "Why, no, except that everything is lovely. Complete harmony prevailed in both meetings, all litigation which has been hampering the company's affairs was disposed of, and I have every reason to believe the present situation will be continued. The policy we have pursued in the past will be followed in the future. Mr. Powers is in full accord with this idea. He believes with us that if the Universal has made wonderful progress in the past in spite of—well, shall we say differences of opinion?—what may not be accomplished by the company with all the officers working together for the common good?"

Exhibitors and the War Tax.

An Official Ruling by the Treasury Department—Tax Must be Paid or Penalty Suffered.

The Moving Picture World recently addressed the Treasury Department at Washington to obtain an official ruling on the question of how the war tax affects exhibitors of motion picture theaters. It has been a matter of dispute among exhibitors whether they had to pay a tax under the clause referring to theaters or under the clause referring to general amusements and shows. The section referring to theaters imposes a graduated tax with a minimum of twenty-five dollars, while the section referring to general show and amusements imposed a uniform tax of ten dollars.

In answer to the inquiry of The Moving Picture World the Treasury Department refers to its ruling issued on November 3, when this same question was raised by the Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eleventh Ohio District. At that time the Treasury Department declared that after a careful consideration it had reached the conclusion that all motion picture houses must be classed as theaters and are subject to the graduated tax on theaters. It is also pointed out that neglect or delay in the payment of the tax will mean penalties and may result in the closing of the theater.

Exhibitors who have received no tax blanks should lose no time in getting in communication with the office of the Internal Revenue Collector in their district. If they do not know who the collector is or where his office is located they may find out by inquiring at the nearest post office.

NEW MEN IN PICTURE PLAYHOUSE CO.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, New York office 503 World's Tower Bldg., 110 West 40th street, has increased its business and now leads all of the other branch offices of The Picture Playhouse. This is due to the good work of the quartet that comprise the staff:

Victor L. Pisani, manager of the New York office, formerly sales manager for the Pasquali Film Co.

Murray F. Beier, the well-known feature man, formerly manager of the World Film Corp., and also at the head of the Emby Feature Film Co., and with Pathe Freres and Herbert Blache.

John McAleer, ex-president of the Brooklyn exhibitors and formerly manager of the Clarendon Amusement Co.

D. F. O'Donnell, formerly with Pathe Freres and Eclectic Film Co.

The quartet wish their many friends among the trade a happy and prosperous new year.

HENDERSON TO PRODUCE "THE MESSAGE."

As soon as Director Lucius Henderson, of the Eastern Universal staff of directors, has completed the two-reel love drama, "Uncle John," he will begin work on "The Message," a one-reel convict story by Raymond K. Schrock, in which William Garwood and Violet Mercereau will play the leading roles.

LAST CHAPTER BREAKS RECORD.

The Last Chapter, the Richard Harding Davis story in which Carlyle Blackwell plays the leading part, broke all records at the Regent Theater, New York, on New Year's day.

Censor Board Meets Newspaper Men.

At an Informal Luncheon Ways and Means of Co-operation Are Discussed in a Spirit of Friendliness.

The National Board of Censorship through three of its most active members, Jacob William Binder, Dr. Orrin G. Cocks and William D. Maguire, on the afternoon of December .., entertained a number of representatives from the ranks of moving pictue journalism and the publicity men of most of the great film corporations at an informal luncheon in the Boulevard Restaurant, 41st street and Broadway. Among those present were Mr. William Wright, representing the Kalem Co.; Joseph Brandt, representing the Universal; Samuel Spedon, representing the Vitagraph Co.; J. S. Johnston, representing the Paramount Pictures Corporation; H. C. Levine, of the Box Office Attractions Co.; Carl H. Pierce, of the Bosworth Film Co.; B. Schulberg, of the Famous Players Co.; W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World; Mr. L. C. McChesney, Edison; H. W. Gittens, Biograph; P. A. Parsons, Pathe and Eclectic; Bert Ennis, Eclair; W. A. Johnson, Miss Mabel Condon, H. Goldberg, Casino Film Co. of Detroit; W. T. Gentz, Warners; E. J. McGovern, N. Y. Motion Picture Co.; Jacob Wilk, World Film; Whitman L. Mennett, Lasky, and Jay Cairns, Thanhouser.

The chief object of the meeting was to "get better acquainted," and to secure unanimity in the treatment of the censorship question both in the moving picture press as well as in the publicity offices of the various film corporations.

At the end of the luncheon, which was greatly appreciated, Mr. Jacob William Binder, financial agent of the National Board, expressed the thanks of the Board and assured the guests of the Board's anxiety to secure a perfect understanding on the treatment of the censorship question all around. He referred to instances where men prominent in the film world had delivered their opinions on censorship for the benefit of newspaper reporters. He pointed out that such views were not only frequently divergent but in palpable contrast to the policies of the Board, which had been adopted after full consultation with all the important factors in the industry. Mr. Binder said that publication of such views in various papers had a tendency to weaken the efficiency of the Board's work and he pointed out instances where opponents of the Board had quoted parts of these repetitious articles against the work and the policies of the Board. He emphasized the fact that legalized censorship was beyond all question the one great enemy which threatened the industry from the outside and that it is a matter of vital importance to present a solid and undivided front against all assaults and agitations of this dangerous enemy. He reviewed the work of the Board and its representatives in Ohio, declaring that the present censorship law in Ohio would never have been enacted if the government and the legislature had been properly advised and furnished with the facts in the case. He asked the representatives of the press and the publicity men to co-operate with the Board in its fight against legalized censorship and to impress the importance of unanimous and concerted action upon the exhibitors throughout the country. Mr. Binder's remarks were loudly applauded. He was followed by Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, who told of the work he had done in Ohio in conjunction with Mr. Binder, speaking before the civic educational and religious societies within the state and arousing public opinion to the democratic and un-American character of legalized censorship. Dr. Cocks said that he found a ready response. The people of Ohio, now that the matter had been thoroughly ventilated in the public prints of that state, felt the absurdity of entrusting to two men and one woman the task of regulating the morals of the population of the entire state. He expressed the opinion that with public opinion solidly arrayed against regulated censorship the Ohio law would soon be repealed. He pointed out that the power of the moving picture as a moral force would be recognized by educators and religious teachers everywhere. He mentioned the instance of a distinguished clergyman who told him that the influence of the motion picture today was greater than that of the school, the church and the library. If this new vital force in our civilization needed supervision or regulation it must be the supervision or regulation of public opinion as crystallized in highly representative bodies. The application of legal restraint, except in support of public opinion, was out of place.

Mr. Joseph Brandt, of the Universal Film Co. was called upon by Mr. Maguire to give his views on censorship, and in response Mr. Brandt made a short address which attracted considerable attention and which was admitted by all present to have direct practical value.

Mr. Brandt pointed out that the National Board would gain its object best by getting in direct touch with the various publicity men, who would be glad to work upon any practical clue furnished by the Board. Thus uniformity of treatment could be secured quickest and easiest. Mr. Brandt then suggested that the Board appoint a committee which had best get in direct touch with the various directors and stop all objectionable matter right at the fountainhead. This would obviate a lot of cutting. He thought the censoring and cutting of the finished film was not half as effective as the preventing of objectionable scenes. He expressed the idea that some better word than censoring might be subsituted in the official title of the Board. Censoring, he said, stirred up too much official attention. The authorities are too easily tempted to indulge in censoring of their own as long as they see other censors at work. He mentioned the example of the notorious Funkhouser, of Chicago, who took the position that as long as films needed censoring, he was going to attend to it himself. The Funkhouser type is a common one. Mr. Brandt objected to set rules and standards. He believed that each picture should be judged on its own individual merits. Mr. Pierce spoke of the unfairness and ineffectiveness of official censorship.

After W. Stephen Bush had heartily endorsed the stand of Joseph Brandt and had urged its immediate practical adoption, the hospitable conference adjourned sine die, but not without a general hope that similar meetings will be part of the Board's program for the New Year.

CHRISTMAS OF THE VITAGRAPHERS.

The Vitagraph Company, following its usual custom, on Christmas Eve, distributed among its employees, the usual check and turkeys, giving to each employe a turkey weighing not less than fifteen pounds. There were enough of the national birds to remember also those who had been of service in a subsidiary way to the firm. It was a remarkable sight to see the long line of four or five hundred persons standing in line and receiving their gifts.

Lillian Walker and Her Christmas Turkey.

Messrs. Smith and Blackton, the heads of the company, shook hands with everyone as they passed by and handed them a little envelope containing a token of their good wishes and at the same time received a hearty handshake and a cordial "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year."

The generosity of the Vitagraph Company was not in any way curtailed on account of the existing war in Europe.

The spirit of good cheer and the general good feeling displayed throughout the whole establishment, from the heads down to the office boy, will be a mutual incentive to everyone in the work and its results in the coming year.

Miss Pickford Goes to Los Angeles

Adolph Zukor Also Goes to Chicago, Where He Will Remain as Guest of Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players Film Company; Mary Pickford, that company's celebrated star; James Kirkwood, director of the Pickford productions, and Mrs. Pickford, "Little Mary's" mother, left New York Tuesday, with Chicago and Los Angeles as their destinations. Mr. Zukor will remain in Chicago for a few days as the guest of Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who control an important circuit of Western theaters, while Miss Pickford and Mr. Kirkwood will continue to the Los Angeles studio of the Famous Players, where they will remain for the winter and spring, and where Miss Pickford will be presented in a series of important feature productions.

This will be Mary Pickford's second annual visit to the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players, where it will be remembered she also spent last winter and spring, during which time were produced two of her greatest screen triumphs, "Hearts Adrift" and "Tess of the Storm Country." The Famous Players has selected a series of popular and appropriate plays for Miss Pickford during her Western sojourn, and some unparalleled Pickford successes may be expected.

The Screen Club sent a basketfull of flowers to Miss Pickford which arrived at the station just before the train pulled out. The little star was touched by the thoughtfulness, and sent her love to all the boys at the club. The Screeners also sent a wire of good wishes to James Kirkwood, their president, after the train left, so that it would reach him at Albany, to signify that their kind thoughts followed him.

It is reported that in Chicago Mr. Zukor and Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer are to discuss a novel and important film theatrical proposition. Adolph Linick, secretary and treasurer of his firm, recently came to New York as the guest of Mr. Zukor to attend the private exhibition of the Famous Players Film Company's impressive photo-spectacle of Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," at the Lyceum Theater, and after that notable performance, Mr. Linick termed the subject "the greatest motion picture I have ever seen!"

THE ECLAIR JUNIOR BASEBALL CLUB.

A sturdy and independent little organization which was formed the past summer is that of the Eclair junior baseball club, named after the well known film company. The club, which is composed of New York youngsters who are all ardent picture fans, decided to pay a signal honor to their favorite moving pictures and call themselves "The Eclair Juniors." Across the breasts of the uniforms of the boys they have had affixed the trade mark of Eclair, and at all games played last year the standard bearer was present, waving the players on to victory with a huge flag of the same design. Out of twenty-five games played the past season, the Eclair juniors won eighteen and tied two, a record of which the captain, Louis Vibert, is very proud. In writing the Eclair Company recently young Vibert said that under the name of the Eclair Athletic Club the winter headquarters of the organization were being rapidly formed at 44 West Ninety-sixth street, New York City. The film plant from which the youthful ball tossers have taken their name are making arrangements to fit out the club house and in other ways help these young friends of the pictures.

Impromptu Comedy at Vitagraph Theatre

J. Stuart Blackton and Sidney Drew Contestants for Oratorical Supremacy—Question Still Open.

THE production of "A Nocturne in A Flat" at the Vitagraph Theatre on the evening of Sunday, January 3, was responsible for a bit of comedy not on the printed program. At the conclusion of the one-act comedy-drama there were calls for the author. J. Stuart Blackton responded. His speech took the form of an explanation as to how, or rather why, he was impelled to write the play. He pointed out it was four weeks previously that Sidney Drew had been called before the curtain at the conclusion of his performance in "What the Moon Saw." Mr. Drew feelingly had referred to the work of his son, S. Rankin Drew, in writing the sketch.

"I was talking with Mr. Drew just afterward," went on Mr. Blackton, "and he inquired with some anxiety: 'How did it go? Did I do all right?' 'You mean in the play?' I replied. 'No, the speech,' he said. 'Well,' I remarked, 'your son wrote the play. You'd better let him write your speeches, too.' He came right back. 'I'll bet you can't do as good,' he said. There was nothing for me to do but lay a box of cigars on the situation. And so you see I had to write a play that I might have an opportunity of making a speech here tonight."

There was no mistaking the voice of Sidney Drew as it came deliberately, characteristically, from the back row: "Well, I get the cigars, don't I?"

In the burst of laughter that followed, Mr. Blackton was heard to say that he still hoped the decision might rest on him as the winner of the wager.

Great Crowds at Empire's Opening

Speeches Made by Prominent Men at Dedication of San Antonio's New Picture Theater.

THE Empire Theater, Houston and St. Mary's streets, San Antonio, Texas, was recently dedicated with speeches by men conspicuous in the affairs of that city. They all paid tribute to Messrs. Lytle, Apostolon & Papanikola, lessees of the house, and to William Brady, owner of the building, for giving the public such a splendid structure, which is a credit to San Antonio. There are 1,820 seats in the Empire, and by 7:30 o'clock on the opening night the "S. R. O." sign was hung up. The opening attraction was the big eight-part Universal feature, entitled "Neptune's Daughter," featuring Annette Kellermann. The Empire will be opened at 11 o'clock in the morning and shows will be given every two hours until the same hour at night. The musical numbers of the program are provided by an orchestrion. The stage was decorated to represent a beautiful garden scene, and in the center of it was placed an attractive fountain sending forth perfumed water. W. J. Lytle is manager of the house.

The first man to speak in praise of the owner of the structure and its lessees was County Judge James R. Davis. After welcoming the great crowd on behalf of the manager, Judge Davis remarked that the amusement place means much to the prosperity of the city as an expansion of commercial interests. The judge characterized the Empire as being an up-to-date theater, embodying all conveniences, and that it is deserving of good patronage. In concluding, he introduced Mayor Clinton G. Brown, of San Antonio, who exclaimed that the new photoplay house is a civic improvement of which the city ought to be proud, and hoped that it would always enjoy such crowds as on the opening night. In leaving the platform the mayor introduced J. H. Kirkpatrick, who declared that the men responsible for the Empire are public benefactors in more ways than one. "They are giving the public amusement that is not only entertaining but educational as well," he said, "and San Antonians ought to support the project."

THOUSANDS COMING TO UNIVERSAL CITY FOR OPENING.

Arrangements are being made to welcome over two hundred thousand people on March 15, when Universal City will be officially opened by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Those en route to the expositions at San Francisco and San Diego will be given stop-overs on the railroads at Los Angeles, to view the only city in the world, devoted exclusively to the manufacture of motion pictures. Already, hundreds of letters have been received by Mr. Isadore Bernstein, the Western general manager of the Universal company, from exhibitors and film fans, stating that they would be on hand for the grand opening.

Inter-Mountain Trade Conditions

Some Interesting Side Lights on the Scramble for Business in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana from the Exchange Point of View.

By George E. Carpenter.

ARE the film exchanges in the Inter-Mountain West territory making money? Are they getting by? Are they—? The answer on the part of Dame Rumor is one to the effect that they are not in the aggregate. There are one or two making a little, a couple more just holding their own and the balance, the majority, are steadily losing money week by week. Dame Rumor further hath it that it is the exchange handling the best productions that is scoring financially, while the demand for programs is growing beautifully less among the exhibitors as each month rolls around.

Naturallly, film men are reticent regarding conditions. It is hardly to be expected that they will throw open their books to a stranger. While all are optimists—they have to be in order to stay in the film business—there are some who will admit confidentially that times are not what they should be and cite the cases of mines closing down, train crews being laid off and other dire conditions attributed to the European war, as the cause.

With the object in view of getting to the meat of the story, the writer last week interviewed Mr. Louis Marcus, president and general manager of the Notable Feature Film of Salt Lake City and Denver, because in this territory if anyone wants information he generally goes to Mr. Marcus, who has been identified with the film game since the first exchange was opened in this territory and who calls every exhibitor in the five states by his first name.

Mr. Marcus' first statement was emphatic. He declared that anyone would be foolish to open offices in this territory with nothing better to offer prospective patrons than ordinary stuff.

He was asked whether it was true or not that the 25 or 30 offices in this territory were losing $8,000 a week, as rumor had it, and, if so, what was the remedy. While Mr. Marcus declined to be pinned down to exact figures, he affirmed that there were some exchanges that were losing over $400 each week.

"The eastern manufacturer, and there seem to be new ones cropping up every week," declared Mr. Marcus, "generally seems to think that all that is necessary to do is to ship his wares into this territory and the rentals will promptly commence to roll in. He does not realize that conditions are totally different here to what they are in the east.

"In the first place, there are about 2,000,000 people all told in the five inter-mountain states, or an average of about three people to the square mile, against, say, seventeen people to the square mile as obtains in the state of Pennsylvania alone. The same amount of money is expected to be put up for the films, and then, owing to the long distances to be covered in shipments, the film is working at its best not more than a third or one-half the time it does in the Keystone State. Of necessity, it takes longer to get your money back, and when operating on the percentage plan you realize what that means.

"Let me cite a few instances of what our film exchange is up against when it comes to the express companies who, I grant, always are ready and willing to do their best. We shipped a film from Livingston to Roundup, both in the same state of Montana and a distance apart of approximately 100 miles as the crow flies. This shipment took three days in and, had it been sent back, would have taken as many back again. Another case: from Harrison, Idaho, to Douglas, Wyo., in a straight line is a distance of about 600 miles. It took eight days to deliver the film. A tracer sent out in this case developed late trains and consequent layovers at junctions of 22 hours. In shipping film from Havre, Mont., to Salt Lake it takes three days to get the film, and then, if train connections are late, one can count on another 24 hours' delay. Under such conditions a man cannot book up close like he can in the east.

"Briefly, it takes in this territory more film, longer time and slower cash returns. Yet manufacturers expect us to handle this territory the same as if we were in Pennsylvania or Illinois. On a regular program, for instance, this territory is expected to average close upon one and one-half prints, if not more, for this one-forty-fifth of the population of the United States! Figure this out on the same basis throughout the United States and it would mean that the country, instead of taking 35 prints on a subject, would consume 67.

"Every time a new concern comes into this territory it means that somebody is losing money. Somebody suffers and he loses money, for the territory is amply covered and there is an over-production of film—but there is always room for the man with the best. The old days when anything was good enough for the west are over, for our audiences universally throughout the country are critics prompt to appreciate the best and always seeking those productions that combine good plots, photography, settings and first-class presentation by capable people."

The writer then asked Mr. Marcus whether or not he had a solution for this constant drain on the exchanges. Mr. Marcus settled back in his chair and smiled. "Yes, I have, but I don't anticipate that we could ever get together."

It was a Utopian elucidation; yet, on second thoughts, W. W. Hodkinson used to outline his plans for the Paramount organization when he was manager of the General Film Company's branch in Salt Lake a few years ago. The local film men used to call him a dreamer as they laughed indulgently and told him that it was impossible; today they affirm that, "Hod had the right dope only he was five years ahead of the times."

"The film exchanges in this territory represent a big investment," said Mr. Marcus; "take the General, for instance; their offices must represent at least $60,000. The 25 or 30 offices in this territory, as before stated, cater to about 2,000,000 people, and that total by a long shot does not represent the actual number of patrons. Say 750,000 people are situated so that they can visit the motion picture shows. If twenty of these offices keep a man busy on the road, that means $100,000 a year alone. Then each office has its manager, stenographers, shipping and inspection clerks, rent and salaries and the usual overhead expenses. Now, if the various companies could only get together and rent one floor in a big building, they could cut down this expense. Put one man in charge who would be acceptable to all, but let each company still retain its identity with the name on the glass door with a man to look after the business in each case and one stenographer for every three or four concerns, a head shipping clerk for the lot and a boy with a mimeograph for all comers and the overhead expense could be cut down materially."

"What about the traveling man?" was asked. "Would he solicit business for everybody?"

"That's not impossible," he declared; "you could get the right man provided you paid him the salary; and, contrary to the assertion of some exhibitors, there are honest men in the film business.

"Grade your productions. Ask for the film in big demand a certain price; others not so popular, lower prices."

"And who is going to decide on the merits of the productions?"

"Frank Bailey of Butte and I were discussing that very point only the other day. We were both agreed that sooner or later manufacturers would have to come to it if they desired to remain in business and keep their fingers on the public pulse. The only way is to score a film.

"Let the manufacturers get together and pay unbiased critics, each an expert in his line, to pass judgment on each new film. Take an expert in motion picture photography, for instance, one on plot and scenario, another on presentation, another on acting, another scenic effects, and so on down the line. Let them score each production and then strike an average on the whole. Then throw out anything that did not score 60 per cent. That is a solution on so-called high-class films. When the exchange and the public realized that 75 per cent. meant a good film and 80 per cent. a better, there would be less grief and less losses in the film business, and every manufacturer, producer, author, director, scenic artist, actor and super would be up on his toes to get in and score, and the result would be better pictures all along the line and the relegation of the inferior article to the rear.

"Under such conditions a traveling man could spread out his wares and play no favorites.

"Would it not be better for the manufacturer to realize a profit on his stuff, if it only were $10 a reel, and get it, than to expect $110 and have his profits on paper, as is the case in a number of instances today? As things are now, it resolves down to the survival of the fittest, and the big film companies cannot afford to lose money any more than the little fellows.

"Harking back to the original proposition, the public, the ultimate consumer, is the arbiter of the fortunes of the manufacturer and the exchange, and the public has been educated for better things and is getting more discriminating in its taste all the time.

"Prices in this territory are fair; the cheaper grades are forcing down rentals, and the cheaper class is indulging in some decided cutting and slashing of prices; but the high-class production has comparatively easy sailing."

"File No. 113"

Biograph's Two Part Adaptation from Emile Gaboriau's Novel Is a Strong Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE release of the Biograph Company for January 26 forges another link in the chain of two-part adaptations from fiction and stage classics which are proving so popular with picture followers. "File No. 113" is taken from the first of the novels of Emile Gaboriau, whose untimely death, in 1873, at the age of thirty-eight cut short the writing of a series of detective stories that in the half dozen years they had been before the public had brought international fame to their author. M. Lecoq, the noted predecessor of Sherlock Holmes, enters the story in its last quarter. Plainly his crime-detecting methods are of the simple, commonsense sort used by the policeman of the world of fact—and are none the less interesting by reason of it.

"File No. 113" is a well-told story and well staged and acted. Louise Vale has the role of Valentine, who as a young woman brings into the world a son, who immediately is taken from her by her mother, the Countess. Hers is a skillful portrayal of the woman who loses prospective husband and is robbed of her, or their, son, only to be confronted twenty or more years later with a reminder of her early misfortunes in the guise of the real son, but actually a swindler, trading on both her maternal love and her fear of discovery by her banker husband and young daughter.

Franklin Ritchie is Louis, who becomes master of the family estate following the death of his father and the disappearance of his brother, Valentine's lover, when in self-defense he has too vigorously taken his own part against his rival. It is Louis who aspires to rob Valentine through imposing on her one of his confederates when later in life, after dissipating his fortune, he has fallen into evil ways. William Jefferson is Raoul, the bogus son. Jack Drumier is Fauvel, the husband of Valentine. Hector V. Sarno is Lecoq. Alan Hale is Prosper, the clerk of Fauvel, wrongly accused of robbing his employer's vault. Gretchen Hartman is Madeleine, the daughter of Fauvel, and in love with Prosper.

There are dramatic situations. One that particularly stands out is where the smooth Louis brings Raoul to the home of Valentine and introduces him to the matron as the son she had not seen since the hour of his birth. Here is a real opportunity for strong acting—and it is accepted. A thrilling scene is the battle with pistols when the two thieves quarrel over the spoils. The lamp is extinguished; the flashes vividly show what is happening. The ending is a happy one. Lecoq, in the office of the police chief, tells Valentine Raoul is not her son; furthermore, Fauvel continues to believe Raoul was only a nephew—Valentine's great secret remains a secret.

It is interesting to note that the principals are introduced on the screen—not the whole cast at the beginning, but in the more logical form of announcing each one just prior to his entrance into the story.

M. Schwartz, of the Reliable Feature Film Company of Chicago, and his son, William M. Schwartz, are in New York for a few days. They announce they have taken the Vitagraph's production of "The Christian" for Wisconsin.

Charles Hill Mailes

THE subject of this sketch will be recognized by exhibitors and picture-goers as one of the best all-around actors on the screen today. Charles Hill Mailes for three years has been one of the foremost members of the Biograph stock company. In that time he has played many leading parts, divided among all classes of work. He has been as successful in comedy as in dramatic portrayal, although it is in the latter that he has been most frequently seen. Mr. Mailes through his desire to remain in the East has been impelled to resign from the engagement which he has held so long and which has been so pleasant. He is now enjoying a bit of a vacation at his home in Whitestone, Long Island.

Charles Hill Mailes.

Mr. Mailes has had wide experience on the stage. For two years he played in Irish character with Joe Murphy and previously he was in Shakespearean repertoire. He played Cash Hawkins in William Faversham's production of "The Squawman." He portrayed Spanish Ed in the New York run of "The Virginian." He was the Scotchman with Jamieson Lee Finney in "A Fool and His Money." He also played Gus for two seasons in the original "Clansman" company. His last appearance on the stage was in the part of the Murderer in "The Oath," in which he made a decided hit. As illustrating the versatility of Mr. Mailes it may be pointed out that he played with equal success such widely divergent characters as Cash Hawkins in "The Squawman" and Justice Prentice in "The Witching Hour." Another one of his successes was as Jeffries, Senior, in "The Third Degree."

Mr. Mailes has been seen much recently in the two-reel productions of the A. B. company. He played the lead in the recent release of "Cousin Pons," for which there is an unusual demand by exhibitors. He played Laroque in "The Romance of a Poor Young Man," the Man in "The New Magdalen," Dalton in "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," and the Count in "On the Heights."

TOTTEN SKILLFUL IN "AMATEUR PRODIGAL."

Joseph Byron Totten displays great skill in the way he portrays the leading role in "An Amateur Prodigal," an Essanay photoplay taken from the story of Alber Payson Terhune. He brings out the pathos which the part of John Andrews calls for in a way that touches the heart without going to the other extreme of making it too melodramatic, which a less skilled player might easily fall into.

LUBIN ENTERTAINS NEWSPAPERMEN.

The Critics Association of Philadelphia, composed of the musical and dramatic critics of the morning and afternoon newspapers, paid an official visit to the Lubin Manufacturing Company this week and spent an entire day inspecting the big establishment and watching the making of photo plays.

Mr. Siegmund Lubin took the newspapermen on a tour of the plant, and, incidentally, showed them a number of machines and devices that he has but recently perfected, and which will do a great deal toward improving motion pictures. The critics struck a day when many interesting scenes were being filmed in the studios, and they had an opportunity to, not only meet, but to watch Romaine Fielding, George Terwilliger, Joseph Kaufman, John Ince, Joe Smiley, Edgar Jones and Barry O'Neil direct their respective companies. Following a luncheon tendered the visitors by Mr. Lubin, the critics were shown some special reels.

The party included George Rogers, The Inquirer; J. Howard Bonte, The Morning Ledger; Harvy Maitlant Watts, The Morning Ledger; Henry Starr Richardson, The Evening Star; A. Duross Ferris, The Evening Telegraph, and Herman Dieck, The Record.

"His Lesson"

One-Reel Majestic of Realistic Treatment and Strong Purpose.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CAST

"Bat" Murray.....George Seigmann.
Mamie, his sweetheart.....Billie West
Jimmie, the dip.....Vester Perry.
Dorothy Vernon.....(Not given).

DURING two weeks of the holiday season there was an outpouring of small pictures of equally small merit, making the task of the reviewer no enviable one. From out of the mess of weaklings, imitations and mediocrities, not actually bad in one respect or another, "His Lesson" has survived so far as my judgment is concerned, though it is not a pretentious affair. Its merit lies in originality of theme, fine selection of types and adequate treatment. The much-abused critic would infinitely prefer to have a larger field of good performances to select from, but it is quite possible that the thousands of small releases turned out every year have absorbed studio talent, especially the write-a-scenario-on-my-cuff kind, to the extent that old plots are being repeated over and over again without the illuminating excuse of a new theme. The main object seems to be that of getting rid of a responsibility—most of the releases seem to be turned out under a mental and physical pressure that does not make for pictures that are either progressive or satisfying.

"His Lesson" is animated throughout by a theme that makes its presence felt, though it is not clearly defined until the conclusion. "Bat" Murray represents a type well known in city life. He is a forceful young tough with courage, tact and an inclination to be on the level, a disposition to rise above the crookedness that seems to characterize all his surroundings. His easy-going affections are enlisted by a frail and sweet little girl, just Mamie, of his own social order, and he makes short work of Jimmie the Dip when that individual attempts to assert his preference for Mamie. Bat also smashes Jimmie when the latter attempts to pick the pocket of Dorothy Vernon, a banker's daughter who has entered upon settlement work.

Bat's aspirations leap into flame under the influence of Miss Vernon. She stimulates him to better his condition, and he does so through natural channels. He becomes a popular candidate for the City Council and wins through the support of those who have known him in the underworld. Higher and higher he aspires until he runs for the legislature, always with an idea of winning the banker's daughter. His humble sweetheart is neglected and reverts to Jimmie the Dip for consolation in her hours of heartache. The young politician gives a ball in his ward and induces Miss Vernon to attend. She does so, though obviously out of place, and this experience reveals that Bat is not of her world, good fellow as he may be in his own sphere. He cannot rise to the generous clemency and kindly manners of her natural environment.

A fire breaks out at the ball and some thrilling rescues follow, Bat saving both Dorothy and his old sweetheart, but he is terribly burned and carried to the hospital. There it is humble Mamie who nurses him with infinite tenderness, while Dorothy sends him flowers and a little note expressing her deep gratitude. The note also mentions quite delicately her forthcoming marriage to a man in her own circle, and Bat senses that the woman for him is one who understands and deeply loves him, though she may be less of a credit to him in public. The types are beyond criticism, and the entire cast acts with a naturalness that is delightful in this day of antiquated artificiality.

Claire McDowell

WITH the record of having probably exceeded in the number of consecutive releases her fellow-members of the Biograph Company, Claire McDowell has retired from the organization with which for the past four years she has been connected. Miss McDowell has been induced to take this step through purely domestic reasons. She is most comfortably situated at her home in Beechhurst, Long Island, and prefers to work and live in the East.

Claire McDowell.

Miss McDowell has been one of the best known members of the famous company. She has done steady and consistent work, which has been chiefly with the dramatic division and in the single reel releases. She is especially strong in situations calling for ability in emotional portrayal. She has played so many parts in Biograph pictures it seems unnecessary to enumerate them; there are three, however, in which she will especially be remembered—"The Female of the Species," "Three Years" and "Her Hand." Miss McDowell comes from a family that has been directly connected with the stage for 150 years. Her father is Eugene A. McDowell, a Canadian actor-manager. Her mother was Fanny Reeves. Sims Reeves, renowned English tenor, is a granduncle. Miss McDowell's work on the stage began when as an infant she was carried on in arms as the infant in the famous old comedy-drama of "Caste." One of her engagements in legitimate productions was with William Faversham in "Herod." The well-known screen player is now resting at her Long Island home.

A SCENARIO DEPARTMENT IN MOTION.

The scenario editor of the Lubin Company in Philadelphia and his staff of writers did some exceedingly clever and instructive acting this week in Emmett Campbell Hall's new play, "Such Things Really Happen." George W. Terwilliger, who is directing the play, admits the acting and the writers themselves concede the rest. It was a great occasion in the Lubin studios for the scenario board rarely performs for the camera.

The new play called for several scenes in the scenario room of a big motion picture plant and Terwilliger, instead of using regular actors, went boldly into the Lubin scenario department and commandeered the staff. And nobly the staff responded, This, too, they admit.

Visitors to the department were somewhat startled to see Lawrence McCloskey, the scenario editor, and his writers busily at work making themselves as beautiful as nature and make-up preparations would permit, but it was as nothing to the sensation caused when the staff appeared in the studio and the hundreds of players there saw them.

"Now, men, be firm in the trenches and we'll show the world something new in the way of artistic acting," said McCloskey. Forthwith the writers sat themselves down about a long table and acted. The scenes called for them to look human, learned and dignified; to accept and reject manuscripts and occasionally throw out an unwelcome script writer. This they did, as they officially admit, exceedingly cleverly and instructively and the camera recorded it all.

In the acting party were McCloskey, Clay M. Greene, Norbert Lusk, Harry E. Chandlee, J. Allen Boone, Shannon Fife and A. Gil Spear.

"Restitution"

An Interesting Story in Two Parts by the American, Connectedly Told and Well Acted.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE American will release, on January 11, a two-reel subject, entitled "Restitution," that gives good promise of a popular run. The story has to do with woman's constancy and devotion as well as weakness, and with man's fickleness and villainy.

The parts have been well cast, with Miss Winifred Greenwood as the girl of the story, in the person of Helen Ward. Miss Greenwood is to be complimented for her easy, natural acting and for her very agreeable depiction of this character. And she is to be complimented, too, on her fine personal attractiveness in the role. Ed Coxen is the man in the case, Lester Harrison, and he invests the character with his wonted art, both in conception and delineation. George Scene from "Restitution" (American).

Field succeeds in making the villain, Earl Rand, a very despicable fellow, without redemption, and Miss Charlotte Burton impersonates the actress, Else Detrow, with a firm grasp of the requirements.

The production shows capable direction, and offers several fine exteriors and interiors. The photography is fully up to the quality of the American brand.

The scene opens in a theatre. In one of the boxes Lester Harrison, his fiancee Helen Ward and his false friend, Earl Rand, are seen applauding a dramatic climax, in which a fascinating actress (Else Detrow) figures prominently. After the show Harrison and Rand meet the actress, and the former is smitten by her charms. Rand is secretly pleased at this, for he also aspires to the hand of Helen Ward.

Through his too evident interest in the actress, Harrison loses favor with Helen, and their engagement is broken. Soon afterwards, through his association with Else Detrow, he becomes involved in a charge of murder and is sentenced to life imprisonment.

Earl Rand is responsible for the ruin of his rival, as he knew that the man who was killed had met his death at the hands of the actress, whom he had attempted to dishonor. Rand again seeks the hand of Helen Ward, but she dismisses him and announces her confidence in the innocence of her former lover.

Fate deals out to Else Detrow due punishment for her crime. Managers refuse to engage her and she is forced from the stage. In need, she becomes a menial in a hotel in a small western town. It chances that Lester Harrison, who has escaped from prison, seeks to begin life anew in the same town; also that Helen Ward becomes a teacher there. Helen is followed by Earl Rand, who again proposes, and is again refused.

At this juncture Rand recognizes Harrison in his disguise and has him re-arrested by the sheriff on the old charge. Else Detrow, however, comes to his rescue and confesses that she killed the man of whose murder Harrison had been found guilty. Rand is revealed in his true character, and Helen and Harrison live happily ever after.

GEORGE TERWILLIGER TAKES HOLIDAY.

George Terwilliger, Lubin producer, declared a few days' holiday at Christmas time. Of course, he came to New York, his old home, where he took in all the plays his time permitted.

Harry La Pearl

RECRUITS for the funmakers of the fast growing motion picture industry are drawn from all walks of life. For the greater part they have always come from the stage, and many noted actors and actresses have gone over to the silent drama.

Harry La Pearl.

Now the film folks are beginning to make inroads upon the circus entertainers, chiefly upon the clowns, as the silent comiques are well adapted to the screen, their humor being mainly expressed in pantomime.

Harry La Pearl is the first and greatest of the clowns to desert the sawdust arena for the screen. He has been placed under a long time contract to appear exclusively in MinA Films, a new brand of comic pictures which are now being shown in first-class theaters everywhere.

Harry La Pearl grew up among the white tops, starting with his father's show, the La Pearl Circus, which was famous a generation back. Harry made his first appearance as a bare back rider, and went through the various specialties of the business as an eccentric dancer, tumbler and aerial performer, and ending his circus career as the most famous clown in the world. For two years he was principal clown with the Ringling Bros.' Show, after which he was honored by being chosen as chief producing clown of the great Barnum & Bailey Circus—the highest position of its kind in clownland.

After two years with Barnum, La Pearl was featured at the Hippodrome, New York, and left there to join the MinA Films. A special cast of the best clowns chosen from several prominent American circuses has been engaged to support La Pearl in his film productions. Jimmie Hyland, the comic tumbler; Spooks Hansen, the globe trotting clown; George Zammett, of the Famous Dollar Troupe; Bob Jordan, Jimmie Corbley, Johnny Mayon, Charley Johnson, Nat Berk and George Williams are some of the pantomimists whose names will be readily recalled by all who are familiar with circus life.

In addition to the important positions he has held as funmaker, Harry La Pearl is prominent in the social life of the Amusement World. He is the founder of the Fraternal Order of Comiques, a world-wide social and beneficial organization, open only to silent clowns and pantomimists.

"I enjoy my work in motion pictures immensely," says La Pearl, "because I realize that I am playing to an infinitely greater number of spectators than I could ever reach during my long career at circuses and at the Hippodrome. I have learned that I will be seen all over America and in many foreign countries, too, especially in Central and South America and Australia, despite the war. I know about every circus clown in the business, all the old-timers, and it pleases me to know that all my old pals, wherever they may be, will see me on the screen."

Mr. La Pearl is soon to be seen on the screen in a fifteen-real serial burlesquing the present day sensational serials. This comic will be called "The Girl of His Dreams" and will be a regular MinA Film release on the General Film Program.

MR. LESSER COMING EAST.

Sol. L. Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., and the Alco Film Corporation of California, will soon be in New York with the view of purchasing some of the larger productions for his exchanges.

At the present time, Lesser is handling "Cabiria," "The Spoilers," and "The Christian," on the coast, and these productions are meeting with tremendous success. At the present time he has eight shows on the road.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

A Glimpse of Trade Conditions on the Pacific Coast.

DOUGLAS H. BERGH, well known throughout the country as George Kleine's traveling personal representative, arrived in the city for the holidays, after a trip that began in the early part of October last.

Dallas was first visited, and at that time the South was in poor condition, owing to the low price of cotton (six cents per pound). Mr. Bergh found that George Kleine subjects had a demand that was steadily increasing all over the South.

The long jump from Dallas to Seattle was made, and Mr. Bergh remained in the Queen City of the Northwest until the latter part of November. The trade conditions were fair on Puget Sound. The admission to all the leading moving picture theatres in Seattle, and also in Portland, Frisco and Los Angeles is ten cents. All over the Coast the George Kleine attractions are in high demand.

Mr. Bergh was impressed that western exhibitors display keener intelligence in business methods than their eastern brethren. They are more thorough, and look on their business as a calling and not as a makeshift, as many, in other sections of the country, are inclined to do. They take a pride in making their theaters substantial and attractive, and make a study of how to please their patrons in the best manner possible.

A fine type of the western exhibitor is seen in the person of Melville G. Winstock, part owner and manager of the New National theater in Portland, Ore., which seats 1,500 people. A description of this theater appeared in the Moving Picture World, in the issue of Jan. 9, and a careful reading of the article will well repay every up-to-date and aspiring exhibitor. That children's playground attached to the National is a happy idea and one that pays well. Pictures and refined musical numbers and accompaniment appeal to intelligent audiences.

Mr. Bergh says that San Francisco seemed to be much more prosperous than it was when he was there before—about six months ago. He found that the Exposition buildings were all finished, and he described them to me as being more beautiful, stately and impressive than the structures of the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. In the city by the Golden Gate and in Los Angeles, George Kleine's subjects are in high favor. In these cities, and in the other large Coast cities, "Julius Caesar" and "Officer 666" were booked heavily when Mr. Bergh visited them.

On the journey east, a stop-over was made at Denver. There the situation has not improved, so far as harmony among exhibitors is concerned. The admission to all picture theaters in Denver, with one single exception, is five cents.

After a short stay in Chicago, Mr. Bergh left to make a round of the large eastern cities.

Moving Pictures in Denver Schools.

The installation of a moving picture machine in the West Side Denver High School is an advance movement towards the use of moving pictures in education. The machine was used for the first time Thursday evening, Dec. 24, when a public entertainment was given, according to the Denver Post. The machine, however, is intended for a more serious purpose than amusement. It will be used in teaching literature and science and industrial and political history.

C. W. Bigelow, principal of the West Side high school, is quoted as having said: "In American history I am planning to show, for one thing, the landing of Columbus; and the pupils of this school will afterwards have something better by which to remember that important date than we were taught in childhood—

"'In fourteen hundred and ninety-two,
'Columbus sailed the ocean blue.'

"In literature the English classics will be shown in drama form, and, of course, they will be read as well. With the moving picture projecting machine to present the works of genius on a screen, they will be more thoroughly appreciated by young minds, and more interest will be directed to the subject matter of the great English authors.

"Then in science all sorts of graphic illustrations of the problems that come up can be shown on the screen; and in art the pupils can be taught appreciation by seeing beautiful things they may have no other opportunity to look at.

"Another important use of the moving pictures will be to get the parents more interested in the school. We have planned to give a few free evening entertainments to the parents and pupils. We like to have the parents get the habit of coming to us; then we get acquainted and all pull together. We plan to run a new reel whenever we have a prize debate, and also to give some entertainments where a small charge will be made to pay for the renting of reels and to help in buying new books for the library.

"We will rent all our reels, because a greater variety can be obtained in that way. Several companies have been formed for the purpose of getting out educational films, and we will patronize them for our class room reels."

The West Side high school, however, has not been the first in Denver to use moving pictures in educational work. The Clayton school has used moving pictures in its class work for two years with great success. During that time the children have studied the coffee industry, the logging and lumber business and many other industrial subjects, as shown in moving pictures, with the keenest interest.

When there is a will there is a way, and Denver educators have not been deterred from making a beginning because they have not had at hand everything they needed at the outset. In Chicago we have heard a great deal of talk and flurry, for some years past, about the use of moving pictures in our public schools, but little has been done. One thing is certain; if the demand for educational moving pictures is sufficient to pay for their production and a reasonable profit to the manufacturers, the pictures will be forthcoming.

The "Sue" Contest.

The first week of the casting of ballots in the Chicago Herald "Sue" contest has been a busy one. Many thousands of votes have been cast and the interest increases daily.

The photoplay editor of the Herald has announced that all ballots must be in the Herald office by 6 o'clock p. m., March 4, as no ballots received after that time will be counted or accepted. The ballots published in the daily Herald will count five votes each, while Sunday's coupons will count thirty each.

The standing of the girls in the "Sue" film honor contest was shown in the Herald Monday, Jan. 4, after one week's casting of ballots. The four highest of the forty contestants received, respectively, 5,560, 5,535, 4,675 and 2,290 votes. On Tuesday, Jan. 5, the ballots poured in more numerously than ever and the contest promises to grow more heated as time advances.

The "Sue" contest received advertising that was wholly unexpected Wednesday night, Dec. 30, when a burglar broke a jagged hole in the window of C. D. Peacock's jewelry store, State and Adams streets, and stole the $200 diamond ring exhibited there, which was intended as the award to "Sue." The ring is now being duplicated, so that "Sue" will lose nothing.

Chicago Film Brevities.

H. P. Wayman, general manager of the "Herald Movies," made a pleasant call at this office last week. Mr. Wayman is part owner of the Triangle Theater, 72d street and Wentworth avenue, this city, his partner being J. M. Grossmith. The Triangle theater is a modern structure, which seats 600 people and cost $50,000. It was opened about a year and a half ago and has been showing to fine business ever since. At present programs of six reels are being offered for 10 cents admission. These programs consist of the General Film Company's product and features of other companies. The musical accompaniment of pictures is made a feature at the Triangle. An orchestra of five pieces, under the leadership of Ernie Erdman, furnishes the music. Mr. Erdman has attained international reputation as being the composer of the music of "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," now being sung the world over. The Triangle is worthily known in Chicago for its excellent projection and the well balanced character of its carefully selected programs.

Tom Norman, widely known in film circles, called at the World office last week. Mr. Norman had charge of the booking department of the Laemmle Film Service, this city, for a number of years and before that held a similar position in one of the General Film Company's exchanges, this city. He is now manager of the Rex Theater, Racine, Wis. This house was formerly the Racine Opera House. It was remodeled and opened last May. It has a seating capacity of 1,260, with 700 on the main floor and the balance in the balcony. Universal and feature programs are offered at the Rex for an admission of five and 10 cents. Paramount features and also those of Alco, Alliance, Box Office Attractions, etc., are used. Mr. Norman stated that "The Sea Wolf" and the Mary Pickford pictures drew excellent business. Business conditions in Racine at the present time are very good, as manufacturing industries and other lines are brisk. Mr. Norman visits Chicago every Monday in order to supervise his bookings personally, and to give his patrons the best possible for their money.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co., arrived in time from Santa Barbara to spend the holidays with Mrs. Hutchinson in Chicago. When seen out at the plant the other day, Mr. Hutchinson expressed himself as being well pleased with the success of the American output for the year 1914, both from an artistic and a financial standpoint. He will return to the Coast about the last week in January and will be accompanied by Mrs. Hutchinson.

The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation moved its offices from the Consumers' Bldg. to 164 West Washington street, this city, on Jan. 1.

Martin Sachs, manager of the Biograph Theater, 2433 Lincoln avenue, and of the Vitagraph Theater, 3133 Lincoln avenue, this city, made a call last week. Mr. Sachs stated that business is excellent at both houses. An admission of 10 cents is charged for a program of six reels of General Film service, and for other programs of features of the same number of reels. Mr. Sachs reported capacity houses for "Julius Caesar" and other big productions of George Kleine's.

* * *

Arthur Lowy, who is now building the Lowy Theater on Milwaukee avenue, this city, which he expects to open Saturday, Jan. 9, called into see us one day last week. The Lowy Theater will be up-to-date in every respect, including the latest ventilating system, Mr. Lowy stated. The front, which will be ornate, is being built by the Decorators Supply Co., of this city. It is Mr. Lowy's purpose to charge five cents at matinees and 10 cents evenings and Sundays. Four reels of Independent features will be offered for five cents and six reels for ten. The estimated cost of the Lowy is $60,000 and its seating capacity is 680.

James Martin, manager of the Magic Theater, Fort Dodge, Ia., was in the city last week and paid us a visit. The Magic continues to do excellent business with Licensed programs, for which an admission of 10 cents is charged. On Thursdays and Fridays Mr. Martin runs special features of the Famous Players and other concerns, for which an admission of 15 or 20 cents is charged. "Neptune's Daughter" was played to capacity houses on Dec. 2 and it will be repeated on Jan. 13. "Cabiria" has been booked for the Majestic Theater, Fort Dodge, for Jan. 6 and 7. Moving picture theaters are all doing well in Fort Dodge at the present time.

* * *

The Williamson Submarine Expedition moving pictures, which have been showing one week at the Fine Arts Theater under the auspices of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., have broken all records for attendance and box office receipts, the management states. The pictures have been repeated this week and all indications point to a long run. They are run continuously from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. daily.

* * *

John R. Freuler, secretary and treasurer of the American Film Mfg. Co., was in the city Wednesday, Dec. 30, and returned to Milwaukee the same night. The Butterfly Theater in that city, which is owned by Mr. Freuler, Mr. Hutchinson and other associates, and which is managed by Mr. Freuler, is showing to good paying business just now, Mr. Freuler told me. Indeed, the business has been most satisfactory ever since the house came into the hands of the present owners. It is unnecessary to state that Mutual programs are used at this house.

* * *

The faculty and students of the University of Pittsburgh witnessed a presentation of George Kleine's big feature, "Julius Caesar," one day last week. The presentation made such a delightful impression that Chancellor S. B. McCormick wrote Mr. Kleine a letter in which he expressed his delight at having had the opportunity to view these remarkable films.

* * *

W. R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Co., this city, left for New York Tuesday, Jan. 5, where he will produce an industrial comedy, the making of which will take about three weeks.

Several Iowa exhibitors and a number of Chicago exchange men held a closed meeting recently in a room in the La Salle Hotel. It is said that censorship in Iowa now being framed against moving pictures was the chief subject discussed at the meeting. The proposed censorship law is said to be hostile and to have been framed in a secret manner, without due notification to exhibitors.

Moving pictures showing the Kaiser and the crown prince of Germany, submarines, Zeppelins, etc., were presented at the North Side Turner Hall, North Clark street, for the benefit of the Chicago German and Austro-Hungarian Relief Society. Emil Reich, of New York, gave an accompanying lecture in the German language.

John Bunny, Vitagraph's famous comedian, delighted a crowd of newsboys and orphans at the Sportsmen's Club, 610 S. Michigan avenue, this city, on Wednesday, Dec. 30. The president of the club, James A. Pugh, and Director General William Hale Thompson conceived the idea of a four-day juvenile entertainment. John Bunny was seen the opening day and was mobbed most joyously by the youngsters.

* * *

"The Girl of the Golden West," David Belasco's colorful play, started a weeks' run at the Ziegfeld Saturday, Jan. 2.

W. R. Scates, central division manager of the World Film Corporation, with headquarters in the Mallers Building, this city, states that on his recent trip in the interests of his company throughout the Middle West, he visited all the company's offices in that region. He found business slowing up a little on account of the approaching holidays, a condition that prevailed almost everywhere. Four weeks were spent in the Middle West, after which New York and Boston were visited. Mr. Scates took in the exhibitors' ball in Boston while in that city, and enjoyed himself thoroughly.

* * *

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., left for New Orleans Monday evening, Jan. 4, where he met the members of his Western company, who have been selected for the production of "The Ne'er Do Well," in the Panama zone. The company left New Orleans for the canal region Saturday, Jan. 9. Mr. Selig will arrive in Chicago on Sunday, Jan. 10.

Claude Erby, branch manager for George Kleine in Dallas, Tex., writes that "Officer 666" showed to $1,500 on Dec. 31 and Jan. 1, at the Queen Theater, that city, at admissions of 10 and 20 cents. E. H. Hulsey, manager of the Queen, had played other strong features, with S. R. O. signs out in front, but "Officer 666" broke all previous records. The Queen has only 476 seats on the ground floor and 300 in the balcony, which makes the two days' showing all the more remarkable, at the prices. For the first time in the history of picture presentations in Dallas, the police compelled the management of the Queen to stop selling tickets at 9 o'clock in the evening, each day.

Among the brevities in my letter, in the issue of Dec. 26, reference was made to the proposed use of moving pictures in teaching Chicago's alien applicants for citizenship the manner of conducting the various departments of law-making bodies in this country. The co-operation of Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of the Department of Labor at Washington, was requested in a letter by Judge Clarence N. Goodnow, of the Superior Court, this city, and a reply has been received that Assistant Secretary Post will assist in the attempt to stimulate civic ideals in the minds of our alien population. According to Mr. Post's letter it is probable that the first step taken in such co-operation will be to furnish films and slides illustrating the workings of both houses of congress. Meanwhile the department has under consideration certain plans for the promotion of "civic intelligence with civic morality."

STEFANSSON RESCUE FILM ENDORSED.

General Manager M. E. Cory of the Sunset Motion Picture Co. returned Monday from Philadelphia, where he exhibited the Rescue of the Stefansson Arctic Expedition before the National Geographic Society last Saturday night. President Bryant was enthusiastic in his praise of the picture from a dramatic as well as educational viewpoint. The Philadelphia papers were cordial in their praise and predict packed houses for the picture when it is exhibited in that city.

The picture was also shown to the American Museum of Natural History in New York. Secretary Sherwood heartily endorses the picture. Among other nice things, Mr. Sherwood emphasizes the fact that the scenes are all beautifully photographed and that rare good judgment has been shown in the selection of subjects presented. The bits of scenery are beautiful and of unknown regions. The native studies are intensely interesting and highly educational. The animal pictures are different and better than any heretofore shown. Feature film buyers looking for a sure winner should lose no time in securing this great picture.

Doings at Los Angeles

WITH the installation of large glass studios and inside working stages, several of the companies near the heart of Los Angeles have been able to turn out their regular footage of film this week, and those not using sheltered stages are nearly behind in their releases. If they are not, it is only because they have worked speedily to catch up. Although there has been no actual rain since before Christmas, nearly every day has been somewhat cloudy. Eastern people not familiar with the weather always say it looks like snow, when they view our cloudy skies.

Jesse L. Lasky arrived Christmas day and ever since stepping off the train he has been busy talking to his assistants and superintending the big volume of work that is going on out here. The big glass studio is completed and a company has been working in it for a few days. William Devereux, the English dramatist, is here from New York to assist William de Mille in the scenario office. New additions to the stages make a space 60 by 180 feet, over 10,000 square feet of working stage space! Mr. Lasky says he will remain here for some time to come, having already started his family on the way out here. More improvements are to be made, and the studio enlarged still more. Already the big office-barn has been improved and enlarged and subdivided into departments. Auditor Wales has come from New York to start a bookkeeping department.

Wilfred Lucas, who directed George Larkin and Cleo Madison in "The Trey o' Hearts" series by Louis J. Vance, has gone east to be with Mr. Vance in the production of thrillers. His Gold Seal company has been taken over by W. T. McCulley, formerly assistant to Mr. Lucas.

* * *

Little Mildred Harris, late of the Broncho company, has joined the Mutual to work under the direction of Mr. Griffith. This child actress will be watched for on the screen by a host of friends throughout the world.

* * *

The Tiffany company has closed up and gone back to New York, Herbert Brenon having departed on the 29th. It is too rainy here for a company without a sheltered stage, he said, and for that reason production will be made in the east during the winter.

* * *

The entire Allen Curtis Joker company of comedians was royally entertained Christmas day at the bungalow of Max Asher, the funny man. Good eats, smokes, and other entertaining things were enjoyed by the Curtis players. A tree and presents added to the fun of the day. This company is doing "Saved by a Shower," a roarer of a comedy with Fail Henry and Lillian Peacock, William Franey and Max Asher. The crooks are after the farmer and his wife, and the shower saves the rubes at the city hotel.

* * *

In Pasadena the Crown City company is doing great things. The new studio is completed as is the laboratory building. A Motiograph machine, electrically operated, has been installed in the projection room. Twenty-one reels were shipped east on the last day of December. Director Mitchell is completing a comedy of the Tournament of Roses, an annual event held in that city on New Year's day. Director Macdonald is finishing "A Tale of the Hills," a smuggling story dealing with illicit whiskey. Some good studio inside-exteriors were done in this picture. O. B. Nair, an acrobat working extra, sustained a broken leg when doing "A Family Mixup" for Bruce Mitchell, the Thistle brand comedy director.

The Selig company filming "The Ne'er Do Well" embarked on Jan. 5 for Panama to get scenes for that picture. They will be gone for some time. Director Martin, of Selig, is finishing a two-reel crook story with Marion Warner and William Stowell. Tom Santschi is completing a story of the middle ages, "The Fork in the Road," with Bessie Eyton in the lead. The big zoo will probably be opened by the fifteenth; although there is much work still to be done, the artificers may finish by that time.

Henry B. Walthall arrived on New Year's day and started work with the Balboa company in "Beulah," a six-reeler from the novel by Augusta J. Evans.

Speaking with H. M. Horkheimer, he let drop the news that his company will start the erection of a $100,000 glass studio in this city about the 15th of next month. It will take about two months to build. A location is now under consideration, and just as soon as the deal is completed the first plans will be on the ground for the contractor. The new plant is to be most complete, with large stages, ample dressing rooms, record footage laboratories, and everything necessary to the production of many thousand feet of film a week.

* * *

At the Mutual, Griffith is doing "The Mother and the Law," a series of big sets being necessary. A full Chinatown street was erected for a part of the feature picture, and another large scene was the prison of San Quentin, in this State. A gallows was erected, too, and it looked too real. Martin Ogarrie, ex-warden of this penitentiary, was engaged for two weeks to manage the building of these sets. Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper are featured in this film.

* * *

Tom Mix and his Seligites at the Glendale camp are doing "Maw's Girls," a two-reel western, with Eugenie Forde and Goldie Colwell starring. The story is a rough one and is being staged in the usual Tom Mix way. It looks as if it would be a good release. F. J. Grandon, director of the Kathlyn series, has left this company. He was sick for some time, and needed an extended vacation.

* * *

"A Lucky Blowout" is the title of a celluloid comedy being put on by Scott Sidney at Inceville with Barney Sherry and Elizabeth Burbridge. A perfectly good tire has to be blown out for this picture. A real accident happened to be filmed, so the blow-out came luckily really.

Mary H. O'Connor, scenarioist, has returned from Santa Barbara after writing a number of feature plays for the American. Harry Pollard secured one four-reeler, "Infatuation," which he will produce with Margarita Fischer as Phyllis (the book is from Lloyd Osbourne) and himself as Adair. Henry Otto is doing a couple of good stories, "Restitution" and "The Silent Way."

* * *

Raymond B. West, at Inceville, is producing another fairy tale, "Mother Hulda," with cast headed by Elizabeth Burbridge and Margaret Thompson. Edward J. Connelly, the noted favorite of Broadway, is now working at this studio. By the way, Inceville is really and truly on the map now. The post office has started up and a big sign erected, even the busman putting it on his schedule of stations. Progress!

Dave Kirkland, doing a south sea picture for the Sterling films, was offered a ranch at $300 a year when he asked to pay for a few hours' permission to shoot some scenes in a location. He went elswhere, but laughed when he related how he said "But my dear man I only want it for this afternoon."

* * *

"A Romance on Wheels" is a coming release of the Albuquerque with the funny Dot Farley. Two invalids in roller chairs fell in love. Guess your own answer—and it's funny.

* * *

"The Chinatown Mystery," a newspaper story being put out from Inceville by Reginald Barker, promises much. The cast includes Howard Hickman, the star reporter who goes to the bad, and Leona Hutton, the slave girl, and Sessue Hayakawa, the Chinese murderer. "College Days" is being put on by Scott Sidney. It is a typical story of the campus, and some good gridiron scenes are filmed for this production.

* * *

Down at the beach the Balboa workers are building a set of new dressing rooms. Already four roomy ones have been finished for stars. These have heat, water, light, and are papered like little hotel suites. Luxury is everywhere, even to imported rugs on the floors. Ruth Roland, Henry Walthall, George Larkin and Henry King are the stars who will reside in the new rooms. A new stage has been laid and a scene store room added to the already big building here. This studio will still be used, even after the big new one is built in Los Angeles.

The St. Louis Motion Picture Co., at Santa Paula, has discontinued its "Frontier" brand and adopted "Premier" as a title for its pictures. Willis L. Robards is working on "When Shadows Fall," a story of the big trees and the great outdoors. Robards is the trapper, while Fred Church is his partner. Edyth Sterling is the girl in the story, and Joe Franz the heavy. Lillian Hamilton, late of Usona, is now the leading woman in the second dramatic company here.

Hal Clements is again directing here. Jack Blakely, of Premier camp, is married, the sixth member of this firm to quit batching in 3 months.

Here is a letter that will explain itself:

December 29, 1914.

In looking over your "Doings at Los Angeles" in the current issue of the Moving Picture World, I see you have me down as managing a Photoplayers' night at a skating rink.

The Clifford Howard who is getting off this stunt is another Clifford Howard, who has recently appeared in town and is making himself conspicuous as a roller skater. He is no relation of mine; I have not met him and do not know anything about him, except that he is causing my friends and acquaintances all sorts of bewilderment by the notices in the papers concerning his doings as a roller-skate artist.

Very sincerely yours,
(The genuine) CLIFFORD HOWARD.

Here is a funny case of a scenario editor being mistaken for a roller-skate artist. Everyone thought it was the scenario man, and at the same time we never had seen the genuine one on a pair of skates.

If you would read something interesting, do what is requested of you in the World of Volume 22, Number 4, of October 24, Doings at Los Angeles, Page 479, Column 1, Paragraph 6. Dorothy Gish is again at work at the Mutual studio in "An Old Fashioned Girl," by Russel E. Smith, directed by Donald Crisp. Miss Dorothy was struck by an automobile on Thanksgiving day and was unable to work for much over a month. Billiard as well as picture fans will see Willie Hoppe, the big billiard champ, on the screen, for on several occasions he has worked at this studio while visiting his brother-in-law, R. A. Walsh.

Wallace MacDonald has finished playing the lead in the fourth two-reeler of Navajo films, "Thoughts of Tonight," written by himself. The production was under the direction of Charles K. French. Fred Granville, of Arctic expedition fame, cranked the camera for this picture. This company is sort of a reunited one, these three men having formerly worked for Warner at the Norbig studio.

A large and roomy stage 60 by 65 feet is under construction at the Mutual studio. It will be lighted by electricity, two big generators of 1,200 horsepower being installed for that purpose. Another addition to the studio rehearsal department has been completed. There are two 40 by 60 rooms equipped with chairs, benches, etc., for the comfort of waiting players.

Mr. Lasky said that David Belasco will probably come west to supervise the filming of one of his plays, probably "Madame Butterfly." Many well-known film stars will be made from stage satellites soon, for many great players are coming west to work here during the early part of 1915.

Here is a good one from Bosworth's studio. The other day a young lady came to the head of the company while working on the stage and said, "Oh, Mr. Bosworth, come here and see the hundred and fifty feet of my baby nephew." Mr. Bosworth looked up surprised and answered, "Good Lord, is your nephew a centipede?" The fact was that the young lady had a cameraman take one hundred and fifty feet of film of the young nephew which she had just seen projected on the screen and she wanted the big actor to see the little actor on the screen. But it did sound funny.

New Year's day Mack Sennett and T. H. Ince of the N. Y. Co., opened a moving picture concession at the San Diego exposition with Mabel Normand and Roscoe Arbuckle as drawing cards. The show is an educational one and will prove a great success. By the way this company has the sole right to take pictures on the exposition grounds. The company is also doing some little comedy pictures while there. The movie show demonstrates how pictures are made, the sightseer being shown pictures in actual production, the laboratories, projecting room, and everything.

Miss Ruth Baldwin, who was in the publicity and scenario departments at the Universal, has departed for London to work in collaboration with Philip Oppenhein while he familiarizes himself with the "Sanford Quest" series for writing into serial story form for the magazines. The series has been changed to "The Black Box Mystery." Miss Baldwin will take the 15 scripts and one film to use in showing the great writer the film stories. This is the first time a story has been made from the film in this manner. Miss Baldwin will be gone for about two months.

BRITISH NOTES.

Power of suggestion is one of the first essentials in any undertaking which is to be successful. But this factor is never so valuable as when it arises spontaneously in the minds of those directly affected and not merely passed along from "the other fellow." Until Herbert Brenon evolved the idea of staging "Neptune's Daughter" in the island of Bermuda it does not appear to have appealed to anyone in the United States to produce photoplays under the best American conditions upon British territory. That Brenon's example will be followed is certain, for, like some of the early western cow-punching films, there is a dual interest in subjects taken amidst beautiful natural surroundings, while the strong revival through the present war of the cry, "British goods for Britishers"—a motto now hurled into prominence by every newspaper, billboard and public orator in the country irrespective of party, creed or color—would make them doubly popular during the present wave of super-patriotism. The war on foreign trade is being waged today in this country as fiercely in its way as the military campaign and although ostensibly directed against Germany and Austria, it would require a clever analysis to discover exactly the impressions left in the mind of the public by some of these well-meaning propogandists. Shortly before the war there was some talk of an English syndicate exploiting Jamaica as a film-producing area, but the outbreak of hostilities temporarily disposed of the project. However, there is no reason to doubt that the British colonies upon the American continent will be the scene of extensive motion-picture activities during the coming year. Which side will be there first can only be seen by waiting.

Amongst exhibitors a discussion has been precipitated concerning the advisability or otherwise of Christmas Day exhibitions. The regulations in most English towns are not really averse to Christmas Day or Good Friday opening, although, as ecclesiastical holidays, both are rigidly observed by the theatrical profession. Providing suitable programmes are submitted to the censorship of the chief constable or the watch committee permission is generally given to exhibit on these days, although the majority of exhibitors appear to be in favor of treating them exactly as Sundays and remaining closed. Showing, however, how divided opinion is on the question, thirty-nine permits in Manchester and a like number in Liverpool were granted yesterday (December 11).

Two days ago I attended a private exhibition of the Famous Players "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," and the Lasky feature "What's His Name?" An innovation which commanded much favorable comment is the method of subtitling these productions and one worthy of adoption with all multiple reel films. Preceding each reel, excepting, of course, the first, is a short synopsis of the story so far as it has been exhibited. Thus a patron entering a theatre can pick up the thread of a drama immediately without the necessity of sitting out an incoherent subject.

The past fortnight has seen the publication in England of a number of short war topicals of exceptional interest. Although nothing in the way of actual engagements are shown, some of the views of the battlefields and ruined towns have obviously been made shortly after the passage of the troops. Perhaps American picture patrons have observed that nearly all such films as these are the products of French, American, Italian or British producers. The absence of German and Austrian films is to a large extent explained by an official order from Berlin prohibiting either the photographing, publication or exhibition of films of this character under a penalty of five thousand marks.

"Kismet," a mystic Oriental play which ran two seasons in London most successfully, has been translated to the screen by Leedham Bantock, a producer of the Zenith Film Company, and the remarkable fidelity of the filmed version to the original has evoked enthusiastic commendation. Bantock's picture was reviewed a week ago by Edward Knoblauch, the dramatist-playwright, and Oscar Asche, the editor, and both pay laudatory tributes to the brilliance of his work.

A new process for the preparation of metal surface screens has been published in abstract at the British patent office. This renders the surface suitable for the dusting on of metallic powder, nickel or aluminum. The surface is renewable as occasion may require by a repetition of the dusting on process.

Recently I referred to a proposal by London's principal licensing authority (the County Council) to cancel licenses of German owned moving picture exhibitions when they came up for renewal. This body met a few days ago to renew movie licenses of theaters under their control, and amongst those suspended were, the West End Cinema, Leicester Square; the Electric Theater, King's Road, Chelsea; the Court Theater, Tottenham Court Road; the Electric Theater, Portobello Road, Notting Hill, and the Kingsland Picture Theatre, Hackney. In the case of the first named, which is one of London's most magnificent houses, is exceedingly well known to foreign visitors, it was stated that practically all the capital was German owned, but an English bank held a mortgage on the property for £48,000. Despite this, the license was refused.

Herbert Brenon Back from Coast

Producer of Tiffany Film Corporation Brings with Him "The Heart of Maryland."

AFTER an absence from New York of nearly ten weeks, Herbert Brenon, producer of the Tiffany Film Corporation, returned to the city this week from Los Angeles, where he supervised the appearance of Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland." Some bad weather was encountered, which delayed progress somewhat. Mr. Brenon says he believes he has got what will be conceded to be a spectacle; that while he makes no pretense of being a "battle director," he thinks he has secured some new effects in the staging of scenes of combat. For one of the spectacles he found it necessary to build a church. The bell in the tower was sixty feet from the ground. The structure was destroyed by fire just before sunset and served as a background for a cavalry charge.

In the cast supporting Mrs. Carter, who played Maryland Calvert, were William E. Shay as Colonel Alan Kendrick, Matt Snyder, who came down from his home in San Francisco to play General Kendrick—and Mr. Snyder knows a whole lot about real battles; Mr. Brenon as Lloyd Calvert, J. Farrel MacDonald as Colonel Thorpe, Vivian Reed as Dollie Gray, and Bert Hadley as Private Boone. Phil Rosen had charge of the camera work.

It is expected that the production will be ready to show the trade by the end of the week.

United Film Service Outlook

Acquisition of New Producing Companies, Including Gaumont, Insures Interesting Programs.

P. A. POWERS, president of the United Film Service, has welcome New Year's tidings for the trade. Powers announces that the daily service which is being manufactured for the United by the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., is to be augmented by the addition of several new brands of pictures which will take their place in the United program immediately.

Three organizations have been placed under contract to furnish the United with additional subjects. Five new series, four of them of a comedy nature, and the fifth presenting parlor dramas, are assured subscribers to the United Service as a result of the deal.

The Gaumont Company, one of the oldest established motion picture concerns in America, whose output has penetrated to a marked degree to foreign film marts because of its pictorial and histrionic merits, is the most notable acquisition of the United forces. A series of single reel comedies enacted by a cast comprised of several of the foremost funmakers in filmdom is assured the United by the affiliation of this organization. All the famous Gaumount stars will be seen in these films.

Society dramas, one and two reels in length, will introduce interesting relief in the programs being compiled by the United. These films are to be the output of the Regent Film Company, Inc., which has just been organized, with S. L. Warner, one of the Warner Brothers so well known in the motion picture marketing circles, as president and general manager.

Further amusement will be injected into the United offerings by the output of the new Sunshine Film Corporation, which will manufacture three brands of single reel comedies, each one of which will be distinguished by an individual cast, at the head of which will appear prominent film stars.

The several series thus assured the United are as follows: Empress, Juno, Mars, Magnet and Tams. The former of these is the Gaumont contribution toward the service, the last mentioned the Regent make, and the others being the product of the Sunshine studios. This increases the total of brands being released by the United Film Service to sixteen, which vary between strictly dramatic offerings and farcical plays.

The new affiliations bring under the wing of the United several more of the most notable film players in America.

Marion Swayne, leading woman of the Gaumont company, will essay the leading feminine roles in the Empress releases. Her fame as an interpreter of screen characters is unbounded. Joseph Levering, one of the most versatile of screen comedians, who has been one of the factors in making the Gaumont films famous in a comedy sense to a degree equal to the fame enjoyed by their serious productions, will appear in the Empress single reels also. Arthur Hill, whose pantomimic abilities have given his work the stamp of distinct individuality, is another screen comedian of great popularity who will be seen in the Empress-United releases.

Frank Holland, another of the new United stars, is remembered especially for his recent appearance in the filming of the grand opera "Il Trovatore" and in the feature film "Springtime." Irene Tams, who is one of the youngest and prettiest stars now enrolled under the United banner, has been seen in "Lola" and "Alone in New York," as well is in a number of other big features.

Mabel Frenyear, Sidney DeGrey, Peggy Hart and Howard Davies are other names added to the United list, each one of which is of significance to patrons of the screen play.

The Regent Film Company will begin operations immediately, having leased the Centaur Studios in Bayonne, New Jersey, one of the most modern and best equipped buildings of its kind in the East. Their first release will be a two-reel society drama entitled "Rebellious Irene," the scenario of which was prepared by Lawrence McGill, the director of the Humanology Film Producing Company, one of the feature firms affiliated with the United Film Service. The production, according to promise, is to brim with novel features. It will be released February 15, and is being prepared under the supervision of Walter Edwin, for several years with the Edison Company, who has been engaged as producing director by the new corporation.

The imprint of the Empress series will be seen for the first time by United program audiences when "Hazing the Honeymooners" is offered for their amusement. It is a comedy of connubial complications.

The first Juno release will be known as "Tit for Tat." The new Mars series will make its debut with an offering entitled "Never Again." "Uncle Abner's Will" is to be the first Magnet comedy offered.

The Art of Exhibition.

Rothapfel Gives His View of the Exhibitor's Position in His Community—How the Best Elements May Be Enlisted to Co-operate—A Message of Cheer to Exhibitors.

By W. Stephen Bush.

CAN you, dear reader, imagine any thing worse than a poor little child sent to school without any breakfast? They say such things are common in the schools of the lower East Side. The other day a little chap scarcely seven fell in a faint on the floor. The doctor was called and when the child was revived it was found he had been without food for two days. I am glad to say that this and similar heart-breaking incidents have at last awakened and alarmed the conscience of this great city. A breakfast will now be provided for every child that goes to school.

"What has this to do with the art of exhibition?" you will ask. I will answer you: "Nothing directly, but a whole lot indirectly." It leads me to the question of the exhibitor's influence in the civic life of his community and I approach the question with all the more confidence because the first exhibitor of the world has provided me with an answer, which brings with it a flood of light. No sooner had Mr. Rothapfel heard of the plight of these starving little ones than he formed a plan to aid them. Whoever enlists the motion picture in the highest service of humanity is the best friend of the motion picture. In an incredibly short time Rothapfel had reduced his plans to fertile facts. I confess that I have a better grip on the meaning of the word "create" since I have come in frequent contact with the man who draws the crowds into the Strand. He does "create" things. Presently you will see big armies of school children with their banners and their bands marching into the Strand (literally by the thousands). You will see the greatest stars of the stage and the screen and the opera and the concert speak to these children from the Strand stage and entertain them with their art between reels of pictures specially selected for the occasion by Rothapfel himself.

Many thousands of tickets of admission have been printed; these will be sold by good Samaritans of social and artistic prominence to the parents of the school children of New York and will then be given to the children. It costs but ten cents to buy one of these tickets, but you can give as much more as you like and few I imagine will claim to be exempt from paying more. Not only does the purchaser see a show which is easily worth a dollar, but he is buying a decent breakfast for little boys and girls who would otherwise go hungry. I shall not attempt to follow such a good deed into all its vibrating consequences. These shows of course will not interfere with the ordained course of the Strand's programs, they will take place in the morning and they will be over before the box office opens at twelve.

It is hard to see what prestige and what popularity our premier exhibitor has thus conferred not alone upon the Strand, but upon the cause of motion pictures generally. After this splendid feat in the name of Humanity and of the Motion Picture we are, I suppose, quite willing to listen to Rothapfel's opinion on the exhibitor as a factor in the civic life of his city. The press of the city has taken up his cause and is giving it unstinted publicity. The Board of Education is heartily co-operating with him, the whole city is interested.

"Exhibitor Must Share in Civic Life of His City."

"The modern exhibitor," said Rothapfel, "must share in the civic life of his community. He is the most powerful factor for good or evil. But recently a clergyman of national reputation visited me here and commented upon the marvelous work of the motion picture. 'Mr. Rothapfel,' said he, 'your theater is at this moment doing more good in the city of New York than any single church or school or library that I know of.' The words of this clergyman made me once more realize the advance the motion picture has made in public esteem. It is and surely ought to be a source of pleasure to all of us exhibitors to know that even the greatest and most widely circulated periodicals are now not only interested, but very friendly though but a year or so ago they were letting no chance escape to hit at the picture. Look, too, what the change has been in the attitude of the clergy. Now, if we were able to do big things for our communities in spite of this powerful opposition what will we not be able to do with all these vital forces of the community arrayed solidly with us? Our interest in the civic life of the communities in which we live ought to be stimulated by these two facts: The motion picture has become by far the most important factor in entertaining the great multitudes; it opens up avenues of civic usefulness which were absolutely unknown to the theater of old.

"We must by this time realize that the exhibition of motion pictures is just a little more than an exhibition of showmanship. The success of the exhibitor of the future will surely not be measured only by the money that he takes in. It may be measured that way by the public or even by the owners of a theater, but it can never be measured that way by the true exhibitor himself. The exhibitor of the future will look upon his profession as his life work. He will seek to build a monument that will live long after him. We are still in the days of the laying of foundations, but if the foundations are strong we can erect structures whose heights cannot be limited. With this spirit of building on deep foundations there is no obstacle which the exhibitor cannot overcome. My own experience in New York has been most wonderful. I came here an absolute stranger. Men who had spent their lives in the show business freely predicted my utter failure, I encountered most bitter opposition, for which I could discern no rational motive.

"A Reputation for Extravagance."

"People said I was crazy and that my ideas were extravagant, that I used up money too rapidly. Yes, I know I carried that reputation here with me from the West. It is quite possible that the owners of some of the theaters I managed might have had such ideas, but it is a fact that these very owners came to me here in the Strand and urged me with the most handsome inducements to assume the management of their theaters and to assist them with my advice. It was simply this: I saw years ago what the industry would eventually develop into. If its future were bounded by small theaters and an eternal sameness of pictures moving forever in a rut the industry would today be a very insignificant and negligible corner in the world of amusements. There were those, happily, who knew that the industry was destined for a higher flight, for a broader development and for a far bigger share in the service to mankind. I am not ashamed to own that I tried to walk in the front of the procession and that the rearguard with its chorus of 'knockers' never possessed any attraction for me. One of the things that the men in the forefront perceived with no great mental effort was the coming influence of the exhibitor in the civic life of his community.

How the Exhibitor May Assert Himself in His Community.

"Let me state my own experience in my attempts to win the intellectual and moral leaders of my city for the cause of the picture." A very prosaic but characteristic and instructive incident interrupted the flow of inspiration at this moment. Rothapfel had, it seems, in some way secured a great bargain in carbons and when the arrival of this important aid to projection had arrived and he was notified he looked somewhat like an angler with a prize bass securely hooked at the business end of the line. There was a little exultation in his voice as he ordered a check drawn for the amount of the bill. I had never heard of such a gigantic carbon purchase before.

"I found," he continued, "these leaders often narrow and prejudiced. I had several strenuous battles with the Board of Education and the clergy, I will not say in what city, before I could penetrate their first lines of prejudice. I always met them in a spirit of perfect sincerity and frankness and thus I generally succeeded in carrying conviction. There is no policy better than that.

"Before I started to solicit the aid and co-operation of these men I always made sure that my pictures and the conduct of my theater were of a kind to command their approval. Now here exhibitors sometimes make a mistake. I do not question their good faith, not at all, but I think they sometimes fail to exercise good sense and discretion. Before you can expect the teachers and the ministers and the press to join hands with you, you must 'show them.' Everything in and about your theater must stand the severest test of hostile inspection. If you fall short here your attempt to win the help of the most valuable forces in the community will act as a boomerang. To invite them when you are not ready is foolhardy and suicidal. If you are ready, however, you will find that in nine cases out of ten, I might say in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, they will be only too glad to assist you. Perhaps the method I suggest may not bring the immediate financial returns that might be expected, such returns might, perhaps, be secured in different ways, but it would mean no lasting success, no building up of a permanent investment which after all is the only way worth while. If you are able to wait for tomorrow you will find that this method of getting into touch with the right people is far the most profitable in the end. In the smaller towns where there is more of a personal contact all around the intelligent and progressive exhibitor has it in his power to become a mighty factor in his community just as powerful as the church or the newspaper.

"I know the motto of the average showman is: 'Get the money at any cost.' Men who think that way very seldom last and I will tell you why. If competition comes, or if the times are hard the people will remember the hoggish attitude and will be disposed to favor competition. On the other hand if the exhibitor has known how to make himself popular by taking an intelligent interest in the life of his fellow townsmen he need not worry so much about competition. The rush into the building of motion picture theaters is unprecedented. Little capital and big capital are anxious to invest and the impression still prevails that nothing more is needed to success than a building, a lot of light in front, a couple of moving picture machines, an orchestra and a ticket office. Men with such views, whether held consciously or unconsciously, very rarely succeed. Before beginning to build men ought to study conditions, they ought to be sure of the confidence of their neighbors, they ought to realize that the motion picture theater of today is not merely a place of amusement, but really an institution. The future of this whole great industry depends not so much upon new magnificent theaters or even high-class productions but rather upon the personnel and the morale of men who have chosen this field as their life work.

"Don't Let Them Lick You."

"All cannot have Strands, but all can have theaters that stand for the things I try to make the Strand stand for. If they go on in the right spirit ample reward financially and every other way is their sure possession. My own work has been recreation not labor."

Having often seen the speaker tired out and nervous, drawing apparently upon every ounce of reserve strength, I registered a little protest strongly supported by the amiable guardian of the managing director's private office. This man who has been with "Rothie," I do not know how many years, had often in my presence remonstrated with the methods of his master, who, as he said, sometimes "worked for fifteen hours at a stretch with nothing but a sandwich." The managing director waved me into silence. He has a Jovian way about him. He is deeply conscious of his great purposes at all times and when he is started on his train of thought his inspiration is visible enough to make an interruption seem like a decided faux pas.

"No matter how tired I may be my spirit remains playful," he said. "The fact is when I leave the office I am always anxious to get back, the work draws me, I do not try to resist. When men like Belasco and Frohman and Caruso are pleased to praise my work here and when I see how many audiences and my staff enjoy and admire my performance I am repaid a thousandfold for every effort I have made. I want to say to my fellow exhibitors all through the country: Cheer up, don't let them lick you. Men come here and tell me that they have tried to do things just as The Strand does them, they tell me they have the same light, the best operator and the best music, the house is conducted with care, the pictures are clean, but the money does not come in as they expect. Well, men who speak that way simply confess that there is something lacking in themselves, for after all it is the personality which counts. The personality is paramount. In nine cases out of ten such a man has dropped into a hopeless rut and it would take some lifting to get him out. Probably he lets the operator do as he likes in the matter of projection, he leaves the choice of the music entirely in the hands of his leader he relies altogether upon the manager to keep the house in order. He has not kept pace with the times, he is a victim of the law which ordains the survival only of the fittest. In the course of these articles I have tried to point out possibilities of improvement. I cannot tell of all of them because they come so quickly. There is not a moment when something new does not pop up. Questions of vital importance have been decided all the time and we must sit in judgment on so many things where the decision must be both quick and correct. I adore my work. I want my children to follow me, I would not have them enter any other profession, I want my boy to continue my work after me. So many exhibitors come here and wring their hands and complain about times being bad, etc., etc. Let them not complain, but dig their toes harder into the earth, raise up their heads and try again. The Lord hates a quitter. We are in a beautiful world, in a wonderful profession, the field before us is without limit, I cannot find words to paint its future and I am awfully glad to be alive."

Sheldon Lewis With Pathe.

SHELDON LEWIS, whose interpretation of "Dutch Joe" in W. A. Brady's big production of "Life" at the Manhattan Opera House is attracting such favorable notice, has been signed by Pathe to take a prominent part in the new serial "The Exploits of Elaine."

Mr. Lewis was born in Philadelphia of German-American parentage and had hardly got beyond the nursing bottle stage before he announced to his parents his intention of going upon the stage. His father was in the wholesale milk business in Philadelphia and this fact was remembered by Mr. Lewis' first audience in an amusing way. He had secured an engagement in a small role at the Gerard Ave. Theater in Philadelphia. No sooner had he walked upon the stage than various of his boyhood playfellows in the audience shouted "milk" at him and the rest of the crowd took it up. Uproarious applause greeted every line that he spoke and to use theatrical parlance he "took the show away from the star."

Sheldon Lewis.

Better and better engagements followed among them leading roles with such stars as Dorothy Donnelly, Frances Starr and Blanche Walsh, as well as with Ada Rhean in Shakesperian plays. When the endowed playhouse in Chicago, the first in America, was started he was secured to play in dramas by Maeterlinck, Henry Arthur Jones and other famous foreign playwrights. He was also with Mrs. Fiske in "The Pillars of Society" by Ibsen, as well as "Becky Sharpe" and "Tess of the D'Urbervilles."

When Augustine Daly died Mr. Lewis was under a five years' contract with him. Mr. Daly had told him when the contract was drawn up that he would make of him the greatest character actor in America. Such a statement from such an authority as Mr. Daly is high praise indeed.

An interesting story is told of Mr. Lewis in connection with his marriage to the beautiful and talented actress, Virginia Pearson, some four years ago. A law suit in which Mr. Lewis was involved came to trial on the morning of his wedding day. Mr. Lewis was called upon for testimony and being put under oath testified that he was unmarried. Recess was announced by the judge and Miss Pearson and Mr. Lewis took advantage of it to go to the "Little Church Around the Corner" and get married. The happy bridegroom then went back to the court room to finish his testimony. In connection with this the fact was divulged that he was a married man. At once the attorney for the other side sprang to his feet and called the judge's attention to the fact that in he morning the witness had testified under oath to being a single man and now less than two hours later had perjured himself by stating the opposite. Mr. Lewis then said "Your honor, I was correct in both instances. I was married only a half an hour ago!" It took some time for the court to restore order.

Mr. Lewis always insists upon playing a character according to his own interpretation. Of studious temperament he analyzes each motive and trait of the part and endeavors by every inflection of the voice and every action to disclose the mind and character beneath. That he adds unusual talent to the fine cast of "The Exploits of Elaine" goes without saying.

C. R. SEELYE BACK FROM WESTERN TRIP.

C. R. Seelye, director of sales of the World Film Corporation, returned quite recently from an interesting business trip in the Midwest during which the cities of Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago and Minneapolis were visited. He comes back enthusiastic over the way in which the World Film profit-sharing idea is taking with exhibitors.

Motion Picture Laws*

Collated by W. Stephen Bush.

Kansas.

THE laws on the subject of motion pictures in Kansas are embodied in Chapter 294 of the session of 1913. We print the entire text of the law, but it must be pointed out that there is now an appeal before the highest courts of the state which involves the question of whether the law is constitutional or not. An agreement has been reached between the authorities charged with the enforcement of the law and th motion picture interests suspending the operation of the law until a decision is handed down by the courts. Here is the text of the law:

Section 1. On and after the first of April, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to exhibit or use any moving picture film or reel unless the said film or reel shall have been examined and approved by the state superintendent of public instruction as hereinafter provided for; provided that nothing in this act shall apply to moving picture films or reels used exclusively in institutions of learning in Kansas.

Sec. 2. In addition to the duties now imposed upon the state superintendent of public instruction it shall be his duty to examine all moving picture films or reels intended for exhibition in this state and approve such as he shall find to be moral and instructive and withhold his approval from such as tend to debase or corrupt public morals. Upon such moving picture films or reels there shall be stamped or written a certificate signed by him showing that such picture has been examined and approved by him giving the date of such approval.

Sec. 3. The said superintendent of public instruction shall keep an accurate record of all examinations made by him and the date thereof and by whom presented for examination and noting such pictures as shall be approved and such as shall not have been approved and briefly stating his reasons for withholding his approval of such as are not approved.

Sec. 4. For each examination made by said officer he shall receive the sum of two dollars for each moving picture film or reel. No picture film or reel shall be examined until such fee shall have been paid to him and all such fees shall be paid by him on the last day of each quarter to the state treasurer and by said treasurer credited to the general revenue fund, provided that the treasurer shall issue receipts for such fees in triplicate, one to the state auditor, one to the state superintendent of public instruction and one to be kept by him and filed in his office; provided that for good and sufficient reason shown the governor may authorize the employment by the superintendent of public instruction, one or more additional clerks in his office as may be necessary, at a per diem not to exceed three dollars per day for each day actually employed, which per diem shall be paid out of the general revenue fund on warrants duly issued and payable in the same manner as other clerks in said office are paid.

Sec. 5. That the said state superintendent of public instruction shall have general power and authority to supervise and regulate the display of all moving picture films or reels in all places of amusement or elsewhere within this state. Said power and authority shall include the power to inquire into and investigate, and to have displayed for his benefit, to aid him in his investigation, the moving picture films or reels which are intended to be displayed, and said state superintendent of public instruction shall approve such moving-picture films or reels as shall be moral and proper, and disapprove such moving-picture films or reels as are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or such as tend to corrupt the morals; provided, however, in the case he should disapprove of any moving-picture film or reel, the person, film or corporation offering the same for examination may have the same examined by a commission consisting of the governor, attorney general and secretary of state, who shall examine said reel or film, and if they, or a majority of them shall find the same is fit for exhibition, on their order the said superintendent of public instruction shall endorse his approval thereon.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of every person, firm or corporation intending to sell, rent or exhibit any moving-picture film or reel within this state, to furnish to said superintendent of public instruction, as he may require, a description of said moving-picture film or reel, describing the scenes and purposes of any film or reel, and to exhibit and display for his examination and approval or disapproval any such film or reel.

Sec. 7. Any person, firm or corporation exhibiting or permitting to be exhibited any unapproved moving-picture film or reel shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for the first offense and not less than one hundred dollars for each subsequent offense. Each unapproved moving picture film or reel exhibited, and each day the same shall be exhibited, shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 8. All laws and parts of laws so far as they conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Sec. 9. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the first day of April, 1913, and its publication in the official state paper.

Kentucky.

There are no state licenses for moving picture shows in the state of Kentucky. There is a county license, however, which is graded as follows: Counties in which is situated a city of the first class, forty dollars; counties with a city of the second class, twenty dollars; counties with a city of the third class, fifteen dollars; all other counties, ten dollars. License fees are payable annually. In all other respects the laws applying to common shows regulate the moving picture houses.

Louisiana.

As far as we know at this moment, no special legislation regarding motion picture houses has been enacted in this state.

*The first article of this series appeared in issue of Nov. 21.

Maryland.

The statutes of Maryland seem to deal with no other subject pertaining to motion pictures than the laws referring to operators of moving picture machines. There is a general law, the text of which is herewith subjoined:

Whereas, In most professions in which responsibility as to damages to persons or property is involved, the custom prevailing or the law of the State of Maryland requires all persons having or wishing to assume such responsibility to be examined by skilled and competent examiners, said professions being in part those of attorneys, physicians, dentists, plumbers, engineers, horseshoers and others; and

Whereas, There is more danger to life and property from explosions caused by the carelessness and incompetency of moving-picture machine operators; and

Whereas, Heretofore no provision has been made by law requiring moving-picture operators to undergo an examination before being allowed to pursue their avocation; and

Whereas, It is deemed a fit and proper subject of legislative action, with a view to the proper protection of life and property, that a law be enacted by which none but persons who are skilled in the avocation of operating moving picture machines or electrical projection apparatus should be allowed to pursue that calling, and to that end a board of examining moving picture machine operators should be created, whose duty it shall be to examine moving picture machine operators desiring to follow that trade, and give such as may possess the proper requisites a proper certificate of proficiency; therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That a new article, to be known as "Moving Picture Machine Operators," is hereby added to the Code of Public Local Laws, whose provisions shall be as follows:

Sec. 2. That the term Moving Picture Machine operator, as used in this Act, shall be defined as and including any and all persons engaged in the operation of Moving Picture Machines. A license of Moving Picture Machine operator, issued in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall entitle any such person so licensed to operate any Moving Picture Machine.

Sec. 3. That the Governor shall biennially appoint in and for Baltimore City three persons, one from the Board of Fire Underwriters' Association, one licensed Moving Picture Machine operator, one master Electrician, to represent the Building Inspector's office of Baltimore City, all of whom have had not less than three years' experience at the business and who have resided in Baltimore City, State of Maryland, for a period of not less than two years next preceding their appointment, who shall be known as the Board of Examining Moving-Picture Machine Operators; the parties so appointed shall make oath before a Justice of the Peace that they will faithfully perform the duties of their office, and shall give bond in the sum of five hundred dollars, to be approved by the Judge of the Superior Court of Baltimore City.

Sec. 4. That all persons who at the time of the enactment of this Act are engaged in the business of a Moving Picture Machine operator in the City of Baltimore, as described in Section 2 of this Act, shall, within sixty days after the first day of May, 1910, comply with all the provisions of this Act, otherwise they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, before a Police Justice or in a criminal court of Baltimore City, be fined a sum not less than five dollars, nor more than twenty-five dollars, for each day or fraction thereof, that they shall pursue the business of Moving-Picture Machine operator, in the City of Baltimore; and if said fine is not paid, shall be subject to imprisonment for thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the Judge.

Sec. 5. That if any such person desires to engage or continue in said business of Moving-Picture Machine operator, after the passage of this Act, he shall apply to the Board provided for in Section 3 of this Act for a license and submit to an examination as to his qualification before said Board; and if found proficient by said Board, they shall issue a license; otherwise they shall refuse to grant a license, if the said Board shall find, after due examination, that the said applicant for a license possesses a reasonable knowledge of the Moving-Picture Machine operator business and electricity as pertains to the operation and management of Moving-Picture Machines; then the said Board shall, upon payment of the fee herein provided for, issue to said applicant a license for a term of not more than one year, and shall keep a record of all licenses so issued; and no person shall be granted a license who has not reached the age of twenty-one years, and makes oath to such fact, and has had at least one year's experience under a licensed operator, or two years' experience in operating a Moving-Picture Machine, provided that each applicant for the license shall pay to the said Board a license fee of ten dollars ($10). Said license to be good for term of one year, and at the expiration of said term a renewal shall be issued by said Board upon the payment of a fee of five dollars ($5) for said renewal. No person granted a license under the provisions of this Act shall operate a Moving-Picture Machine after the expiration of said license or after said license shall have been suspended or revoked as herein provided, unless the said license or renewal of same shall have been granted as herein provided.

Sec. 6. That the said Board shall have full power to suspend for such period as may seem proper or revoke entirely the license of any Moving-Picture Machine operator who is negligent or operates any Moving-Picture Machine in a dangerous or improper manner, so as to be dangerous to the safety of life or property; provided, that no license, or renewal thereof, shall be suspended or revoked unless an opportunity is afforded the party charged to be present in person, or by counsel, and make any defense he may have; no license or renewal of same shall be assignable or transferable, and all renewals shall be kept of record as in the case of original license.

Sec. 7. The said Board of Examiners shall be paid a per diem of five dollars ($5) for each day actually in session, and shall pay the expenses of maintaining their office out of the proceeds derived from licenses and renewals, including office rent, salary, etc.; and no money shall be paid from the State Treasury for any expense of this Board; any surplus which may exist at the end of the term of the said Board shall be returned to the Treasurer of the State; the said Board shall meet as often as necessary for the proper transaction of its business, and shall give at least five days' notice in some daily newspaper published in Baltimore City of the time and place of meeting for the purpose of examining applicants; said Board shall meet once in each month; and all licenses and renewals of licenses shall expire on the first day of May of each year.

Acting under the law just cited, the State Board of Examiners have framed a set of rules and regulations, with special reference to the operating of moving picture machines in the City of Baltimore. The full text of these regulations appears on the following page:

Section 1. No person except a duly licensed "Moving-Picture Operator" will be allowed to operate any Moving-Picture Machine in Baltimore City.

Sec. 2. No license will be granted to any person under the age of twenty-one (21) years to take charge of any said Moving-Picture Machine while the same is being operated.

Sec. 3. Each "Moving-Picture Operator" must have his license with him when operating said Moving-Picture Machine for his identification by said Board.

Sec. 4. No person will be allowed to remain in the operating room while the said Moving-Picture Machine is being operated, except the said duly licensed "Operators" engaged for the purpose of operating said Moving-Picture Machine and an apprentice.

Sec. 5. No scraps of films, paper, rags or other inflammable material shall be allowed to remain exposed in the operating room. All scraps of films or burnt carbons shall be immersed in water immediately after their removal from the said machine.

Sec. 6. The operating room shall be kept clean of rubbish, dirt and the accumulation of material not required for the operation of said Moving-Picture Machine.

Sec. 7. Films that are not in said Moving-Picture Machine or Rewinder, shall be kept in their proper cases and not allowed to remain in the Rewinder, or be exposed in the operating room.

Sec. 8. No operator will be allowed to read or do anything to distract his attention from the work he is performing, when engaged in operating the said Moving-Picture Machine.

Sec. 9. Under no condition will smoking be allowed in the said operating room.

Sec. 10. No gas outlets will be allowed in any operating room, or rooms where films are stored or rewound. This rule must be strictly adhered to, and the said licensed "Operator" will be held responsible for any violation of the same.

Sec. 11. At least one bucket of water shall be kept in the operating room, and be located so as to be easy of access for each M. P. Machine, in case the film should catch fire from any cause. The bucket and water must be kept clean of dirt, rubbish, etc., and the water in the bucket changed at least every other day. The bucket shall be at least 13 inches at the bottom and 16 inches high, and be filled at least two-thirds full with clean water, so as to allow a 1,000 foot reel of film to be entirely submerged.

Sec. 12. A license issued to any "Moving-Picture Operator" does not allow him to do any wiring, except from the said Moving-Picture Machine to the rheostats for operating the same, and make the necessary connections at the said Moving-Picture Machine, but no wiring shall be run from the service connection or cutouts to said Moving-Picture Machine by the said "Operator" under his license.

Sec. 13. If the owner, or real party in interest in the place where the said Moving-Picture Machine is being operated, fails or refuses for any cause or reason, to allow the said "Operator" to carry out the Rules and Regulations herein stated, the said licensed "Moving-Picture Operator" in charge of said operating room and Moving-Picture Machine, shall notify the said Board in writing to that effect. In case of failure to do so, then the said Board will hold him responsible for violation of any of these Rules and Regulations.

Sec. 14. Any infraction or violation of any of the Rules and Regulations herein provided, will be sufficient reason for the said Board to suspend or revoke the said license granted to the said "Moving-Picture Operator" for such infraction or violation of its Rules and Regulations, provided that before such license or permit is suspended or revoked, the holder thereof shall receive notice of such proposed action and of the ground thereof and shall be afforded an opportunity to be fully heard in person or by representative.

STUDIO BUILT IN TWO DAYS.

When the increased activities at the Bosworth plant suddenly demanded another studio, negotiations were immediately entered into with various contractors for the speedy erection of a complete structure of steel and glass. As a result of this an unusual offer was made to set up the building in forty-eight hours and a contract was immediately drawn up calling for the completion of a studio in two days. In order to inconvenience the general routine at the Bosworth plant as little as possible, it was imperative that Sunday be one of the days on which work on the new addition was to be done. Accordingly, it was agreed that one of the two days be Sunday and for each day after the stipulated two the contractor would be subject to a fine of $500.

Last Saturday and Sunday were the days chosen for the unusual task and early Saturday morning a large corps of workmen with wagon loads of material and supplies were at the plant and soon hard at work. Through herculean effort on the part of every one connected with the execution of the contract, the job was completed in the stipulated time, and Monday morning found another building on the Bosworth premises.

The new studio measures sixty by ninety feet and is built entirely of steel and glass. It is equipped with a powerful and complete lighting system so that dark days can be utilized. Nothing had been overlooked and every detail of the construction has been found thoroughly in accordance with the demands.

COSTLY CATS IN "ZUDORA."

Two imported Persian cats valued at $2500.00 will be seen in Zudora. The pets were purchased from Commodore E. C. Benedict of Greenwich, and possess titled pedigrees that would make jealous some of the courts of Europe.

Mary Elizabeth Forbes, who plays Mme. Duvals in Thanhouser's big serial, will have the Persian beauties in the wonderful Grecian salon, which, as planned, will be unsurpassed as a motion picture set.

George Kleine's "Stop Thief" Completed

DIRECTOR George Fitzmaurice has completed George Kleine's second American-made feature, "Stop Thief." Mary Ryan, now appearing on Broadway in the hit of the current theatrical season, "On Trial;" and Harry Mestayer are the stars in the latest Klein production. Transforming a stage comedy hit for the screen, with the consequent loss of much of the witty dialogue, is admitted to be one of the most difficult tasks a director can face, but those who have been privileged to see the taking of some of the "Stop Thief" scenes assert that Director Fitzmaurice has ably surmounted the obstacles in his way.

George Fitzmaurice.

George Fitzmaurice had already a varied career before he entered the ranks of the feature producers. Born in England and educated in France, the Kleine director's travels have brought him to many of the out-of-the-way nooks of the world. He spent nine years in India, where, being naturally studious, he gained a knowledge of Indian customs that has been invaluable in his screen work. It was while scenario editor for Pathe that Mr. Fitzmaurice secured his first opportunity as a director, and his success may be guessed from the fact that so shrewd a specialist in feature films as George Kleine should have chosen him to produce "Stop Thief." Among his Pathe productions which will be remembered are "The Quest of the Sacred Gem," an Indian story featuring Ernest Truex, Peyton Gibbs and Edna Mayo, and "The Bomb Boy," featuring Ernest Truex and Eleanor Woodruff. He is also the author of scores of scenarios. Fitzmaurice has gained his present position by hard work and his conscientious attention to even the smallest details in a production. The picture will be released February 8th.

GERMAN RAID PICTURES.

Showing the terrific destruction wrought in the sea-port towns of Hartlepool and Scarborough, England, by a recent bombardment by a German squadron, five hundred feet of film were received last Tuesday by the Universal Animated Weekly from its European war correspondent. Owing to an English prohibition against its shipment, the film was brought over secretly by an agent of the Universal in England, Jack Cohn, editor of the Animated Weekly, chartered a tug and met his steamer out in the bay, thus facilitating delivery of the film. The photography is unusually good and the scenes are interesting. The film will be released in the next issue of the Animated Weekly.

Look Who's Here!

LATELY a man—just one man—wanted to know what had become of Bill, to whom we used to write letters. Bill quit some time ago and no one else took Bill's place as an asker of questions, but the other day Bill's successor came in. Bill came east and passed the job to his father. His father went west and "passed the buck" to another member of the company. His name is not Bill, but we'll call him that. Here is the situation: Bill is a man of big business, but the big business permits him to play at being manager. The house is a neighborhood theater seating 460. It plays to perhaps $40 to $50 except on Saturday and Sunday, when it runs from $75 to $100. The admission is flat ten cents, Mutual service with a series feature and perhaps one other feature day each week with no increase. It is in a city of about 300,000, not very far from the business center, in a good neighborhood. They use a few posters loaned by the exchange. They use the Hennegan or company heralds for features. One of the daily papers runs the ads of the houses in the want columns and two or three times a week has a reader about pictures in general with a reference to the advertising columns. The house runs a slide saying that their program may be found in this publication. That is all the advertising done. We were busy when "Bill" came in, but promised to write him a letter, and this is what we want to tell him:

Dear Bill:

In the first place, I'm ashamed of you. You are a good enough business man to have made your pile, yet you tell me you do not read the Moving Picture World except to get a line on some of the features. When you started in business I'll wager you never bought a ton of coal, put a tenth in the furnace and threw the rest away. You used every pound and got all the heat you could out of it. You studied your business; you lived with it to find cost cutters and labor savers. But like so many others you've the idea that a picture will run itself. Take it from your Uncle Dudley IT WON'T. There is something to this game besides hiring a film service and a doorkeeper. You've got to study this business as closely as you did the one you made your money in, and you'll find it chock full of trouble. And the first thing you want to do is to make the paper work for you to the limit of its ability. Read my stuff to get the ideas of others on advertising. Read Richardson's department so you can kick your operator half way to home if he does not give you good projection. Know what's coming and what's doing. Be the first to know. The World will make you the first if you read it. Even read Louis Reeves Harrison's comment on subjects. Don't get the idea that these are aimed at the manufacturers. They are to teach you; to educate you to better things. The first step toward success is to get the best trade paper and then get all that it has for you, just as you use every lump of coal that comes in the ton.

You tell me you have no matinee business because there is none to be had. How do you know there is none to be had? On what do you base that statement? You never tried to make matinee business, so you don't know what you are talking about. If there were a thousand houses in your town and 999 of them had no matinee business, it would still be no reason why you should not add this business to your receipts. Suppose you get only half a house. That would be $23 more each day than you are getting now. Suppose it cost you ten dollars a week to get it. Suppose that this applies only to Monday and Friday inclusive—five days. That's $115, or a profit of $105 on an investment of $10. You've gambled bigger sums than that on the chance of a much smaller return. Be a sport. The nearest school is eight blocks away. Very well. Go those eight blocks and get the teachers interested. Give them passes for the matinees. If they will, give them tickets to give their pupils for rewards, not many, but say three to five a week to each class. Sometimes giving a man a cigar will get you more than you could buy if you passed him ten dollars. A kid will slave his or her small head off if a ticket to the theater is the price of diligent study, and the kids that do not get the free tickets will come just to show they are not dependent. The kids will appreciate it, the teachers will appreciate it, the parents will appreciate it. Everybody will be happy, including yourself. If you want to go the whole hog, tell the teachers you'll try to get educationals. Make your exchange give you some of this stuff, a reel of commercial will cost a dollar a day and you can make ten dollars' worth of brag about it. Find out from the teachers what books will be studied in literature. See if those books have been done into film. If they have, get them even if you show a loss on the day. It won't be a permanent loss. Start the matinee after school, about twenty minutes or half an hour after school. You can close down if a month does not bring results, but if you work the scheme right it cannot help but make results. The school may be eight blocks away, but a percentage of the pupils live closer to your house and the others will come. If a youngster won't do better than eight blocks to see the pictures, advise the parents to call in a physician.

Then, too, you tell me you cannot run the high-priced features because no one charges more than ten cents, and so you know you cannot. I hate to call you a gosh-blamed liar, so I won't, but once a lot of people told a chap by the name of Columbus that if he sailed westward he would sail right off the earth, because no one else had ever sailed west. But he did and we know now that others had done it before him, but even if they had not, the point is that he did what he was told could not be done. So can you. You say that the downtown houses with photoplays and vaudeville are doing all the business. Yeah! But unless they play in half a million people a week—and they don't—I'll bet you the biggest office building in your town against a R.F.D. mailbox that there are some people in your town who if they knew they could get better stuff for fifteen cents more would jam your house so full that you'd be in trouble with the police and the fire department. But you must remember that these are not the people who are going to sit on their front doorsteps all day waiting for your distributors to come along with a cheap herald. Heralds are good, but you'll have to back this up with other stuff. You are not going to deal with cheap people, so don't try cheap advertising. Get out cards of invitation, make them look like the stuff your best stationer prints. Mail under two-cent postage. You can get $60 to $100 with a cheap feature. If you can get $200 for a feature that costs you $50 you're to the good. Pick out some bad day, like Friday, for instance. Have it well understood that on that day you'll charge a quarter. Tell why you charge a quarter. You'll get it and some people will even thank you.

It's the same way with reserved seats every night. You say it can't be done. Again we refrain from a hereinbeforementioned remark, but it can. Try it. For a week give out a notice with each ticket sold. Ask the purchaser if he approves of the reserved seat plan. Ask him to check a card and turn it in. Send it all over your territory. Take it for granted that a lot of people are staying away because they will not scramble for seats. Ask them if they would not come if they could reserve seats in advance. See what they say. Try it with just a few rows, at first. Build up as you see the demand grow. If you make enough noise about it, and the right sort of noise, you'll see it grow, all right.

And advertise all of the time, not merely with loaned posters. Get stuff worth advertising. Book it ahead. Buy paper that you can paste on the boards of the city bill poster, or build your own. You can get the man who passes your house daily. The man you need to worry about is the fellow who doesn't. Get after him, not alone with posters away from the house, but with novelty advertising. I take it you are in a section where most of the households have servants. If you are, realize that nine-tenths of the heralds will fall into the hands of Bridget or Wilhemina. They only get Thursday and every other Sunday off. Try and reach the head of the house, who can take every night off. You can do it with first-class mail or through a clever program that people will ask for. You are not yet enough of a showman to do a decent program. Study up, but meantime try for the brief form letter or the novelty card. And in writing this stuff remember the people you are after are not the ones who know that Miss Pickford is the greatest actress in America. Try for the ones to whom she is merely a name. Get them acquainted with her and the other screen favorites. Make fans of the disinterested. You don't have to coax the patron who wants to come. Coax the ones who do not come.

Features are the thing just now simply because a lot of flat-headed manufacturers do not realize that the one reel should be made as carefully as the five-reel subject. Most people read magazines for the short stories. Where would the magazines be were the publishers to concentrate on novels alone? But manufacturers can't see this yet, so look to the features for your results. If they'll bring you more money than you can get with singles, you can afford them, no matter what they cost. Some day there will be enough good singles each day to form a program. Meantime get the best you can and the best is what gives you the larger return and at the same time best pleases your patron. Don't say that this costs ten and that only five. Look to results as well, and a satisfied clientele is one of the results to be looked for, not merely the box office statement.

And lastly get this fixed in your memory. If you want to make money you must work for it. It is not enough to let the house run itself. If it does that it will go into the ground as surely as a runaway auto will butt a telegraph pole or a freight train. If you want to be a manager, for the love of Mike learn the details of management, and stick on game. Run your house and your patrons. Make the latter feel they must have reserved seats, that they must have quarter shows, that they must have matinees. Don't wait for a demand. Create it.

Get a good house. That you have. Get good music. You show intelligence in using strings instead of piano, brass and drums. Get courteous and attentive house people. Get a good operator. Get good advertising matter. Get good patrons. Train them properly. It can be done because it has been done. You do it.

Nash is Fighting.

Jack Nash comes in for a notice in a recent Real Reels. He is the chap who used to run the snappy Isis News in Trinidad, Colorado. He wrote the other day that he was having hard sledding because of a big strike, but instead of quitting he's fighting for business, and has put in the Paramount program. That's the sort of spirit that wins through.

Gets a Lot.

Our Kansas City correspondent sends in some clippings from the Hannibal, Mo., papers, all of which refer to the Star theater, at that place. Three and four front page stories in a single issue is going some. We are going to ask the manager to tell how he does it.

Later.

Ye-ah! That chap in Hanibal, Mo., that got so much stuff in the paper that at the instigation of a correspondent we wrote and asked him how he did it, comes back with the information that he pays so much a line for it and he thinks he pays more than it pays him.

Waking Mr. Ruffner.

Ralph R. Ruffner, of the American, Butte, Montana, sends in a couple of car cards and this letter:

> There is one phase of publicity that has not been mentioned in your columns very extensively, perhaps due to the fact that it would be looked for only in large cities—and I note that contributions from the large houses are few and far between—and that is street car advertising.
>
> Under separate cover am sending two samples of cards used by the Amercan. You will note that they are double the size used ordinarily. The usual size is 11x21—in fact, I do not remember of having seen a card 11x42, such as ours, and believe of all the advertisers, national and local, using this medium, we are the pioneers in the double-sized cards.
>
> In the large cars we use two of these; one near the front end and the other at the rear. This gives us the equivalent of four spaces in each car.
> The expense, of course, is "up and comin'," but as it reaches an average of, say seventy-five thousand people in a month's time, we deem it a good line to follow as well as a good investment. The December cards, you will observe, show our program for the entire month, and it is a safe bet that there are several productions as well as their stars who will appeal, and we not only hammer the name "AMERICAN" into them, but we almost compel them to book themselves for this house to see the things that most appeal.

Mr. Ruffner is wrong in his belief that he is the first to use double cards. In New York, and probably elsewhere, the American Tobacco Co. is using triple cards, generally with advertising only in the central space, the side cards leading into the middle. The idea is that the purely pictorial card cuts off the other advertisements and places the tobacco advertisement by itself. Double cards are used even by local advertisers here in the east, but not freely, since the cost is rather large, though the returns are equally large.

The great trick in car advertising is to get something that can be read by people at some distance, and Mr. Ruffner's program card conforms to this rule. A capital idea is shown in the other card, which shows a cut of a dog jack rabbiting across space with the legend, "I am on my way to the American theater," and other text. A cheap sleighbell is tied to the pup's collar with a red ribbon, and presumably keeps up an attention-attracting jingle.

In most sections car advertising does not pay unless the house is in the centre of the town. An exception is a card in the car line feeding some residential section in which a house is located. The general card is good, but we think a program card is more apt to bring in the prospect. A clever advertisement is good, but an informative advertisement is better for business getting, if you have something worth while to specify.

Copy.

George A. Roberts, of the Oneonta (N. Y.) theater, sends in the card he used to introduce the Paramount program. He also sends in his sprightly house organ and in it is this:

I FEEL LIKE POATING. I WILL POET.

Just a little sunshine, just a little rain.
Just a little happiness, just a little pain.
Just a great big pair of eyes, hair of golden sheen.
And that is Mary Pickford acting on the screen.

Of course he can do as he likes in his own paper—but it's darned lucky he can order himself to print it. The card is not in rhyme, and it may be useful to others:

A CARD TO ALL LOVERS OF GOOD PICTURES.

It is with great pleasure and considerable pride I herewith announce that I have secured for the Oneonta theater the sole and exclusive rights to the truly remarkable motion pictures which have just been offered to the world, known as Paramount pictures. As the name "Paramount" implies, this means that from now on I shall offer "the best pictures for the best people in the best theater" in Oneonta.

GEORGE A. ROBERTS.

Footprints.

A. L. Ward, of the Princess theater, Henderson, Ky., sends in some cut-out advertisements of footprints. These are pasted on the sidewalk pointing in the direction of the house. They read:

I am on my way
To the Princess.

Mr. Ward ordered a thousand and in error was sent ten thousand. He offers to send some to brother exhibitors. He does not quote prices, but it will evidently be less than an ordered cutout would cost. It is understood, of course, that the attraction is named following the text quoted above. It is one of those "just once" schemes, but well done, it will attract comment. The most effective way would be to make a trail for several blocks down the main street and for a block up the side streets in each direction.

Find out first if there is any city ordinance you are likely to run afoul of if you paste up the sidewalks.

Knows He'll Be Coaxed.

It is announced that Real Reels will cut down to an issue every other week "unless our readers insist that they get this tabloid mental pabulum once each week." We'll bet George Editor Carpenter gets coaxed and we'll bet he knows he'll be coaxed.

Perhaps That's Why.

The Madison theater, Seattle, sends in a throwaway that starts off:

SOME PEOPLE

Pay carfare to go downtown, and what do they get? Only four reels and a ride.

The "wise" ones go to the Madison and get eight reels for ten cents. Possibly the reason that the people go downtown is that they get four good reels and prefer that to eight older releases at the same price. Eight-reel shows are too long, and people are beginning to realize that most long shows run old subjects. There is a place over in Philadelphia that runs twenty.

Four fresh reels are better than eight veterans, and in the long show can be found one of the reasons for waning interest.

Chips from Carpenter.

Here's some more Carpenter stuff. It's about programs, and it's been said before, but it is said so succinctly here that we are going to use the shears. By the time Mr. Carpenter gets a chance to come east we'll not owe him a drink or a bottle, but a whole barrel.

> The majority of managers look at these necessary advertising mediums from the wrong angle. At least, they argue, they must be self supporting. Consequently the average idea of a good program is a brochure crowded full of announcements relative to Hy Ball's Saloon, J. Bone Cleaver's Meat Emporium, J. Q. Oate's Breakfast Foods, H. Corn Cobb's Mattresses, John Lye's Soap, J. Ripsaw's Razors and all the rest of the tribe who buy space in advertising mediums to the almost utter exclusion of the theater and its attractions. Then they wonder why people would not read the house program and take it home and file it away for future reference.
> The answer should be forthcoming from anybody who has looked at the proposition from a common sense point of view.
>
> In order to make your program effective it must be attractive and interesting. It must carry personal appeal to the reader. The items therein should be crisp and brief. Just read your Bible; the account of the creation of the world, the biggest story ever told, is related in a few words. Why, then, smear the plot of a three-reel Western all over two pages? Life is too short for your patrons to read it.

Sticks to Quality.

Henry F. Goldacker, of the Schiller Park theater, Syracuse, has started a program and sends in the first issue for criticism. Syracuse is one of the towns where the managers argue that the patrons are all hogs, so they run six and eight reels for five cents. Mr. Goldacker is sticking to four on week days and six on Sundays. He explains the reason in this paragraph:

> If I showed more reels daily, the Quality would not be so good and you would not be so well pleased. Just remember that I am trying to please you and to do so, I must have your help and friendship. Respectfully, Possibly running up to six reels on Sundays will nullify the effect of the paragraph. If it is not possible to give six quality reels on Saturday or Monday, it is not possible on Sunday. If he wants to run six reels on Sunday he should explain how it happens that he can.

The program is an eight pager, 3½ by 6 inches, green stock printed in blue. The stock is all right and the combination of blue on green would be all right if the colors were correct, but the blue ink should be deep—a Royal Blue, and the green should be a trifle more vivid. Then a good strong contrast is obtained. Better still would be green ink on a light blue stock. With the ink and stock as they stand the text looks washed out. This is particularly the case with the six and eight-point matter.

Typographically the program is bad. The use of all one face for the program; not only one face, but only one size of that face, is monotonous. It does not stand out, even where caps are used for the title and lower case for the underline. The titles should be set in twelve-point and the underline in eight point. The days should be dated, and a two-point rule, cut to fit, put under each dated day. Compare these two effects:

Tuesday

Now look at this:

Tuesday December 29th

One stands out. The other is bashful.

If Mr. Goldacker has to fight opposition with argument, we think it would pay him to throw out a couple of the commercial advertisements and take the space for himself, running a series of well-worded arguments in favor of four good reels in place of a greater number of older reels in poor condition through frequent running. It may make the difference between profit and loss in cost, ostensibly, but he'll get it back in patronage, which is just why the jeweler and the cigar man give him money. And he should take the job to some shop where they have a wider variety of faces that the display advertising may be made to look better.

He is working along the right lines, but is not getting the fullest value out of his efforts.

It is well to hold the program proper to two or three faces or sizes of type, but the entire program needs a little more range.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will full manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is inclosed.

The Reason Why.

COMES an indignant correspondent to announce that a certain literary publication announces lots of companies that are not mentioned in The Moving Picture World. Precisely. Adding to that information it might be added that many of these companies want to advertise their wants in this paper and send in their checks, which are returned with a statement that we do not advertise the wants of any but the companies with known outlets. It costs several hundred dollars a year to take this stand, but the publishers feel that it is better to lose a little income than to take this money and publish advertisements that may cost its readers time, postage and the loss of scripts.

Several publications give publicity to all of the notices sent them. Now and then a sale is effected, but in a majority of the cases the company closes down before the purchase of scripts and there is no one to look after the return of manuscript. For every sale made to wildcats at least two hundred scripts are either tied up or completely lost. This paper is not lacking in enterprise in withholding these addresses. It is safeguarding its readers. Most, probably all, of these companies are well intentioned, but if they have no outlet for the sale of their negative, they have no revenues from which to pay authors.

In the same way several thousand dollars could be added to the advertising revenues of this paper if school advertisements were accepted. So far as the paper itself is concerned, this represents an absolute financial loss, but it keeps its pages clean and does not help to swindle its reading patrons, and that means more than the money represents.

To Friends.

Will the many who were good enough to remember us in the Christmas season with cards, please accept as personal this acknowledgment of their courtesy. Many of them gave no address even, so it is not possible to reach them in any other way, but we want them to know that their appreciation of our efforts is gratifying in the extreme.

Editorial Changes.

Bud Burke, assistant photoplay editor for Keystone, writes that he takes it upon himself to advise us that Hampton Del Ruth, former assistant editor, is now editor for Keystone. In view of past events it does not seem that this will help to bring scripts to Keystone.

On the other hand, the Balboa editor who seemed to think a dollar a reel a fair price for a script of action has been replaced by Will M. Ritchey, who knows the game. That will help both Balboa and the authors.

"Like Keystone."

It would seem that once more authors are to be urged to write comedies "like Keystone," and yet that no longer means what it did a year ago, for the new Keystones are unlike the old. For a time the audacity of the return to slapstick methods startled and, following a long period of "straight" comedy, the speed and vigor of the productions created a wide following. But now Keystone stands for something else, and that something seems to be light comedy with a strong dash of travesty. To employ a vulgarism, you "kid" your story; you treat it jocularly and at times even with contempt, but there must not be too much exaggeration, nor should there be downright burlesque. It must suggest rather than be travesty, it must at all times keep clear of actual buffoonery. There must be a clean-cut story, slight enough to afford plenty of room for action, yet sufficient to be well marked in its plot. That's what the writing end of Keystone comedy is.

For the benefit of some manufacturers who are trying to follow their leader without knowing what it is that clogs their progress, it might be added that the other half of the Keystones is the intelligent direction of real actors. The manufacturer who thinks $25 a week a sufficient salary, and $60 an excessive price for a star is not going to make stuff "like Keystone." And it is not merely a willingness to pay higher prices. There must be added ability to get people worth the added money. An actor getting a hundred dollars and an actor worth that much may be two different—very different—propositions.

The Last Inquest.

Some of the Inquesters were doing their Christmas shopping late, and did not get around to the Morgue Dec. 21, but the jury present enjoyed a lively meeting. Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice was one of the chief speakers (Marc Edmund Jones not being present to do all the talking) and Carl Gregory had a chance but pleaded lack of preparation, though there is little about technique that he needs to think up on. The last of the Adventures of Octavius showed a distinct anticlimax, as the story ran to the conclusion of the love interest of the series some two hundred feet beyond the ending effect of a combination of the thousand-foot rule and the story that must follow the magazine tale.

In Kalem's "The Mayor's Secretary," it was agreed that skill in preparing the script gave the effect of value to a rather slight story. It was also shown that inconsistency and lack of knowledge of the ways of politicians militated against the full effect. A Keystone was admired for its easy construction and well-planned cutting and a pair of Biographs were missed by most of the Inquesters.

In discussing imagination, Juryman Young pointed out an as example of the proposition that even the most original creation of the imagination must be based on what has been observed, that the artist who draws the strange beings of other worlds merely recombines members of known animals, just as the author recombines and embellishes new facts. To this the Coroner added the suggestion that a recent story in which the upper strata of the air were supposed to be inhabited by strange animals was merely giving the squid a new medium and a substance to conform to that medium, eerie as the seemingly new creation was.

A few well chosen words on the lack of courtesy of the Herald Square management in not even replying to a request that a slide be used, and a threat to go back to the Savoy concluded the session.

Good, But—

The Script, the organ of the Photoplay Authors' League, is devoting much space to a crusade against the fake schools, and in the November issue (which came east the last of December) prints a letter from Mr. Prybill, of the Selig Company, in which he states that he did not intend his letter to Kenneth Langley (advertising as Elbert Moore) to be used in connection with school advertising, but explains that the letter was given merely on Langley's representation that he needed such a testimonial in order to procure another situation. Mr. Prybill adds that Mr. Langley was dismissed for incompetency, and further adds that he was recently offered a thousand dollars' worth of stock in the A. W. Thomas scheme if he would lend his name in connection with the school. Needless to say he did not accept the proposition, in which he was wiser than a certain feature editor who smeared his soul on paper endorsing the Thomas book in return for stock, only to find his letter changed to endorse the entire scheme.

The Script is making a good fight, but there is only one way to kill the schools and that is to reach the possible victim before the school advertising is seen. It is not the persons who read the Script or the trade publications who take these alleged courses, but the people who are deceived by the lying advertisements of the schools in popular magazines and even in such publications as The Churchman. What they are doing, they are doing well, but it is merely rubbing it into the unfortunates. The League should start a campaign of education against the publishers, some of whom, it would seem, knowingly assist in defrauding their readers.

A Helpful Book.

Because the photoplay is close cousin to the short story, it follows that the student of photoplay will find much that is of value in an intelligible work on the fiction form. The trouble has been that few writers on fiction have sought to suit their teachings to the broad field of beginners, but have held their style too closely to the advanced teaching. Robert Wilson Neal, M.A,. of the English Department of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, is the author of a singularly informative treatise on the short story, much of which is equally helpful to the student of photoplay, who will make due allowance for the difference in the medium in which he works. (Short Stories in the Making, Oxford University Press, New York City. Price, $1.)

In his introduction Professor Neal disclaims an intention to produce a work scholarly in the academic sense. He has sought rather to treat simply and clearly of his subject in understandable phrase, and in further disclaiming any intention to "manufacture writers" he writes these words that might have been spoken of the correspondence schools:

> This book is written to guide and help persons who wish to write short stories. But it is not written with the belief that short story writing, or any other form of literary composition, can be taught. It cannot. Literature is art, and art is incommunicable. Theories of its methods and success can be inferred and explained; its practical technique can frequently be explained and acquired. But neither theory nor technique makes art; the living spirit is not in them. Moreover, many a person who aspires to write lacks ability to achieve even technique. Books such as this are not written with any other belief. They can aid intellectual expansion; they can enable the competent to acquire technique; but more than this they cannot do unless the student bring to them an equipment of capacity, ability and natural gift approaching talent or genius. Technique can produce well conceived, well constructed and often salable stories, but it cannot produce living literature. Let no prospective student think otherwise.

The italics are, of course, our own. They serve to point what we have constantly taught; that technique is but the servant of idea and not itself idea. Without idea technique may even sell, but the product is of no real value unless employed to exploit idea.

It is not our purpose to quote liberal extracts from this work, for it is difficult to choose, but read this on plausibility: "Actual fact can be less true than fiction." Here are some others: "The story writer who does not make himself intimately familiar with the life he would present is unprepared either to conceive or present it." There are three degrees of imagination. The most ordinary imagination is that which merely reproduces in its possessor's mind a body of imagined fact entirely similar to the actual fact from which the imagination has drawn its originals. * * * The second degree * * * drawing on memory—as all imagination must—nevertheless selects, rejects, recombines and remodels until the body of facts it produces is a new one. Yet, superior as constructive imagination is to mere imaginative memory, it is nevertheless inferior to imagination of the third degree. Imagination of the third degree works as does constructive imagination, and it uses past experience. But it has a greater power, hence its material is not old material reworked, but rather new material, originally discovered and got out by the writer through his deeper insight and understanding."

Perhaps more interesting to the photoplay writer will be a footnote in which the student of short story writing is urged to study photoplays as a part of his education. "Study of photoplays of the better class is recommended," writes the author. "True, the photoplay is almost always strictly chronological. But the skill with which the sequence is kept chronological will be illuminative."

Mr. Neal's book should form a part of the library of advanced students of photoplay for it is sound in logic, sanely phrased and helpful in the extreme.

Count 'Em.

Another star of the literary firmament has done an elaborate back somersault and has landed on the back of his neck right on top of a "stupendous production." It still looks as though the time would come when an author will not be paid a thousand dollars for a story unless he will take the trouble to study his new medium and give results that, with the use of his name, shall be worth at least half of the money. Cheer up. There is growing room for "the little fellow who makes good."

Another Angle.

"I do not like to send to the Dash company," explains a correspondent, "for they always use two or three heavy clips, and twice these clips have made the return envelope overweight, and I've had to pay two cents for three clips; which is above the market rate."

There is no reason why any paper clips should be used. The rejection slip will travel just as well under the clip originally used, if, indeed, it needs to be clipped at all. We should like to see the practice abolished.

Plotting Streaks.

Did you ever try to think out a story and find that you could not think a complete story but that ideas seemed fairly to crowd around you? That means you're in a plotting streak. Instead of trying to turn out a script, get the ideas down with reasonable detail and work them out when ideas are less plentiful. Almost everyone gets into these streaks, but some simply sit and swear because they get no fully worked out idea.

Here's a Chance.

Many of the theaters now have a small motion camera for use about town. If there is one where you live, why not write a short play and get them to put it on. You may get paid for the script and the assistance you give in staging it. It has been done in Easton, Pa., with good results as far as business was concerned.

Titles.

If you can think of a title that will lend itself to advertising, point out that fact. Write under the title "Think of what the exhibitors can do with this." It may possibly help the sale. Lubin's "Kiss me good night" was taken up by exhibitors all over the country who got out cards "Kiss me good night at the Gem theater," or whatever the house was called. It didn't help the story any, but it did help the houses and so the exhibitors were grateful, and that helped Lubin; a fact the Lubin company doubtless appreciated.

Railroad Lore.

Lately we spoke of a story in which an engineer was supposed to ring the bell from his side of the cab and explained that the bell rope was on the left, or fireman's side. A correspondent writes that the rope is carried over to the engineer's side for emergency use and that there is now an air operated device on the engineer's side to perform the bell ringing service, all of which, we cheerfully admit, is one on us.

Good Advice.

The other day an author wrote us that he had a certain story coming through. We corrected him because it was a story we had written. He countered with the explanation that the title sounded like one of his stories and we sent this sage advice.

"Never claim a story until you see it on the screen, because perhaps then you won't want to own it as yours."

It is good advice for all to follow until such time as there is a reasonable certainty that the author's script will be followed.

Slapstick.

If you have not already noticed it, it would be well to note that there is a rapidly decreasing demand for slapstick. A more polite form of comedy is wanted because audiences have again tired of the rough stuff. Five or six years ago the chase and the hurly burly were solemnly abandoned for all time. The mildest form of chase was frowned upon and rough actions were forbidden. Then Keystone came along with some brisk scripts and there was a demand all over the country for "stuff like Keystone." Most of it was not "like Keystone," for most of the companies did not realize that it was not so much the rough stuff as rough stuff well acted and produced that counted. Now the public is tired again, and is going over to polite comedy. Go along with them, but if you have any of the slapsticks left, do not throw them away. They may come in handy a few years from now.

He Knows It.

John B. Goodrick writes: "I have been at work a little over a year and my card catalogue shows thirty-six rejections and one sale with eleven stories written. I think the answer to the large number of rejections is the small number of stories."

That's just it. Any writer is fortunate if he sells one out of the first dozen. It is vastly better to write thirty-six stories and have eleven rejections, but eleven stories in one year is the reverse of industrious. It is the constant writing of stories that alone brings improvement. It can't be done on eleven a year.

Rest Cures.

Several correspondents want to know how to get back in trim when they tire. There can be no set rule, but when we get tired we like to get aboard a train or a boat and go somewhere else. It is a sort of mental stimulant. Bill Kitchell writes that he, too finds that travel broadens the mind, even if he does only go from Newark (N. J.) to Paterson, also in the same state. If you get rutted, getting out of town shakes you into new scenes and diverts your mind into new channels. Even a series of suburban trolley trips will do if nothing better affords, provided you keep your ears and eyes open wide.

Facts.

Do not distort facts to fit your story and do not distort your story to fit facts. Write stories that are in accordance with facts and you won't have to make either your story or your facts perform a contortion act.

Asking too Much.

About half the would-be playwriters drop the work if they do not sell their first few scripts. The proper way to look at it is to adopt the mental attitude of Mayme Fickes, who writes:

> Also, in the same issue of the "World," as mentioned above, you spoke of a lady who had been working at scripts for six months and had nothing to show for it, and that she had the "blues." I have been working for seven months and, while I haven't sold a script as yet, I have lots to show for my work during that time. The knowledge, practice and experience gained will be invaluable to me in my future work. A person can't launch into new fields and expect to succeed before they get a "grasp" of the situation. Of course, my progress does seem slow, and I sincerely wish that it would move faster, but when it won't it won't; and the only way I can beat it, is to stay with it. This slowness of progress on my part is extremely humiliating to my pride, for I am used to doing things quick; but at the same time it makes me all the more determined to stick.

Don't merely say you think that way, but really feel that this is the proper spirit. If any one and every one could write plays where would the prices go to? If every correspondence school pupil could jump right in and sell the first and the second and the third, scripts would be worth about two cents less than the stamps it costs to mail them out. The reason you get paid in sums with a dollar mark in front of the figures is that it takes time, patience nad training to do the work. The other day we slapped out an advertising prospectus while a client waited and he seemed to think fifty dollars was too much for so little time. We offered to send him to a man who would take three days and ten dollars and he saw the point. When the way seems long and hard, stop and realize that you are investing your time in your business. You are not wasting it. You'll be paid for it later on.

Economy.

A playwright in a strange city for two weeks wanted to get into a contest, but he didn't want to pay the rental of a machine for that time, and the machine he could borrow had an unprofessional purple ribbon. It never occurred to him that he might purchase a black ribbon, put it on the borrowed machine, write his script, take it off again, replace the purple ribbon and thank his friend. The whole contest scheme is a gamble. Be certain enough of your idea to be willing to gamble—a little.

Make a Resolution.

Before you start to make it 1915, make this resolution: that you will write out at least one idea a week for fifty-two weeks. By the time you have reached 40 you will be able to see, without any outside aid, how poor idea number one is by comparison.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready, and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study. Canadians should send P. O. M. O., or coin only.

Question No. 67.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the real advantage of the semi-reflecting screen as against the non-reflecting type, and what, if any, are the disadvantages? Can you locate your projection lens anywhere else than precisely level with and central, sidewise, with the screen and have a picture without distortion? Explain fully. What is the effect of viewing a picture at a wide side angle, and why is it so? Where is that one seated who sees least distortion in in the picture?

Roll of Honor.

The Roll of Honor on Question 61 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee; H. W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; G. D. Bullock, Hobart, Indiana, and Montreal, Canada.

It is not altogether creditable that out of all answers sent in almost the same baker's half-dozen are the only correct ones from week to week and from month to month. It is certainly a matter for regret that only a half-dozen operators in these United States are capable of answering a series of questions of this kind correctly, even granting that some of the questions are rather difficult, and in one case not even one single operator out of the twenty or thirty thousand in this country and Canada succeeded in answering with anything even approximating correctness. Well, perhaps the second half will be a little easier—some of them, but also a part of them will be even harder. I trust, however, the day will come when a greater percentage of the men will be well enough posted to successfully tackle a proposition of this kind. Of course, it is always possible that there are others who could answer correctly but who are too lazy to do it, but if this is the case it is almost as little to their credit as being unable to answer.

I have selected the reply of Brother Bullock for publication.

Reply to Question No. 61.

By G. D. Bullock, Hobart, Ind.

The Question:

Name the various fuses necessary in a theater, and explain how you would determine the amperage capacity of each set. What difference is there in a fuse designed to be used on 110 volts and on 500 volts? Or 110 and 220 volts? How would you make an efficient fuse tester, and where would you locate it? A fuse on an important circuit blows; seconds count; "feeling for the current" with the fingers is unreliable, and is dangerous, since if the wires should happen to be crossed with a high tension, it might kill, or at least seriously injure you. What would be the commonsense thing to do in such a case as this? How could you, if prepared, test so as to instantly tell, with absolutely certainty, which fuse is blown? What is the best tool with which to take out and insert cartridge fuses quickly?

The Answer:

Theater circuits may be divided as follows:

Exit and Emergency Lights. This circuit should be cut in ahead of the main switch and fused a little higher that its rated load. If practical I would fuse each individual light, at a junction box, with three ampere fuses. I would advise this, as it is important to keep these lights burning under all conditions. Fused individually, if one of them should develop trouble it would blow its own fuses, and the remaining part of the circuit will still be in order.

House Lights. No circuit to be over 660 watts; each circuit fused to its actual load, and never in excess of the rated capacity of the wires.

Stage Circuits. Red, White and Blue Foot and Border Lights. Each circuit to be individual and fused to its actual load. Floor receptacle circuits for flood and bank lights, each receptacle to be fed from a separate circuit, fused at the board to about 20 amperes.

General stage lights, i. e.: orchestra, dressing rooms, fly gallery, etc., to be fed from board. No circuit to be over 660 watts and fused to its actual load.

Operating Room. Incandescent circuit not to be over 660 watts and fused to actual load. All these circuits can be fused with cut-out or plug fuses.

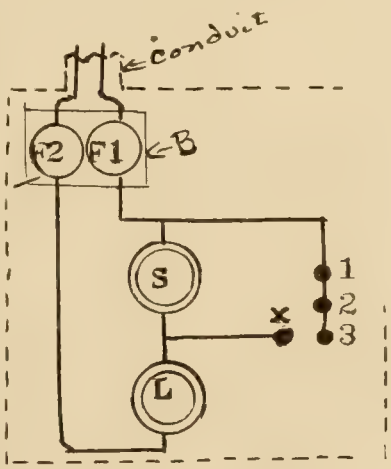
I would advise enclosed fuses throughout, as link fuses deposit carbon on switchboard when they blow, and unless this deposit is removed it will eventually cause trouble.

In the operating room one will find fuses at lamp (arc) switches rated to take the maximum load of the arc. On the operating room board fuses to handle the maximum load of the dissolver and spot light circuits. If a motor generator or a rectifier is used, on the motor or a.c. side of the panel fuses should be installed carrying the rated capacity of the motor, or the rectifier tube. On the d.c. panel, fuse to the maximum load pulled by the combined devices using d.c.

The stage switchboard may be so installed that certain circuits may be combined, for example, all white foot and border lights. If this be done the fuses must be the capacity of the combined circuits protected by this combination. Cartridge fuses of the capacity of the combined circuits in the operating room is installed on the main switchboard. The main fuses are of a capacity to carry the combined load of all the circuits in the theater. Do not install any fuses rated higher than the actual ampere load of any circuit. If enclosed fuses are rated by manufacturers at about 90 per cent. of their actual capacity. This extra 10 per cent. will take care of any ordinary fluctuations which may take place at the generating station. If a fuse blows there is some excellent reason, and the remedy is not installing a larger fuse, but locating and removing the trouble which caused it to blow.

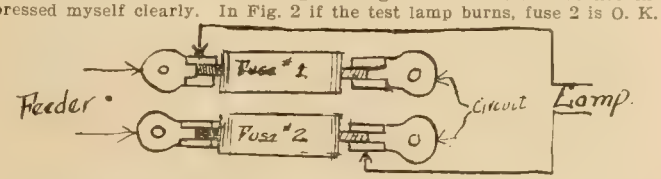
Standard fuses and panels are designed so that all fuses of like amperage capacity are the same dimensions up to 250 volts. From 250 to 600 volts they increase in length. This is done on account of increased tendency to arcing at higher voltages.

A diagram of a fuse tester for both plug and cartridge fuses is shown in the sketch. I would install it over the work bench, or wherever the fuses are kept. The circuit is brought to a steel box, covered with a top of some insulating material, such as asbestos board, or fibre. Mount fuse block B as shown, and a receptacle at S and L; binding posts at X and as many binding posts as you have different length cartridge fuses, as 1, 2 and 3. A strip of copper can take the place of these binding posts, but will not look quite so neat. Install a lamp in receptacle L. Conceal the wiring.



For testing plug fuses screw fuse in receptacle at S. The circuit will be through F1, through fuse at receptacle S, lamp L, and back through fuse F2. When testing cartridge fuses the circuit will be through F1 to binding post 1, 2 or 3, through fuse to X, back through L and F2. If a test is needed on the bench, leads for test can be connected at X and 3.

Test fuses at switchboard with a test lamp. A weatherproof socket and small carbon lamp will make an excellent test lamp. Touch one lead of the lamp on the lug ahead of the fuse, and the other on the lug or chip behind the fuse on the other side of the circuit. If the light burns, the fuse in the lamp circuit is O. K. Test the other fuse in a similar manner. I am diagramming this in case I have not expressed myself clearly. In Fig. 2 if the test lamp burns, fuse 2 is O. K.



The best tool in the operator's kit to remove cartridge fuses is a pair of gas pliers; the one you use to handle hot carbons. If care is taken to grasp the fuse in the middle there is little chance of a short circuit.

[I cannot agree with Brother Bullock that the deposit of carbon from link fuses is ordinarily sufficient to cause trouble. I have used link fuses myself and never had a bit of difficulty in that direction, though once a week I cleaned all switches and blocks with a good, stiff brush. I do not like cartridge fuses for the projection circuit, but prefer, instead, link fuses, because it is difficult to "boost" the link fuse without the trick being plainly visible. Link fuses are now required in New York City projection circuits where the amperage exceeds 35. Testing a fuse as per sketch would not be necessarily conclusive, because if fuse No. 1 was on the neutral of the Edison three-wire system, and there was a heavy ground on the lamp side of fuse No. 2, the lamp would light, although the fuse had blown.—Ed.]

A Dispute.

The Magic Film & Machine Protective Co., Muncie, Indiana, communicates with the editor as follows:

> We note that J. E. Bauer, Beaumont, Texas, claims to be inventor of the Emulsion Machine. This we wish to deny. Many months ago we applied for patent and are now selling Emulsion Waxing machines under the "patent applied law," so that infringers are liable to reap a crop of trouble. We are sending you a waxer for inspection and hope it will meet with your approval. Our device differs from Mr. Bauer's in that it is made of aluminum and steel; also in the preparation we use, which is a special wax. This wax gives much better results than candles.
> We have sold a number of waxers to exchanges and exhibitors, and they are every one giving perfect satisfaction. They lubricate both sides of the film at one operation.

In the first place I would like to call the attention of this company to the fact that they should have sent their machine in for inspection sooner, instead of waiting until they were forced to do so by counterclaims from other inventors. I am not saying this to take a slap at them, but to point a moral to others, many of whom have made the same mistake in the past, and, by that token, many probably will in the future.

As to the machine, it is a simple device, is well made and undoubtedly will deliver the goods. As a matter of fact, it is, however, to be questioned whether the waxing of the film on the celluloid side is desirable or the opposite. The deposit of emulsion is helped along very greatly by excess of film cement, but even so, I have never known of a deposit of cement on the aperture plate itself. A certain amount of friction is not only desirable, but absolutely necessary, since it is the friction of the film between the springs and plate which stops film in front of the aperture, and it occurs to me that the waxing of the celluloid side would have a tendency to necessitate greater tension, since it would, of course, reduce the friction between the celluloid and aperture plate. Also the wax on the celluloid side might deposit on the face of the intermittent sprocket and cause unsteadiness in the picture. Outside of this one thing the machine is a good one, nor does the wax-on-both-sides proposition necessarily operate against it, since it would be a very simple matter to substitute metal cylinders for two of the candles, and thus wax only the emulsion side of the film.

The Coming Year.

The year which has just passed into history has seen a very decided improvement not only in the work of operators, but also in machine room equipment.

In the issue of February 19, 1910, almost five years ago, the publication of the Projection Department was begun under the heading, "Operators' Column." Up to that time the operator had to all intents and purposes no method or means of improving his knowledge of projection, or even of learning the simplest fundamental facts about his business. Moreover, he had no representation of any kind whatsoever before the public. He received about as much consideration as we accord to the naughty fly that gets into the butter. He was left to flounder around the best he could, or if some one did happen to notice him he merely pushed him out of the way. If he dared to open his mouth he was promptly told to go to the devil, and usually informed that, for all the manager cared, he could stay there. About all the average operator knew at that time was that if he put a strip of celluloid with a row of holes on each side of it into a thing-of-a-jig called a moving picture machine, closed a switch, turned a handle on the lamp, and twisted a crank on the machine, he would get a light and something would happen out on the screen. As a rule "the something that happened" was not very creditable, but as long as he could keep it happening with reasonable regularity he was an "operator," and drew down the wonderful sum of perhaps as much as fifteen dollars a week, and in extreme cases even (Oh, joy!) twenty.

The foregoing is not a joke; it is just a fair setting forth of conditions as applied to operators five years ago. The Projection Department immediately became popular with both its enemies and its friends, and its editor is proud to say that today the majority of those who opposed his efforts in the beginning are among the staunchest supporters he has.

As this department enters its fifth year its editor feels the record it leaves behind is a good one. He is, more than anything, however, made happy by the knowledge that through its medium the manager has been brought to at least a partial realization of the importance of the work of the operator, and (which means the same thing) the importance of high-class results on his screen. He is also rather proud of the fact that this has been accomplished with practically no help from any one, and with the opposition, passive or active, of a great many.

If the film manufacturers who are, or ought to be, vitally interested in the proper presentation of their productions on the screen would wake up and actively assist the editor of this department in his campaign for perfect projection, wonders could and would be accomplished during the coming year.

Projection machines are now approaching perhaps very nearly, though not quite, as close to perfection as we shall ever get in an intermittent movement mechanism. Projection surfaces are already brought to a high state of perfection, although I believe there is still room for big improvement along certain lines; transformers, motor generator sets and mercury arc rectifiers are becoming more perfect week by week, and even the machine room, variously termed "coop," "box" and "booth," is gradually expanding into a real room, built of brick, concrete or hollow tile, of ample dimensions with splendid ventilation, and everything very nearly as it should be.

And now, gentlemen, we have spoken of the improvement of the past. It is as nothing compared to what it should be in the future. There is yet very much to be accomplished before we can rest satisfied. The one big thing now needed, beyond all things else, is the further education of the manager in the possibilities of the artistic end of operating—into a realization of the fact that the operator actually "renders" the film just as much as the musician renders a piece of music. But the manager must at the same time understand that the fifteen-dollar-a-week piano player cannot, never did and never will "render" anything. He simply "plays" the music, he does not render it.

Again I would call attention to the fact that until such time as cameramen take all scenes at an absolutely uniform rate of speed so that a uniform rate of projection speed will render the scene on the screen as it was originally taken, the operator will still continue to mar the work of the actors if his machine is run at set speed throughout the film, and even though cameras were run at uniform speed, it is still often possible, particularly in automobile scenes, to largely improve the performance by changing the speed of the projector. I am encouraged, however, to think that the recognition of these things will come in due course of time. Just a few years ago if you talked to a theatre manager along those lines he would promptly tell you it was all piffle and bunk. He don't do that now, or at least the better class of managers do not, which is evidence that the education of the manager as well as the education of the operator is advancing apace.

And now, gentlemen, let us all put our metaphorical shoulder to the metaphorical wheel and shove the car of progress along during 1915, remembering always that we are each one individually a part and parcel of the greatest game on earth.

Was I Wrong?

F. H. Daly, Crystal Theatre, Bird Island, Minnesota, wrote some time ago and asked if there would be any injury to projection by placing a large radiator in the center of the aisle where the light rays would pass over it. I told him there would not, and to the best of my knowledge and belief that advice was correct. I have seen many radiators placed in the center aisle, and have never known any evil effect from it. Friend Daly now, however, writes:

> Some time ago I asked you for advice as to placing a hot air radiator in a theatre we were remodeling, explaining that if the heat waves would not interfere with the projection I wanted to place a large radiator about midway between the machine and screen directly in line with the light rays of projection. You advised us that heat waves would not interfere, but they surely do; not on colored objects, but in anything white or a delicate tint the waves show. They also show on the advertising screen and on slides, but not so plainly on moving pictures, though one can see them on the white of the picture, making it look hazy. It seems to me this certainly must be heat, since covering the radiator causes the waves to stop. The spot is white and still until we uncover the radiator, when it becomes a perfect flood of waves. Can this be caused by the force of the heat throwing up minute particles of dust? Can you see any way to remedy this difficulty without changing the location of the radiator, which would be expensive?

Well, Brother Daly, you have got me this time, I guess. No, it cannot be dust, but must, I think, be entirely due to gas generated by the heat. I have given advice in many thousands of cases in the past five years and this is, so far as I know, the first time I have steered anybody seriously wrong, but I have seen so many radiators placed under the light beam without any evil effect that I did not believe it possible there could be danger to projection in any case. If any one can answer this let him arise and be heard. I know of no way of stopping the trouble except to move the radiator. If any one can help Brother Daly by offering a suggestion as to how to overcome this trouble let them write F. H. Daly, c/o Crystal Theatre, Bird Island, Minn.

Keeping Film.

A. M. Dederick, Loudonville, New York, orders a Handbook, sends a year's subscription and propounds the following:

> Purchased a motor-drive Simplex last spring for home use, mainly to amuse my little girl, though we all like the pictures pretty much at times. Will you kindly give me your opinion as to the life of films, if kept in a cool, dark cellar? Have purchased quite a number of reels, paying from $3.00 to $30.000 per reel, and expect to keep this up if their life is practically indefinite, as I believe it is, provided they don't dry out. This year I took moving pictures of my little daughter's birthday party, and intend to continue if there is no trouble in preserving the films.

Now, what in Sam Hill am I going to say to Friend Dederick? Two years ago I had the "family record film" bug in my bonnet, and it was buzzing to beat the band, too. I discovered, however, or thought I discovered, that the scheme was impracticable, by reason of the fact that film shrinks with age, so that the family record film kept for several years would shrink so much that the picture would be exceedingly unsteady. Now I am not altogether certain that my information along these lines was correct. It is a very important question—a very important question, indeed, and I intend to see if I cannot dig up some more information on this particular subject, and will publish my findings later on. Meanwhile Brother Dederick will have to wait.

Defends Stillwater.

Joe Smith, St. Paul, Minnesota, says:

I knew you when you were railroading but that has nothing to do with this letter. In October 31st issue one, Johnston, of this city, roasted Stillwater operators. I visited Stillwater to see what things were like for myself. One of the houses mentioned is run by a Mr. Flynn, and a mighty good scout he proved to be, too. He told me on the day in question he had occasion to step out for a moment and for a short interval placed his son in charge. Thinking that any one who had time to go to another town and censure another's work must be showing some mighty good projection himself, I looked Friend Johnston up. When I entered his theater the film "Sweet and Low" was flashed on the screen, and there was a light blue ghost in the center, about the size of a million dollar bill, if there were such a thing made; whereas the top of the picture clear across from one side to the other and nearly half way down, the screen was badly discolored; moreover, the discoloration was first at the bottom, then at the sides and then at the top, clear through the whole picture. The film "Environment" was no better, and there was travel ghost clear through the whole mess. Now, if this was an exception it would be different, but one of the ushers informed me they were all like that. I do not like to knock people, for they have got to live the same as we do, but what I am trying to do is call Mr. Johnston's attention to the fact that we should examine our own faults before we leave home and land on some poor kid who does not know any better. And now a few words with regard to conditions here in St. Paul as I find them. The Starland has just installed two new Simplex machines; the light is fair, but the size of the picture probably has considerable to do with that. The Alhambra, on 7th street, had a very dark picture on at the time I was there, but the light appeared to be fair. The Gem theater, next door, owned by the same people, had a good light, and The Blue Mouse, which, I understand, is a new house just opened, projects a very bright picture, but to balance that fact they have a mirror screen. The management, however, should put a curb on the speed of the pictures. The Majestic projection was good, in fact, the light was fine and was well handled. I understand that St. Paul operators will soon be licensed, and that the boys have started a union, and are lining up in good shape. The Grand theater, formerly a burlesque house, is to be opened up as a first-class picture theater running big features. There are several other houses here that I will write you about provided this does not reach the waste basket.

Yes, Brother Smith, I thoroughly agree with you that we should sweep up our own back yards before complaining of the litter on adjoining premises. If Friend Johnston, while producing that kind of work, proceeded to roast the Stillwater projection he was in pretty small business, but, be that as it may, it does not alter the fact that if Stillwater projection is on the low level he says it is (a thing which I have yet to see contradicted) it ought to be roasted by some one, and Stillwater managers shaken out of their lethargy and made to understand that unless they produce the goods on their screens it will only be a question of time when someone else will enter the field, and they will be the sufferers. Will be glad to have your notes on other St. Paul houses when the spirit moves you, but be careful to be just and fair in your criticism.

The Man Factor.

G. D. Bullock, Hobart, Indiana, says:

Argument which brings out facts is a good thing. I have profited by Mr. Crocket Brown's letter, November 14th issue, but I still believe I would advise a belt-driven unit, especially for managers who depend entirely upon their help for screen results, unless they are positive their help will never be incompetent or indifferent, also if a matter of a couple of hundred dollars be a consideration. If the direct connected sets proved to give better results I would certainly advise them, regardless of price. You made a safe bet in the fact that I would not consider inefficient electrical machinery cheap at any price. One of the many things every manager who installs a light plans must consider is the "man factor." Few operators are power plant men, or gas engine mechanics, and the manager should install the simplest reliable engine he can secure. I will guarantee to teach a man of ordinary mechanical ability how to handle a slow-speed engine with fair efficiency in a very short time. He will then be able to take it apart, assemble it again, and not have more than a cigar box full of parts left when he has finished. I would hate to make that same offer on a 3200 R. P. M. engine.

The lad who is rewinding here roasted me several weeks ago because you disapprove of correspondence instruction. He had it on me both ways because I had loaned him by Handbook and advised him to listen with both ears forward every time you spoke, and because I have shouted myself hoarse on the benefit of correspondence instruction. Either I had to admit that you are not infallible, or shut up on the home study dope. I am an advocate of study as an aid to improving one's results, and if correspondence schools can help, I advise their use.

Brother Bullock sends other interesting stuff, but things are so crowded I had to abbreviate it. As to the engine proposition, Friend Bullock is absolutely right when he mentions the "man factor" as an exceedingly important item. It certainly is, and, moreover, it is the ruling item. It is a fact that one man will take a given piece of machinery and get all kinds of high-class results out of it, whereas another will take the same piece of machinery, work just as hard, or even harder, and get results that are absolutely punk. I would like to comment at considerable length on this high-speed-low-speed proposition, but cannot spare the room. As to the correspondence school, I think the brother has mistaken my position. Correspondence study is all right in about one case out of ten. Theoretically it is also a splendid proposition for the other nine, but practically they pay in their money and get out practically nothing, largely by reason of the fact that they have not the moral stamina and sticktoittiveness necessary to carry through a proposition of that kind. Moreover, there are altogether too many correspondence schools which purport to give instructions to moving picture operators, or novices, who seek to become operators, whose "course" is in the nature of a rank fake. When it comes to such institutions as the National Correspondence School and the American Correspondence School, they are responsible institutions, and presumably their course will be, at least, fairly good, though the American Correspondence School very largely lost standing with the editor of this department through having put out a set of books called the "Cyclopedia of Motion Picture Work," in two volumes, at $10.00, and pushed their sale amongst operators, whereas the knowledge therein contained would, from the operator's point of view, be expensive at one-fifth the price. Very likely the American Correspondence School thought these books were all right and of genuine value. I am inclined to believe this, because the institution is a reliable and responsible one, but they certainly made a tremendous mistake when they pushed the sale of that set of books at anything like the figure quoted. Study is good, regardless of what the incentive may be, but from a practical standpoint I have no large faith in the correspondence course. As I said in the beginning, my observation is that it works out with about one man in ten.

Film Damage.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, writes:

With regard to your request for opinions as to the cause of the indentations between the sprocket holes on one side of the film only, I offer my idea for consideration, together with samples of damaged film. You will observe that the trouble begins at a patch. I noticed the film had, at some time or other, been slightly punched between the sprocket holes. It ran perfectly in my Standard machine. The indentations begin at the patch, and continue for less than a foot, though I have noticed in some film where it has traveled for quite a distance. My opinion is that the mischief does not occur at the intermittent sprocket, but at the lower sprocket, and is caused by resetting the loop while the machine is running. I would not care to say that the automatic loop setters are at fault, but if the roller on the same acts as a lever, thereby placing the maximum pressure on one edge of the film, it might have the tendency to cause this trouble, and my observation of this sort of damage is that it is mostly always on the same side of the film. It is quite possible, however, that it is caused by setting the loop by hand, while the machine is running, as is customary with many operators.

I see no reason, Brother Griffiths, why the loop setter should cause such a thing as this. In fact, the whole proposition has me treed. It is the first time in five years I remember having been completely stuck, therefore I am all the more anxious to know what it is, but, as yet, do not see any prospect of finding out. The sample you sent presents this peculiarity: The indentation begins right close to the edge of the sprocket hole, and for five holes remains right near the edge, then in the next five it creeps back until the indentation is in the center of the cross bar, where it has been in all previous samples. It continues there for about 6 inches, and then in the last eight holes crawls back to the same side of the bar, and presumably the teeth drop back into the holes. I must confess this matter has my angora. I, myself, am beginning to believe, with Friend Griffiths, that the lower sprocket must be the guilty wretch, though I do not yet see any reason why the fault should be committed exclusively by any one make of projector.

Lens Action.

Edgar S. O'Neill, Sioux City, Iowa, writes:

Have had an argument as to whether the objective lens magnifies or condenses rays of light passing through the aperture. We have decided to leave the matter to you. I claim that it is the rays of light going through the condenser, and not the objective lens that magnifies the image on the screen. For example: I project the light through the aperture with the objective lens off and find that it covers more than twice the space it does with the lens on. My opponent in the dispute says he has no argument to offer, but is certain the objective lens magnifies the rays of light passing through the aperture. Maybe he is right and I am wrong.

Yes, if I correctly interpret your meaning, he is right and you are wrong, though neither of you is very well posted on lens action. It is quite true the condenser spreads (not "magnifies," but spreads) the light rays in the manner you set forth. It is also quite true that it is possible to use a single plano-convex lens for an objective in projecting stereopticon pictures, and with fairly good results, too. I have not space to go into this matter exhaustively, but, briefly, the condensing lens converges the rays of light to a point which, in a properly matched lens system, is theoretically at the e.f. of the objective lens—meaning half way between the two lenses of the objective. But it is, nevertheless, the objective lens which does the "magnifying" in the sense you mean. It does not magnify the light rays, but the object being projected. It—Oh, piffle, man it would take three pages of the paper to explain this matter intelligently, so you will just have to take my word for it that he is right and you are wrong. I think you can benefit considerably by studying "Lenses," pages 346 to 365 of the Handbook.

H. B. Coles Lands.

H. B. Coles, formerly general sales agent of the Nicholas Power Company, and later general manager of the Precision Machine Company, has accepted the presidency of the Cameron Picture Machine Company of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Arrangements have been perfected for the manufacture and marketing of the Cameron machine, which was described, in detail, in the issue of August 1. The Cameron machine, viewed as a mechanism, is, in the judgment of the editor, an excellent proposition, although it is a radical departure from all previous methods, particularly in the intermittent movement. However, "radical departures" seem to be the order of the day, since the Nicholas Power Company long since broke entirely away from the star and cam movement, and the Edison Company now proposes to add an accelerator which revolutionizes the action of the star and cam.

Mr. Coles wil carry with him into his new position the good will and kindly wishes of many friends.

Optical Dope.

Lewis M. Townsend, Rochester, New York, writes:

> Local 253 of this city is practically 100 per cent. organized, and that, too, without the use of "stink bombs" or other rough-house methods.
>
> I wonder how many operators have noticed to what a considerable extent the slide carrier cuts down the light for M. P. projection. I have known cases, especially with low amperage, where slight discolorations on the screen disappeared entirely when the carrier was removed. I do not advocate removing the cone, but emphatically claim that all obstructions to any light rays between the condenser and aperture should be removed when projecting moving pictures. The motiograph is the only standard machine, so far as I know, which takes care of this proposition.
>
> As to the condensers I have tried out Mr. James' and Mr. Arkin's ideas and have, in a way, compromised between the two. While Mr. Arkin's theories are very good, indeed, Mr. James' ideas are more practical. With regard to Mr. Arkin's proposed size for slide mats (2½ x 3 3/16 inches), why it is fine, "but" the present standard mat is 2¾ inches high, which is exactly four times the aperture height, using the old 11/16 aperture standard, therefore, I use a stereo lens of 20-inch e. f. when using a 5-inch M. P. objective, and this brings both pictures of equal height on the screen.
> I am of the opinion that when we stop trying to use the same condenser combination for M. P. projection that we do for stereopticon we will have gone a "long way" toward getting started the "right way."

Brother Townsend is entirely correct when he says that the same condenser combination for the M. P. and the stereopticon lens is entirely wrong. That matter can best be taken care of in combination machines by a third stationary lens, thus making a three-lens combination, only two of which would be in the lamphouse. His ideas about the cutting of the light by the slide carrier are also correct, although, as a matter of fact, the rays that the slide carrier cuts are at the outer edge of the condensers, and hence carry heavy spherical aberration.

Condensing Lenses.

Hugh L. Woodward, Lewis, Iowa, writes:

> Have watched the department ever since I started taking the World, and find many interesting subjects discussed therein. What size condenser lens would you recommend for an Edison machine, with 60 foot distance of projection and a 12 foot picture? Have been having trouble with the spot lately. I have to carry the lamphouse very close to the film in order to get the required spot. Kindly send one of the Handbooks for the enclosed check. Do you recommend the meniscus-bi-convex condensers?

I recommend the meniscus-bi-convex condensers, provided the right combination be procured, but I am not at all certain that any dealer as yet knows exactly what the right combination is. We are working on that and hope to get it solved before very long. In plano-convex I believe two 7½ lenses would meet your requirements; evidently you have lenses of too short focal length, probably two 6½s. You should also experiment with spacing the condensing lenses different distances apart.

Home Made Spot Light.

H. J. Besler, Melville, Sask, Canada, orders a Handbook and says:

> Will you kindly inform me as to how I can make a spot light out of a moving picture lamp house, the same to be for use of any road shows which might require a spot light? Distance of projection, 88 feet. Can the same be used for colored lights and for both flood and spot? Which is the best light through a G. E. rectifier, 110 or 220 volts? Can get both here. What are the best carbons to use for 110 and 220 volts d. c.?

With regard to the spot, I would refer Brother Besler to the illustration and description in matter on page 385 of his new Handbook, which answers all his questions with relation to the spot, except as to colors. He can easily make a colored wheel for the spot light as per directions in the last paragraph on page 377, except that instead of using the sides of the reel he should have special metal discs made, with holes, about six inches in diameter, to receive gelatine. I do not know that there is any particular difference in efficiency as between using 110 or 220-volt current through a mercury arc rectifier. Use whichever is most convenient. As to the carbons, you will not have 110 or 220 at the arc, but approximately 48, since the rectifier reduces the voltage to that value. See mercury arc rectifier instructions, pages 171 to 182, inclusive, of the Handbook.

Highly Pleased.

Levi Na Varre, Flint, Michigan, says:

> Received the Handbook O. K. It is much greater than great. Am highly pleased with it. In my former letter to the department you mistook my meaning. I use a Preddy controller to control the machine-motor speed, not the current; use a Fort Wayne compensarc for that.

All of which requires no comment, except to say that out of all the Handbooks sold all over the civilized world not one single purchaser has expressed dissatisfaction.

Meniscus-Bi-Convex—Why?

Seattle, Washington, says.

> There seems to be several people started on the optical question, and after all that is the best result the controversy can possibly have. James is undoubtedly off on his theory, but probably pretty close to right as to his method of finding proper condenser combinations. Professor Wall's criticisms are in some instances of small consequence, and at least in one case he was wrong. He has added very little to our practical knowledge, and I think it is better to let the matter, so far as he be concerned, remain buried. On the meniscus-bi-convex question I note that you have several times given your approval to the use of these lenses "if of proper focal length." Right here is where I want information. I do not recall having seen in the department any explanation of just why we might expect better results from the meniscus condenser, and, if that is the case such an explanation might be of interest. One prominent lens dealer, you will note, says the meniscus "is designed to intercept more light rays than the plano-convex," which is a rather foolish statement; the drawing by which he proves it is especially so. Draw a condenser mount on the drawing and you will see what becomes of his argument. The advantage, and the only advantage, to be derived from the use of the meniscus is the correction or at least partial correction of the axial, spherical aberration of the combination. The meniscus lens has a negative axial aberration and, when combined with another lens with a positive aberration of the same magnitude, they correct each other. So it is, as you say, vitally important that the proper combination be used, otherwise you derive no benefit. I have not worked it out, either by the formulas or by experience, but am inclined to think a properly matched plano will give as good results with a meniscus as will a bi-convex. The point is to get them matched, whichever you use. It would be a very simple matter for these meniscus combinations to give correction for chromatic aberration, in one or two colors at least, and perhaps these combinations from the old country do that, although the importers have not found it out yet. If so, that would be an additional advantage.

Well, now, confound it all, Seattle. Why don't you get busy and work out these combinations. I don't know how, and I have not the time if I did. Griffiths may be working on something of the kind. I hope he is. Your statement that the correction of spherical aberration is the only benefit is not altogether correct, because, while the meniscus lens cannot intercept more light rays it does utilize more of the rays by reason of the fact that there is not so much reflection from the surface of the lens, its surface being more nearly perpendicular of the light rays. I use the term "perpendicular" in the optical sense. The reports show that the meniscus-bi-convex give better results than the plano-bi-convex. My whole contention has been that by the use of the meniscus-bi-convex combination we would have (a) less glass in both front and rear lens, hence less absorption; (b) a front lens with surface more nearly perpendicular to the light rays, hence less loss from the reflection of the polished surface of the glass; (b) (and most important) at least a partial correction of axial spherical aberration. As to the correction for chromatic aberration I have already said, though somewhat doubtfully, that there might be some correction of this kind. Frankly, I do not know. Let us have your dope on that, Seattle.

I have corresponded with the Laemmle people in Minneapolis, insisting that they formulate proper tables for showing the proper focal length lenses to be used, or rather the combination to be used with various conditions. I agree with you that this is exceedingly important, but also it is a difficult thing to work out, by reason of the fact that there would have to be about a dozen different combinations for each different focal length objective lens, since any given objective may work under very different circumstances. We are slowly groping our way, and I hope another six months will see this matter wholly solved.

I recently invited two big lens manufacturers and the Laemmle Film Service to contribute fifty dollars each, to which I would have gotten or tried to get the Moving Picture World to add fifty dollars, to form a fund to employ a competent man to work out the combinations for projection systems, meaning condenser combinations to fit any objective under any circumstances. The lens manufacturers, however, refused, the Laemmle people made a sort of half way promise and—there you are. But we will get there just the same, only it will take more time. In order to solve this problem properly, fully and completely one would need, I believe, about $1,000, because two competent operator-opticians would have to be employed for an extended period; an experimental room would have to be built and experimental lenses, etc., provided. I think after the first of the year I will try to start a fund of this kind. It seems to me that if the manufacturers who ought to do this thing have not sufficient enterprise to pay out the money for such a purpose there ought to be enough operators in the United States and Canada willing to put up fifty cents to $1 each to accomplish such an enormously important proposition as this. Yes, I believe I will try the thing after the first of the year, but I would not want to start it with less than a thousand because when the job is done I want it done properly and for all time, and the question definitely settled.

Why They Write the Department.

The general sales agent for a certain projection machine recently, in a letter to the editor, said: "You have very kindly, several times, informed operators through the projection department that our engineering department was at all times at their disposal in assisting in the adjusting of troubles with relation to their projector, but operators are careless and do not always write us."

Yep. That is quite true. Operators often are careless and do not write the engineering department, because they find that the aforesaid "engineering department" confines its efforts very largely trying to convince the operator there really is nothing the matter with his machine, and cannot possibly be anything the matter with it. Or, if they do admit the possibility, then they tell him how to remedy it in language which leaves the poor chap guessing as to what in the name of heaven they are talking about anyhow. On many occasions operators write the machine manufacturers and after receiving the reply forward it to the editor and ask him what the reply means. That is the reason the majority of operators prefer to write to the department rather than to the machine manufacturers. We do not try to tell him there is nothing wrong with his machine, or there could not be anything wront with it, but we start out with the assumption that all machines can, and do go wrong, at times, and there is something wrong or the operator would not be writing us, therefore, instead of wasting breath and energy denying the possibility, we proceed to try to locate the trouble and tell him how to remedy it in language he can understand.

It Is To Laugh.

George O. Cook, Dunbar, Wisconsin, who is running a show once a week in a little town, says:

> Pay three dollars per night rent for the hall. Have a late model 1913 Motiograph, with a 3 h. p., 60-volt, 26-ampere Detroit Lighting Plant. The question puzzling me is: Who is to pay the war tax, the proprietor of the house or I? I claim he would have to pay it, but can get no satisfaction from him on that point. Also, can you inform me who is the collector of this district, and where he is located.

Brother Cook, your tale of woe caused me a wide smile, not because it is not to you a very real trouble, but by reason of the fact that the query is basicly so very absurd. Why, Brother Cook, don't you know it is always the consumer who, in the end, pays the freight? don't you know that if Mr. Proprietor pays the war tax himself, he will simply raise the rent, and what in the name of the Great Horn Toad is the difference whether you pay it directly or he pays it and you pay it to him in the form of rent? Digressing from such matters for just a moment, let me say that this is not the only absurd proposition of this particular kind. The landlord swells out his chest and tells us what a large tax payer he is because he owns half a dozen apartment houses. Why, as a matter of fact, the poor boob don't pay any more taxes on that account. He simply collects it from his tenants in the form of rent, and pays it over to the tax collector. It is the tenants who pay. Another owl-eyed gink will solemnly assure us that only property owners are tax payers. Piffiearious piffle! Bunk and likewise more bunk! I would like to have someone explain to me how I can buy a pair of shoes, or even a single pound of sugar without paying taxes. But, after all, this has nothing to do with projection, so I guess we had better get back to moving pictures. No, I don't know who is the collector, or where he is located. But I am certain that in one way or another, Friend Cook, you are the guy who will pay the war tax—you'll be the goat, unless you can raise the price of admission and thus "pass the buck" down the line.

It Does Not.

Alfred Olson, Northfield, Minnesota, orders a Handbook and asks:

> Does the 14-inch reel do more damage to the lower sprocket than the 12-inch? Am using a Power's Six-A with the 14-inch reel and have trouble with lower sprocket. Kindly send formula for making good, cheap film cement.

No, Brother Olson, the 14-inch reel has nothing whatever to do with your trouble. As you have not described the same I cannot say what is wrong, but it is not the reel. As to film cement, why there are a great many different ways of making a good cement. You might try the recipe on page 330 of your new Handbook. Many operators say it is excellent, but others do not like it very well, as is the case with nearly all cements.

Fair Salary.

Roy A. Goggin, Iowa, says:

> I would like your opinion as to what is a fair salary for an operator of the only show in a town of 4,500. Have been working for $17 per, 7 to 11 evenings, with matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays, but the proprietor and manager thinks this is too much, and wants me to work for $15. He says I can work at something else in the day, and thus make up the difference. I told him that when I started operating six years ago, after working six months for nothing as apprentice, I took it up as a trade, from which to make my living, and if I could not make as much as a day laborer I would quit and do something else. I have tendered my resignation rather than work for smaller salary, because there is the wife and kiddies to keep, and it cannot be done unless I get sufficient salary, this being an exceptionally high-priced town for its size. The manager has been around to larger cities, such as Chicago and Minneapolis, and tells me their projection is no better than ours, but he now also tells me that "anybody can run a machine" and there is nothing difficult about it.

Really, Brother Goggin, I am surprised to learn what a dummy I really am. After operating for several years and editing the projection department for nearly five years I still find many things to learn about the projection of moving pictures, and yet, according to your manager, it is a thing I ought to have learned in a couple of days, all of which proves that, as I said in the beginning, I must be a fearful doughhead. I wonder if it ever occurred to your manager that the "anybody can do it" idea as applied to operating has done more to hold back the moving picture industry than any other one thing, and to keep it on a five cent basis. Here in New York we have moving pictrue theatres charging twenty-five cents to one dollar admission, every day in the year, and they get it, too. I would like to see your manager tell the manager of one of these theatres that "anybody can put on the show." I can imagine the look on the one-dollar-admission theatre manager's face as he listened to that statement. Seventeen dollars is none too high for high class work, even in a small town. It isn't even enough. Here in the theatres I have named the men receive from thirty to thirty-five dollars a week. I wonder if your manager thinks you could give him high-class service if you go out and work all day, or even a part of the day, and come to the theatre tired. What does he expect you to do? You are now working from 7 to 11, and that, counting the time of getting ready, etc., would be about five hours a day, not including the matinees. If you count them at, say 3½ hours each, it would average up between six and seven hours a day. Why, in this enlightened age a hod carrier only works eight hours, and in some of our cities he gets four dollars a day for it, too. Your manager can get a cheaper operator; that is an indisputable fact; but in the long run he will lose money by doing it, you can gamble on that. If he does start anything of that kind, possibly it might not be a bad scheme for you to interest local capital and start a theatre of your own. By putting in high class projection you might give your manager a rather costly, but very effective demonstration as to its value.

Twelve Reels for a Nickel.

W. Switzer, Syracuse, New York, says:

> Syracuse has about sixty moving picture theaters, some of them running a twelve-reel show for a nickel. (Good nightshirt—Ed.). Can you beat it? (Heavens, I hope not—Ed.). Of course the stuff, or at least most of it, is junk. Our best houses run a five-reel show at 5 cents, and a couple of the largest run big features at 5, 10 and 25 cents. Projection is fair, but might be better, and no doubt would be much better if operator's salaries were adequate. Syracuse operators average eight to fifteen dollars, and a couple of the big theaters pay as high as twenty-five, I believe, though I cannot say for certain. Our equipment consists of two Power's Five tables and lamphouses, lamps, etc., with Power's Six heads and motor rewinder. We take current through a Fort Wayne d.c. compensarc, which receives its power from a 550-volt trolley line. It takes six amperes from the line and delivers 35 at 60 volts at the arc. We also have a.c., and in case anything goes wrong can switch over. Carbons, ⅝ solid below and ¾ cored above. The light is white and brilliant; picture 12 feet. Well, I am going to try to answer some of those questions; they certainly are the dope to make a fellow study. Have been operating almost five years and just beginning to learn. Your Handbook certainly is the best ever. We have one here and call it our "Bible"; could not possibly get along without it.

Great Heavens! Twelve reels for a nickel! Eight to fifteen dollars for "operators!" Well, that is going some, both ways, and I venture the assertion that the right kind of a ten and fifteen-cent house would make some mighty good money in Syracuse. What are you Syracuse managers thinking of anyhow? Why don't you call the operators together, put up a hard-luck story, and ask them to work for nothing—sort of charity bazaar as it were? Also I would suggest that you might put in two more projectors and another screen and run twenty-four reels for a nickel—sort of a two ring circus. Certainly that twelve-reels-for-a-nickel proposition cannot be much of anything else but a circus, as it is.

Lenses.

J. A. Mitchell, Corinth, Mississippi, asks:

> What size condensing lenses should I use for a 14-foot picture, distance of projection 88 feet, current d.c.? What size carbons would you suggest for this current?

Assuming that you have one of the old-style apertures, your objective lens is approximately 5½ inches e.f. Referring to page 430, July 18th issue, we find that Brother Griffiths recommends two 7½ condensing lenses, placed 13¾ inches from center of condenser combination. The crater should be 4.46 inches from the back surface of the back lens. In practice, however, set your condenser the right distance from the film and pull the arc back from the lens until the best results are obtained. As to carbons, the size to use depends upon the amperage. If using an excess of 35 d.c., use ¾ cored above and ⅝ below. If less than 35, use ⅝ cored above and ½ below. The writer prefers solid carbons below, though cored may be used with good results.

THE LESSON OF THE FLAMES (Edison), Dec. 29.—Sixth of "Olive's Opportunities" series, by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, featuring Mabel Trunnelle, under the direction of Richard Ridgely. Edward Earle has a prominent part as usual. Many scenes are shown in the slums which are full of convincing interest, especially at this time of year. There is also a fire scene at the factory, where the proprietor's little son is unfortunately lost in his father's office. The rescue of Olive is quite thrilling. Altogether it is a very entertaining release.

THE WAY OF THE WOMAN (Essanay), Dec. 29.—Miss Hough, who was recently voted the most beautiful "Phone Operator in U. S. A.," is presented in this release. It is sufficient to say that she did "really look good," and was not "so bad." She did well for a novice and we hope to see more of her work in the future. The picture is well produced in every respect, regarding photography and direction.

LOVE, OIL AND GREASE (Kalem), Dec. 29.—A comedy directed by Marshal Neilan, who plays the leading part, an automobile salesman. The main interest concentrates upon fraudulent methods adopted by competing concerns. There is a lot of frivolous action, but the audience seemed to enjoy it thoroughly.

A COWBOY PASTIME (Lubin), Dec. 29.—Written by Romaine Fielding. This is certainly a rough and tumble comedy, in which cowboys, Mexican highwaymen and police go through some strenuous stunts, winding up in a wild chase. Some of the situations were very funny and caused considerable laughter from the audience. A fair comedy offering.

CACTUS JAKE, HEARTBREAKER (Selig), Dec. 29.—A western comedy written by Edwin Ray Coffin, directed by Tom Mix, who also plays the leading part, ably assisted by Goldie Colwell, Leo D. Maloney and Josephine Miller. It is a cowboy picture in which Tom Mix does a few stunts on horseback. Jealousy between the lovers is the main theme and causes some merriment before it is put to rights. It gets lots of laughs.

THE COURTSHIP OF THE COOKS (Edison), Dec. 30.—A farce comedy by Jay Barrett Botsford. Two chefs are competing for the hand of Laundress O'Hara, on condition that the most money gets the widow. She attempts to get the money without marrying either, but is arrested by a policeman, who proves to be her long lost husband. A very mild offering.

TWO DINKY LITTLE DRAMAS OF A NON-SERIOUS KIND (Essanay), Dec. 30.—Wallace Beery, Charlotte Mineau and Robert Bolder are the principals in "The Fable of Another Side Track and the Fatal Album." Oscar is in love with a girl, but when he sees the picture of her mother at the age of nineteen, which he mistakes for his sweetheart's picture, he changes his mind. Moral: Cut the Album Stuff. The second drama shows two medical students. Bill, after working hard, graduates with honors, while Edgar, just scrapes through. Later Edgar is a specialist coining money, while Bill is just a "Doc" with his office filled with non-paying patients. Moral: Some people still insist that it pays to be Square. These pictures were received with continuous laughter.

THE OLD LETTER (Selig), Dec. 30.—A letter, written by a man, giving up the girl he loves that she may wed another, is the cause of all the trouble that this picture portrays. Bessie Eyton is the principal, assisted by Harry Lonsdale and Roy Watson. A light offering.

FORCING DAD'S CONSENT (Vitagraph), Dec. 30.—Featuring Constance Talmadge and Billy Quirk, assisted by Lee Beggs and Miss Dorothy. Billy gets one over on dad, when he sees that supposed straight-laced individual flirting with a dancer at a cabaret. Dad is easily forced to consent to Billy's marriage with the girl he loves and humbly gives them his blessing. This picture is received with laughter.

THE SIEGE OF LIEGE (MinA), Dec. 31.—A comedy which is greeted with roars of laughter from start to finish. What happens to Harvey Palmer, war correspondent and newspaper cartoonist, is beyond description. This is one of the funniest cartoon pictures that has ever been produced.

SNAKEVILLE'S RISING SONS (Essanay), Dec. 31.—Another of the Mustang and Slim series, which is one of the funniest produced. Their two sons are following in their father's footsteps, great friends but always ready for a fight when the chance occurs. They quarrel over some doughnuts that Slim's son has and that involves the parents in a fight. Although this is not a new idea it is, nevertheless, creative of much laughter.

TWO STRAY SOULS (Biograph), Dec. 31.—A drama full of pathos and heart interest, illustrating how a husband and wife, in the happiness of their wedded life, are each afraid the other should discover the secret of their past. He has been in prison and she in a reformatory. Circumstances arise that brings a confession from each. It is a splendidly produced and acted picture.

LOVE WILL OUT (Vitagraph), Dec. 31.—A drama written by Mary O'Connor and directed by Ulysses Davis, with a touch of humor to lighten it. There is a lesson embraced in the theme, to those who are disheartened with their failures, and an inspiraiton that all should heed. The cast is a good one and all do meritorious work. An excellent picture in all respects.

THE EFFICIENCY SQUAD (Biograph), Jan. 1.—A burlesque that keeps the audience in continuous laughter. On the same reel with "Diogenes Weekly No. 4-11-44."

DIOGENES WEEKLY NO. 4-11-44 (Biograph), Jan. 1.—Another mirth exciting skit on the news pictorial. On the same reel with "The Efficiency Squad."

WIPE YER FEET (Selig), Jan. 1.—This production is certainly original and will be appreciated by those who come in contact with the over-scrupulous housewife. The director has certainly had experiences of his own and engrafted it in this picture. He has a good cast in John Lancaster, Lyllian Brown Leighton, Elsie Greeson, Sidney Smith and others. It is of the ludicrous order, but, nevertheless, it is very amusing. An average comedy release.

AUNTIE'S PORTRAIT (Vitagraph), Jan. 1.—There is a wonderful amount of real comedy contained in this picture, of the natural sort and everybody is kept busy entertaining auntie. They do not particularly want her, but they want her money. This is really one of the best comedies the Vitagraph has produced for some little time. Sidney Drew, Jane Morrow and Ethel Lee have the leading roles, supported by a splendid cast.

A CLEAN SLATE (Lubin), Jan. 1.—A story of marital troubles which is quite diverting in some respects and contains one or two rather thrilling scenes. It has a curious sort of ending. The acting and photography are commendable.

GETTING FATHER'S GOAT (Kalem), Jan. 1.—A comedy with a whole lot of automobile speeding, involving a would-be newspaper reporter, a young clubman, a judge, a poker game, etc., which contains complications that are more than ordinarily funny. The father is placed in a predicament in which, faced by his daughter, he is forced to "back out." Greeted with laughter.

ALL FOR THE BOY (Biograph), Jan. 2.—A plot that contains some very strong scenes and the acting is beautifully done by the following cast: Jack Mulhall, Jack Drummer, Marie Newton, Vivian Prescott and Thornton Cole. The photography is also adequate and any audience will enjoy this offering.

UNCLE CRUSTY (Edison), Jan. 2.—Produced in co-operation with the National Kindergarten Association. A very pretty little story that is great to look at. It is full of human nature and sentiment and would make a beautiful play on the legitimate stage, properly presented. It is very reasonable and up to date. This picture is commendable in every respect.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE ESCAPED BANDIT (Essanay), Jan. 2.—Many thrilling and beautifully photographed scenes obtain in this picture, but as far as the plot and theme is concerned it is not original, as the identical idea was used by another author very recently (paralysis of the arms). The acting on the part of all those in the cast is deserving of mention. A rather unusual release.

THE GIRL TELEGRAPHER'S PERIL (Kalem), Jan. 2.—Eighth of the "Hazards of Helen" series, embracing the usual railroad story. While it cannot be denied that it is full of inconsistencies, this story makes people sit up and take notice. The director has handled his principals in scenes which makes the average spectator gasp, and Miss Holmes takes her hazardous chances in working out the offering to its usual ending. The dives into the river are magnificently done.

WHAT HE FORGOT (Lubin), Jan. 2.—A very effective comedy, showing how a man gets himself into trouble through his own foolishness—but there is an incentive which he cannot resist. As a laugh creator this release is a winner. On the same reel with "He Gave a Million."

HE GAVE A MILLION (Lubin), Jan. 2.—On the same reel with "What He Forgot." A hilarious comedy of an original nature that gets over for quite an amount of spontaneous laughter.

LASSOING A LION (Selig), Jan. 2.—A story of South African adventure, concerning the jealousy of a husband which almost resulted in a tragedy. The foolish husband was finally convinced that circumstances were not what they seemed and that he was totally wrong in his unreasonable suspicions. The picture is well acted and some very intense animal scenes are shown, which holds the audience in suspense.

PATSY BOLIVAR, SERIES NO. 2. PATSEY'S FIRST LOVE (Lubin), Jan. 4.—It is rather a funny story, full of improbabilities and impossibilities, but it will probably remind many spectators of the time they fell in love with the school mistress, and you cannot help having great sympathy for Patsy. However, he is rewarded with a pair of long pants, which is a partial relief at least. A very amusing picture which is out of the ordinary.

SWEEDIE AND THE SULTAN'S PRESENT (Essanay), Jan. 4.—The plot of this comedy hinges on the fact that Sweedie has a dream and the action resultant show how she cuts numerous capers, which are very edifying to the audience. This comedy certainly gets over in fine shape for laughs. One of the best Sweedie comedies recently shown.

FROM THE SHADOW (Biograph), Jan. 4.—A picture drama that is strong in interest and filled with dramatic scenes that are very gripping. H. A. Barrows, Frank Evans, Charles H. West and Claire McDowell do some intense and impressive work. The director has manipulated his characters finely. The interior and exterior scenes are beautifully photographed and it is seldom that one sees a picture filled with such intensity of action. A splendid production.

THE CHAMPION PROCESS SERVER (Edison), Jan. 4.—A comedy drama of the hip-hurrah sort. It concerns the serving of a subpoena. It is filled wits some very strenuous scenes, involving fire and water; however, the champion accomplishes his purpose and rescues a distressed beauty. The audience seemed to enjoy it hugely.

Licensed Specials

THE CRIMSON MOTH (Biograph), Dec. 29.—This two-part picture has been reviewed at length by Mr. George Blaisdell, in the Moving Picture World, and can be found on page 1850, issue of Dec. 26, 1914.

THE PLOT (Vitagraph), Dec. 29.—A special feature in two parts, written by William B. Courtney. Produced by Maurice Costello and Robert Gaillord. An out of the ordinary plot, which thrills the audience and keeps them in suspense right to the finish. It is a mix-up between a band of Russian conspirators and a newly appointed ambassador to the United States. Love foils the villians and joy prevails. The acting and photography are up to the Vitagraph standard. An excellent release.

THE DERELICT (Kalem), Dec. 30.—James Horne is the author and George L. Melford the producer of this two-part picture drama. A story of a man's infatuation for a woman—his partner's wife—and the fiendish way he takes to bring about the husband's downfall, by supplying him with headache powders containing a habit forming drug, is shown in this offering. It succeeds for a time, but after a personal fight, the man gains a victory over the drug and all ends happily. It is a well produced release.

THE INTRIGUERS (Lubin), Dec. 30.—The plot of this two-reel production is full of intrigues, robberies and blackmailing being perpetrated by two society parasites, who fraudulently obtain invitations to week end parties, where they, through the different methods, make their livelihood. The story is full of complications, but it is well acted and the interior scenes are beautifully photographed. The finale is all that can be desired. A good release.

FATE AND FUGITIVE (Lubin), Dec. 31.—A two-reel picture play by Marc Edmund Jones, produced by Paul Powell, with the following cast: L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, George Routh and Robert Gray. Arthur Gregson is surprised to find he has a double, who gets him into many predicaments. He is arrested for murder and convicted, but makes his escape, fleeing to the west. The real culprit is caught and all ends happily. There are a few thrills, especially where Arthur makes his escape from prison. A fair offering.

YOUNG MRS. WINTHROP (Edison), Jan. 1.—This two-part picture has been reviewed at length by Louis Reeves Harrison, in the Moving Picture World, and can be found on page 1541, issue of Dec. 12.

THE SHANTY AT TREMBLING HILL (Essanay), Jan. 1.—A two-reel drama adapted from The Munsey Magazine, featuring Francis X. Bushman and Nellie R. Craig. A romance of love and strife in the north woods, with plenty of thrills. The finale is as it should be, but rather different from the usual run of such plots. The acting and photography are adequate. It is an entertaining number. 2

IN THE LATIN QUARTER (Vitagraph), Jan. 2.—A special two-part feature. A story of the studios that is quite unique in construction, but not altogether original. It contains much that is thrilling, in fact melodramatically so. Antonio Moreno, in the leading part, is very effective and is strongly supported by Edith Storey, S. Rankin Drew, Constance Talmadge and William Dunn. The settings and photography are up to the usual Vitagraph standard. This release will entertain any audience.

CAST UP BY THE SEA (Kalem), Jan. 4.—A two-part feature of the Alice Joyce series. It is of a melodramatic nature and contains some pretentious scenes, particularly on an island, where the survivors of a shipwreck are forced to live. A man, naturally vicious, by a certain little incident, displays an undercurrent of good in his nature, and sacrifices himself for the sake of the woman he loves. An unusual offering which is worthy of viewing.

THE STRANGE CASE OF PRINCESS KHAN (Selig), Jan. 4.—A two-reel picture drama, written by James Oliver Curwood. A peculiar sort of a plot, concerning occultism and the exposure of a charlatan. It contains some very realistic and thrilling scenes, also an interesting love story. The leading people in the cast are Jack McDonald, Stella Razeto and Guy Oliver, who are finely supported. It is more than an ordinary offering.

Independent

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS, NO. 88 (Dec. 23).—Some interesting scenes in the European trenches, showing how the surgeons rush quickly to the aid of wounded soldiers appears in this number. There are also other interesting scenes, among them Harry K. Thaw going to church with his mother; and shipments of clothing being sent to the French soldiers.

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS, NO. 89 (Dec. 28).—This number of the News shows by animated map an attack on Paris; soldiers receiving mail from home; nuns fleeing from a shelled convent; troops departing for Arizona; a skiing contest in Canada, and other interesting scenes.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 147, Dec. 30.—Views of the Prince of Wales, King George and Queen Mary, the Servian and Indian troops, U. S. military officials, destroying opium, and China and others are included in this number.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 105 (Mutual), Dec. 31.—This number of the Mutual Weekly is an exceptionally interesting one, showing, among other scenes, an English artillery contingent leaving for the seat of war; ruins along the Oise River, and motor-cycle hill climbing contest at Washington, D. C.

SHEP, THE SENTINEL (Thanhouser), Jan. 1.—Rene Farrington, Nolan Gane and Shep himself are the central figures in this acceptable offering, which, of course, stars Shep. The story is somewhat shaky in spots, but the remarkable feats performed by Shep, the beautiful Thanhouser collie, saves the day. The picture contains some very effective scenes.

WHEN FATE REBELLED (Princess), Jan. 1.—A great deal that is interesting will be found in this film, with Muriel Ostriche, Marshall Boyd, and Frank Wood handling the main characters. The story treats of how a young woman taking a trip with her lover, who is paymaster of a large manufacturing concern, when he goes to pay the workman, through the scheming of a rival, bears the reflection of the theft. She afterward rescues the satchel with the money, which incident allows for several thrilling scenes.

ETHEL GETS THE EVIDENCE (Komic), Jan. 3.—This is No. 14 of the "Bill" Series, featuring Fay Tincher, who, in this particular one of the series, gives a delightfully eccentric exhibition of how Ethel "gets the evidence" for a divorce suit. This is an excellent comedy sample.

THE BRIDAL BOUQUET (Thanhouser), Jan. 3.—This film has a pleasant story, written by Philip Lonergan, in which the principal characters are played by Mignon Anderson, Morris Foster and Lila Chester. It tells of the mission of a bridal bouquet thrown to his sweetheart, fixing a resolution for good in the mind of the young lover.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (Reliance), Series No. 51, Jan. 4.—A number featuring the famous artist, James Montgomery Flagg, who visits the Reliance studio and draws a caricature. He also poses as a hotel clerk and does a lot of informal foolishness. The number is very entertaining.

A BANAKIE MAIDEN (Reliance), Jan. 5.—An interesting story of Indian life has been used as the basis of this two-reel production. In the direction of the picture Arthur Mackley has shown an unusual knowledge of the customs of the red men, and, with one or two exceptions, the production rings true. Irene Hunt, as the grown-up edition of the daughter of the Indian chief, does good work, but scarcely looks the part. Her paleface lover, who murders her father for his gold, escapes the avenging hand through the remembrance on the part of the Indian girl of a motto given her in her childhood by her father, "Forgive Thine Enemies."

IN THE VALE OF SORROW (Beauty), Jan. 5.—The story of this film is in many respects pleasantly told. In it a mother, whose husband is ill, sells her child to a wealthy man in whose home she has been obliged to work, for a thousand dollars. Later, the father, recovering, is sent to the same house to do some work and rejoices at finding the child which he believes to be dead. The foster father gives up the child without divulging the circumstances. The story might have gained something had it been constructed with the foster father of the child as the main character.

HIS LESSON (Majestic), Jan. 5.—A finely photographed number, with George Seigman, Billie West and Olga Gray in the leading parts. This shows the regeneration of a gang leader, who remains true to his first sweetheart after his change of fortune. The photoplay is a little obvious in plot but put on in fine style. The closing scenes are exciting.

A NIGHT'S ADVENTURE (Reliance), Jan. 6.—The girl's father is hurt in work on the section. The young doctor is forced to stay over night. Yeggs attack the house and he subdues one with a hypodermic injection in the arm. This latter feature is the newest in the story. The action is good throughout and holds the interest.

LOVE AND BUSINESS (Komic), Jan. 10.—Mrs. Jones thinks her husband is flirting with the widow on the floor below. The gossips get busy and domestic troubles result. The plot has nothing new about it and the number is not very strong.

THE DUMMY HUSBAND (Eclair), Jan. 10.—This is the story of an old maid who buys a man dummy and takes it home. The village gossips begin to talk. Later a tramp poses as the dummy and the woman calls a policeman and minister and makes him marry her. This is well constructed and proves a fairly amusing idea.

THROUGH A KNOT HOLE (L-KO), Jan. 10.—In this number, which is well photographed, two sets of married people become involved in a jealous quarrel. The fun is mere horseplay and has not much real humor in it.

THE USELESS ONE (Big U), Jan. 12.—Murdock MacQuarrie doubles in this play, playing twin brothers, one of whom is consumptive. In a dramatic scene the consumptive shoots a man with whom the brother Tom is struggling. Tom is sentenced for murder in the first degree, the most improbable feature of the plot. Later the consumptive exchanges places with him in the cell and suffers for the crime for the sake of the girl with whom Tom is in love. This offering has both weakness and strength.

A MAID BY PROXY (Nestor), Jan. 12.—A good comedy number, with Jack Dillon, Billy Rhodes and Stella Adams in the cast. The flirtation at the beginning was well handled, though the highballs seemed a little out of keeping for polite comedy. The girl poses as a maid, but the admirer is game and still declares his love for her. The photography is pleasing and the production appealing.

THOU SHALT NOT FLIRT (L-KO), Jan. 13.—An eccentric number in which the flirtations of a married man create trouble. There is some amusement in the latter scenes, though it is of a rough character.

THE HEARTS OF THE BRADYS (Big U), Jan. 14.—A Western number featuring Sydney Ayres, Wilbur Higby and Val Paul. The Bradys, father and son, share their gold with the wife of a dead prospector. The treatment is a little too "stagey" to be convincing, though the story is not without interest. The photography is very good.

THE UNWILLING BRIDE (Royal), Jan. 16.—Although this offering might prove entertaining to some audiences, it is not an altogether desirable one. The story treats of one college boy posing as the bride of another, and the various complications which arise from the nature of the situation.

THOSE GERMAN BOWLERS (Sterling), Jan. 14.—A good burlesque on the popular sport of bowling. Two married men sally forth to the alleys to try their skill. The result is highly amusing and the game will please professional bowlers particularly. Good photography.

WHEN THE MUMMY CRIED FOR HELP (Nestor), Jan. 15.—Al E. Christie and his comedy company have here added another highly successful number to their list. The adventures of the sacred mummy, as impersonated by Lee Moran, will cause shouts of laughter wherever shown. Eddie Lyons and Victoria Ford are the young lovers who substitute their friend for the mummy in order to prove that "father's" elixir of life is O. K. The result is highly amusing and the reel exceptionally good throughout.

FATHER'S STRATEGY (Victor), Jan. 15.—A new version of a familiar plot, in which the father pretends to oppose the marriage of his daughter in order to encourage an elopement. Matt Moore and Irene Wallace play the leads. The photoplay is good and the comedy quite pleasing.

HUBBY'S CURE (Joker), Jan. 16.—This low comedy number concerns two married couples living in adjoining apartments. The husband of one of the women comes home with a jag on and finds a rat trap in his bed containing two rats. The fun in this is rather coarse and not very effective.

HENPECKED SMITH (Warner's).—Released under the Starlight brand and with Dallas Welford in the lead, this farce comedy is exceedingly funny. What happened after Smith had partaken of the Courage liquid is well worth seeing.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR (Warner's).—This is a slap-stick comedy with little or no plot, and consists chiefly of a series of differences between a certain man and all with whom he comes in contact, ending at last with the conclusion that brotherly love is more profitable.

HER PHONEY LOVERS (Warner's).—This is a farce comedy which is bound to depend for a laugh on the quality of its audience. The main theme of the picture is the rivalry of two lovers for the hand of a young woman whose most important requirement in a lover is his ability to sing. The one whose musical education has been neglected hires a boy to hold a graphaphone outside the window of the young lady's home while he sings in pantomime. The discovery of the deceit by his rival leads to an undignified situation for the would-be singer.

OLIVER TWIST SADLY TWISTED (Warner's).—This offering, under the Superba brand, is a rather clever burlesque on the novel by Chas. Dickens. Its success will, of course, depend largely on the knowledge of Dickens characters possessed by the audience.

THE BURGLAR AND THE MOUSE (Warner's).—In this film will be found a very acceptable bit of comedy-drama. It is being released under the Grandin brand, and was produced by the Smallwood Film Corporation, New York, and, of course, presents pretty Ethel Grandin in the lead. Ethel, on a visit to a friend, receives word that her father is returning home, and immediately takes her departure so as to be at home to greet him. That night before his return a burglar enters the house, and Ethel plays a clever joke, pretending that she is in the house for the same purpose as he. She is obliged to accompany him to his headquarters, but is rescued by her lover, who picks up a note dropped by her with the address to which she has gone. Later the appearance of a couple of mice on the scene displays the fact that, although she is brave as regards a burglar, she loses courage at sight of a mouse.

THE GHOST OF BINGVILLE INN (Warner's).—Premier is responsible for this picture. The story is of a wife who insisted on taking in boarders, and what happened when her unruly husband came home late at night. The picture does not belong exactly to the first order.

LOVE AND SKATES (Warner's).—An exceptionally good film for an average audience. It consists of a single reel of eccentric comedy which is very laughable.

BROWN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT (Warner's).—This picture made at the Gaumont studio, is a sample of farce comedy that will, no doubt, prove highly amusing to many. Mr. Brown buys his wife a birthday present in the shape of a pair of embroidered white stockings, which the colored maid elects to borrow without asking her mistress' consent. The theft is blamed by Mr. Brown on some of his wife's Suffrage friends. By devious ways Mr. Brown, in search of the stockings, and the colored maid, wind up at police headquarters, and the stockings extracted by force from the maid, are taken home triumphantly by Mr. Brown to his delighted wife.

THE FOOD INSPECTOR (Warner's).—This is a comedy of the slap-stick sort-which will, no doubt, be amusing to many. A hungry man steals the Food Inspector's badge, and proceeds to make use of it to satisfy his appetite for pies, cakes, fruit, etc. It appears under the Superba brand.

HER MUSICAL BEAUS (Warner's).—On the same reel with "The Food Inspector," this comedy drawn on the lines of a farce has been cleverly developed, and is much superior to the former.

A CAREFUL SERVANT (Warner's).—This is a farce comedy which has considerable merit, and is suitable for the general audience. One of the most amusing points of the picture is where three policemen jump a river in pursuit of their victim. The picture was made at the Gaumont studios.

THE THREE WISHES (Warner's).—On the same reel with "A Careful Servant," familiar faces appear in this film. Joseph Levering and Marian Swayne play the roles of the two old people who were continually wishing for better conditions. One night a fairy appears and tells them they may have three wishes. The wasting of the three wishes that might have meant so much, teaches a useful lesson in contentment.

IN THE MINISTER'S KEEPING (Warner's).—This picture, released under the Premier brand, may have a special mission to perform. It treats of the matter of a husband looking well to the happiness of his wife and daughters in the way of providing them with the necessary money to obtain clothing, etc., for which the feminine heart craves.

WHEN THE LILY DIED (Warner's).—On the same reel with "The Five Senses," this simple little offering has real merit. The sentiment of the story is clean and wholesome. Baby Early plays the role of Dolly, a poor little girl, whose mother is ill. Dolly buys from the florist an Easter lily, with a dime given her by a kindly passerby, taking it home to cheer the sick room. In the morning the lily is dead, but in emptying it from the flower pot a valuable diamond is discovered, which, returned to its rightful owner, brings a substantial reward for honesty.

THE FIVE SENSES (Warner's).—Little Mattie and Early, so well and favorably known in the Powers pictures, are the centre of attraction here. Grandma's jam and Grandpa's pipe prove too alluring for the little ones, and the close of the picture shows them not only in receipt of a spanking apiece, but a dose of genuine sickness consequent on the temptation to which they yielded through the offices of their five senses.

PETE, THE PEDAL POLISHER (Pathe).—This is a sample of eccentric comedy which would please the average audience. The picture is in one reel, and gives an exciting series of adventures which happen at Pete's "shoeshine" stand, where his equally eccentric sweetheart comes periodically to collect the change.

WINTER SCENES IN THE VALLEY OF CHAMOUNI, FRANCE (Pathe).—In viewing this film one takes a short but delightful trip through the snow-covered valley near Chamouni.

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS, NO. 86.—In this issue of Pathe's Daily News appears a number of intensely interesting items, including, in addition to the war map representing the change which will take place on the map of Europe should the fond dreams of a certain monarch come true, scenes of the encampment of refugees in a Turkish cemetery, prisoners of war being transported from the battle front, the King of Servia, hale and hearty as he appeared subsequent to his having personally commanded his troops in a battle against the enemy, and many other scenes of equal interest.

Independent Specials.

STAR OF THE SEA (Rex), Jan. 10.—A strong, artistic two-reel offering, with a decided pull in it. Pauline Bush, Laura Oakley, Wm. Dowlin and Lon Chaney play the leads. The opening scenes in the sculptor's studio catch the interest at once and throughout the picture the director, Joseph Degrasse, has shown a strong instinct for artistic effects. Laura Oakley is particularly good as the model. Later Mario gives up his Bohemian existence and goes into the country, where he meets the widow and her child. This gives Miss Bush one of the most effective roles she has had for some time and the happy child added immensely to the scenes. This offering is sure to have wide appeal.

MY LADY HIGH AND MIGHTY (Victor), Jan. 11.—The story of a hoydenish daughter of an English lord, who goes hunting with the men and refuses to be proper. It must be admitted that Mary Fuller loses something of her natural charm when she dons masculine attire. The opening hunting scenes are attractive and the photography is good throughout. The story concerns the girl's refusal to marry a wealthy neighbor because he is old and she loves another. She finally runs away and marries the latter. This makes a fairly strong offering.

A WOMAN'S DEBT (Gold Seal), Jan. 12.—A two-reel number written by Bess Meredyth, with Cleo Madison and Joe King in the leading roles. The girl is beloved by her wealthy young employer and a baseball star. She marries the former to help her poverty-stricken parents. In later years the baseball player turns up in the role of a designing villain. The chief situation is where she locks him in the vault to save her honor; later the husband comes and she knows that her love for him is real. This is fairly strong and well photographed throughout.

REUNITED (Eclair), Jan. 13—A pretty two-reel story of Colonial days, with Erma Earl and Fred Sumner in the leading roles. In the prologue is pictured the death of the young lieutenant on the field of battle and the reception of his message and flower by the girl. Generations later the story is taken up with the same couple appearing as lovers. He inherits his uncle's estate and investigates the haunted room, in which he learns of the tragedy of former years. The second story is brought to a happy ending. This is pleasingly pictured.

PAWNS OF FATE (Rex), Jan. 14.—A two-reel story, written by Ruth Ann Baldwin, with Frank Lloyd, Marc Robbins, Helen Leslie, Gretchen Lederer and George Larkin in the cast. Two men are shown, one a success and the other a failure. The story goes back, by means of unique construction, to early days when these men loved the same Spanish senorita. A quarrel ensues and dramatic incidents follow. Then the picture again takes up later years and a tragedy results when the two men meet. This is well photographed and strongly depicted.

A GENTLEMAN OF ART (Imp), Jan. 15.—A two-reel crook story, presented by a cast which includes Wm. Welsh, Dorothy Phillips, Edmund Mortimer and Howard Crampton. The yarn tells of the apprehension of two artists, father and son, who are smugling diamonds into America in their paint tubes and in other ways. This holds the interest very well all through, though none of the situations are very intense until the final scenes. The story is well constructed and clearly photographed. This makes a pleasing offering.

THE GOVERNOR-MAKER (Bison), Jan. 16.—A two-reel political story with a labor end to it. Wm. Clifford plays the part of a factory owner who desires to be governor. Marie Walcamp and Doris Pawn have the leading female roles. The daughter saves the factory from destruction at the hands of the idle employes. There is an auto accident and some campaign scenes. The story is a combination of familiar situations, but moves with considerable action and spirit. The photography is clear.

THE MYSTERY OF THE LOST SHIPS (Thanhouser), No. 7 of the Zudora Series.—The main feature in this number, the invention of violet ray for blowing up battleships, has been used before. In this instance Hassam Ali conspires with the inventor and Zudora is drawn into the case. There is the usual air of mystery about the production; the photograph stamped on the floor was a novel piece of business. The number is only of about average interest and seemed a little incomplete at the close.

THE FOILED ELOPEMENT (Thanhouser), No. 8 of the Zudora Series.—Introducing Mr. Chang, a Chinese hypnotist, with whom Hassan conspires. John and Zudora plan an elopement and Chang is instrumental in frustrating the same. The scenes rather overdo the mystic atmosphere and the sliding of so many panel doors gives an artificial touch. This is not quite as strongly developed as some of the opening numbers of the series.

VENGEANCE IS MINE (Majestic), Jan. 3.—A two-reel number with Billie West, Elmer Clifton and W. E. Lawrence in the cast. The country girl is united with the city chap in a mock marriage. Later she follows him to the city and becomes a fast woman. Years pass and she meets him in a restaurant. He is married and she tries to blackmail him with the old certificate, but relents on seeing his wife and child. This makes use of many familiar stock situations, but the agreeable cast does much to make the picture enjoyable. The photography is also attractive.

IN THE LAND OF THE OTTER (Domino), Jan. 14.—A very fine two-reel story of the great Northwest. It tells the story of a factor who promises the hand of his daughter to the trapper who brings in the most furs. The hero is a quarter-breed Indian. His catch is the largest but he sacrifices the girl because of his mixed blood. The husband turns out to be a bad one and some very dramatic scenes take place between him and Joe. This exerts a strong pull on the interest and contains some exquisite scenic effects.

THE CROSS OF FIRE (Kaybee), Jan. 15.—A powerful two-reel religious story, in which Walter Edwards plays the leading role. Jacques prays God to spare his sick wife, but she dies in spite of all doctor or church can do. He becomes a blasphemer, caring for nothing but his little daughter. How the girl steals away to the festival of the virgin and the house is struck by lightning in her absence is vividly pictured. The storm scenes are realistic. Jacques rushes frantically to the burning house and finds the cross of fire on the bed; later he goes to the church and finds the child. A strong production.

THE FIRES OF AFFLICTION (Pathe), Jan.—This is an especially attractive three-reel offering, and evidently a product of the European Pathe studio. The story is not, however, out of the ordinary, and treats of the unhappy marriage of a young woman to a wealthy man with a grown-up son, who proceeds to fall in love with his pretty stepmother. After a series of events dealing with the young wife's decision to leave home as a nurse, her unfortunate love affair with another, and the death of her husband from apoplexy, the son in an attempt to prove her guilty of the death of his father, shoots the butler who witnessed against him, and is arrested and imprisoned. The close of the picture is a trifle padded, but pleasantly so.

CREIGHTON HALE BACK WITH PATHE.

Creighton Hale, the talented young actor who starred in the Pathe-Wharton picture "The Warning," has been secured for the cast of the "Exploits of Elaine."

Mr. Hale is only twenty-five years old, and claims Ireland as his birth place, his father being an actor well known in Great Britain. He went on the stage when only five years old, taking the part of "Little Willie" in "East Lynne," and has been on the stage ever since. After playing Shakesperian repertoire in London and the provinces with Oscar Ashe and Lilly Brayton, he came to this country to support Gertrude Elliott in "The Dawn of Tomorrow," and in that play toured nearly every state in the union. He also appeared in the leading theatres of London in the same play. Among other important engagements he has had in this country were those with "Indian Summer," "The Witching Hour," "Rebellion" and the Ben Greet players.

Young Mr. Hale is only young in years so far as his talents go. His long stage experience, combined with native ability, enables him to give an unusual charm to his work. In addition to "The Warning" he has appeared in the following Pathe features: "The Stain" and "The Taint."

HENDERSON PRODUCES "UNCLE JOHN."

Director Lucius Henderson, of the Eastern Universal studios has completed a two-reel love drama entitled "Uncle John," to be released early in February. William Garwood and Violet Mesereau play the leads.

CALVERT FITS THE PART.

E. H. Calvert is especially adapted by training for the leading role in "The Crimson Wing," the Essanay six-reel photoplay from the novel of H. C. Chatfield-Taylor. He takes the part of the Count Ludwig von Leun Walram, a military officer, who is actively engaged on the field. Mr. Calvert is a graduate of West Point and was a captain in the U. S. Army for years, which accounts for the exactness with which he interprets the part.

CRIMMINS ENGAGED FOR "MATERNITY."

William Crimmins, who made such an impression on all who saw the Kinetophoto's "The Coming Power," because of his realistic presentation of the character of "The Vulture," has been engaged to do two character parts in Richard Bennett's production of Eugene Brieux's "Maternity," which is soon to open at the Princess Theater.
